The one caveat that I see—and I see it in the amendments that the Attorney General has been kind enough to provide me with and that I believe we will be discussing in committee of the whole—is some concern about the idea of the arbitrator becoming a mediator, a conciliator or some similar type of individual within the arbitration procedure. What the act essentially says is that someone who engages in mediation or conciliation cannot also engage in the process as the arbitrator.

I can understand the Attorney General's logic for wanting that, but at the same time I think that to be too hard and too fast in this particular area is to really take away from the arbitration procedure the flexibility that it might need to operate in a successful manner. I do not know—and I merely point this out to the Attorney General, who is here and is listening—where the fine line is that permits the flexibility but does not destroy the process because someone has changed hats in midstream. I just do not know where that fine line is. I think it will be incumbent upon the Attorney General, whatever route he takes, to watch the procedure and to see how it works, because I am sure that once this act is passed and becomes implemented and people are using it, there are going to have to be some adjustments, some fine-tuning.

I hope the Attorney General does not merely pass this act and ignore it afterwards, because I think this area dealing with the changing of hats in midstream, if it might facilitate a settlement, does not really destroy the process if you have to return to the arbitration. I think that if somebody starts on a process of arbitration and sees there is room to mediate and attempts to do that within the process and then finds that a settlement is not possible, it may be impossible for the person to go back to being an arbitrator, to carry on with the arbitration. If that is the case, it may prove to be an impediment for the arbitrator, who may see a golden opportunity to settle a dispute by becoming a mediator in midprocess.

I do not know the answer and, with respect, I do not think the Attorney General knows the answer to that particular problem, but I do think it is incumbent upon the Attorney General to be vigilant once this act is passed, because it may well need fine-tuning in this particular area. I hope he will continue to be vigilant.

As I have indicated, my party will be supporting this piece of legislation. I think it is a good piece of legislation. It will help litigants, it will help the court process, and I think it certainly deserves our attention. I will be supporting this piece of legislation.

Mr Sterling: I just wanted to use this opportunity to ask the Attorney General a couple of questions, and maybe he can respond in the question-and-comment portion of the proceedings. First, I believe this law was developed in accordance with a uniform code which was erged by various justice officials across the country. If that is the case, I would like to know if there is any divergence in this legislation from that uniform code. Second, when was that uniform code struck? Third, perhaps we could learn some information about whether other provinces have adopted this kind of legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. The questions should be asked to the member for Willowdale and not to the Attorney General. The statement was made by the member for Willowdale.

Mr Sterling: Yes, I realize that.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. Are there any further questions or comments?

Mr Jackson: I just briefly want to put a few comments on the record about these long-awaited changes to the Arbitrations Act. I know that certainly the Arbitrators' Institute of Canada (Ontario) Inc and its president, Hal Wilkinson, have been working with three different governments over an almost 10-year period to ensure that this act becomes a reality. Although I will be supporting these amendments and this act, I do feel it is appropriate that I put some concerns on the record, as have the member for Willowdale and the member for Ottawa West.

I had the privilege in the previous Parliament, with the member for Ottawa West, to sit on the committee that dealt with the whole philosophy of the change in alternative dispute resolution models and amendments to the Arbitrations Act. Frankly, I came away with a feeling that if Ontario really wished to improve its relations in disputes that can be avoided in a court setting, that certainly this bill has not achieved much of those lofty goals that all three political parties aspired to almost a year and a half ago.

In particular, I am concerned that there are implications of these amendments which will touch upon matters involving domestic disputes where we have legislation—rather offensive legislation—dealing with joint custody, mandatory mediation and arbitration, yet we see now in this bill certain matters that are in dispute in a family situation, in a marital breakup, where matters of real estate, property and other assets can be arbitrated. The concern obviously is that in contemporary society women are unfortunately very much put in a bad situation, an unequal situation, in these discussions. When the state, this government, formalizes the process, there are going to be some obviously negative repercussions.

In particular, it is well known that the practice of trading off the custody of the children for a better position in assets is something which occurs rather routinely. I see no evidence that this situation is being addressed or that the potential for the abuse that is occurring in our current arbitration processes, whether before the courts or in these informal processes, will be improved.

I am concerned that we have lacked the will, or this government at least has lacked the will, to proceed to seek out other forms of alternative dispute resolution to improve the situation for our citizens in other areas. We know that the minister and I have locked horns and disagree on the need for a victims' bill of rights, but clearly there are victims' matters in this province that should be subject to arbitration rather than forcing victims to go to civil court, where they do not succeed very well under the current set of laws that they face when they enter a courtroom.

I would simply suggest as well that with the current violence in our schools, we are not looking at dispute resolution models in that context, teaching students more responsible behaviour in our schools and in our community settings. Matters of community-based arbitration and mediation are being done routinely in jurisdictions in the United States and in some progressive jurisdictions in Canada, but we are seeing no support, no encouragement from this government to expand the concept and the access to alternative dispute resolution models. In that sense, this bill is very limiting in its scope, although its reforms are cast from a period of five to seven years ago when most of these concerns were first identified.

My colleague the member for Willowdale raised the issue of the narrowing and the lack of flexibility in moving from mediation to arbitration. I want only to remind the minister that this is routinely done and is permissible in certain labour situations in this province, both under the labour act and the teachers' bargaining act, the only two pieces of labour legislation for bargaining.

I personally have participated in this process at both the Education Relations Commission and the Ontario Labour Relations Board, and I have a lot of confidence in the pool of talent in this province to be able to move from mediation and arbitration with the consent of all parties. I certainly would not wish to support a bill that had those inhibiting factors in it. Rather we should be looking at the experts in this province and trusting them to look at a more flexible model.

Having said all that, I will be supporting the bill. I wish to thank, as I have on the record, Mr Harold Wilkinson for his many years of work in talking to three different governments on reforms, and Mr Ernie Tannis from Ottawa, who enlightened our committee with respect to alternative dispute resolution models and a variety of opportunities for Ontario citizens. I had only hoped this legislation would have gone farther in a more progressive way.

Mr Chiarelli: I do want to endorse the previous comments and just bring to the Attorney General's attention, and perhaps for the benefit of the member, the actual recommendation that was in the ADR report of the standing committee on administration of justice. It indicated in recommendation 7:

"The committee also recommends that research be done...to investigate concerns expressed about the process, particularly those involving power imbalance, domestic violence, mediator bias and its ability to ensure that the best interests of the child are met. The committee further recommends that funding be provided to establish new and support existing court-affiliated mediation services to further research on mediation and family law."

To the extent that the arbitration legislation being passed today deals in any way with family law issues, I really fully endorse the comments that were made, and also bring to the Attorney General the recommendations of the justice committee with respect to family violence and mediation issues.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any further questions or comments? The member for Burlington South, you have two minutes to reply to the statements made by the member for Ottawa West.

Mr Jackson: Far be it from me to turn down an opportunity to thank the member for his kind compliment, but I must underscore the fact that it was the legislation of the previous government that put children into a position of allowing them to be in a forced mediation and a forced arbitration situation. The concerns he has alluded to with respect to the vulnerability of children in domestic violence cases are ones that we raised, and we are not completely satisfied the current laws in Ontario adequately protect them.

I wish to reiterate that our school systems could benefit immensely from alternative dispute resolution models. This is where our future arbitrators will come from in this province. This is where we will be teaching the life skills to our students so that when they have marital problems and family disputes and community-based problems, they will have the skills to deal with those in a very lockstep way, how to deal with and mediate through their own problems. We do not teach this, and on this the labour community agrees and the business community agrees: We build better students, better citizens if we teach alternative dispute resolution models to our young people. That is really what my appeal is today. I had hoped that kind of vision was shared by the government and that we can see some progress in this area very soon.

Hon Mr Hampton: I have listened to the comments of the members of the opposition with some interest. I want to respond to some of the specific issues raised.

The member for Carleton wanted to know if the bill is modelled on the uniform code, and I can tell him that, yes, it is, and that it dates from 1990. I can also indicate that the bill we have presented does not differ in any substantive way from the uniform code.

The member for Burlington South made a number of comments and while I cannot respond to all of them at this time, I simply want to make him aware of the fact that the government does have an alternative dispute resolution fund, which is available for pilot projects and is available to fund and assist with various alternative dispute resolution mechanisms, including peer mediation in the schools. I want him to be aware of that, because that is something that happens in this province and that is assisted.

Some comments were directed to the issue of mediation and arbitration. I simply want to say that the bill as it stands now does not prohibit the movement from arbitration to mediation; it simply provides a caution for the arbitrator that the arbitrator does not put himself or herself in a position whereby his or her decision can be overturned on judicial review.

I also want to point out again to members opposite that the bill is flexible enough that it essentially allows parties to an arbitration to write their own rules. In other words, it sets out a code, but it is flexible enough that if the parties to the arbitration want to set their own rules, it provides a framework within which they can do that. It is very flexible legislation and it is not hard and fast in any sense of the word.

To the member for Ottawa West, I appreciate his comments and I can indicate to him that I hope he will be very supportive when we have the opportunity, hopefully soon to bring forward some other legislation dealing with alternative dispute resolution mechanisms and dealing with some of the initiatives he mentioned he would like to see.

LAW SOCIETY AMENDMENT ACT (TEMPORARY MEMBERS), 1991

MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LA SOCIÉTÉ DU BARREAU (MEMBRES PROVISOIRES)

Hon Mr Hampton: There is another matter I would like to raise at this time and it has to do with a bill we dealt with previously, Bill 75, the Law Society Amendment Act (Temporary Measures). We had indicated at the time that it should go to committee of the whole. I have spoken with both opposition critics and my understanding is that they are in agreement if it goes to third reading, so I would ask for unanimous consent that Bill 75 be scheduled for third reading rather than for committee of the whole.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Agreed to.

Bill ordered for third reading.

ONTARIO MEDICAL ASSOCIATION DUES ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR LES COTISATIONS DE L'ONTARIO MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Ms Lankin moved second reading of Bill 135, An Act to provide for the Payment of Physicians' Dues and Other Amounts to the Ontario Medical Association.

M^{me} Lankin propose la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 135, Loi prévoyant le paiement des cotisations des médecins et d'autres montants à l'Ontario Medical Association.

Hon Ms Lankin: I am pleased to introduce for second reading the Ontario Medical Association Dues Act, 1991. Bill 135 was given first reading on June 26, 1991, and the proposed legislation flows directly from the agreement signed with the Ontario Medical Association earlier this year. Members will recall that the agreement requires the OMA to take on a new series of responsibilities in helping to manage Ontario's medical care system and to participate in keeping physicians' services costs under control.

The government of Ontario and the OMA have formed a joint management committee to help identify areas of our physicians' services system that can be improved and we will then work to implement those improvements. I have confidence that the results of the committee's work will help maintain the principles of medicare, including universality and accessibility, and that it will ensure effective management of physicians' service expenditures across the province.

In recognizing the OMA's status as a partner in the management of the physicians' services system, the government agreed to develop a method for collecting membership dues or their equivalent from physicians practising medicine or involved in medical research in Ontario. If adopted by this House, Bill 135 would create a straightforward mechanism for ensuring that dues or their equivalents are paid.

This legislation represents another important part of our collaborative relationship with the physicians of Ontario. The government is committed to a comprehensive reform and effective fiscal management of our physicians' services system. I hope members of the House will see fit to move immediately to third reading of Bill 135.

Mrs Sullivan: Bill 135 is really part of the outcome of the six-year agreement that was signed by the New Democratic government with the doctors last May. In that agreement, the government made some quite extraordinary economic arrangements with one sector of health care delivery, the doctors. Right now, about $5 billion of the provincial health budget is spent to pay for physicians' services. As a result of the agreement, there will be an additional $250 million in total fees, $140 million in retroactive payments and $84 million in additional funds to cover malpractice insurance retroactively. The total cost of that agreement in this fiscal year is about $474 million or $475 million.

More than that, the agreement did two other things: It provided for binding arbitration and it gave the doctors union status through the Ontario Medical Association.

I think that in giving union powers to the OMA, what we see is a very unique relationship in determining the future of the health care system. In fact we are seeing a new hierarchy where the doctors have a place that is different and perhaps superior. In terms of agreements that have been made and announced to date, it is certainly superior to that of hospitals, to that of nurses, and indeed it may turn out to be a veto right by doctors on future necessary health care planning decisions.

As a result of that agreement we also see binding arbitration entering into the health care field. I would like to speak a little bit to that later on. No other group in health care enjoys that, and indeed what we may find is that there can be a stripping of funding as a result of that agreement that is quite serious in terms of long-term options and actions.

The basis of this Bill 135 really goes back to 1945, and I think many members will be familiar with the dispute at Ford Motor Co in Windsor in a strike called by the United Auto Workers. The strike ended the following December when what was then the Dominion of Canada and the province of Ontario joined together and guaranteed arbitration by a Supreme Court judge.

Mr Justice Rand was named arbitrator and his award was rendered in 1946. That decision has had a significant impact on labour-management relations since that day and is considered one of the bases of modern labour legislation. His award denied the union shop to Ford workers at the time but provided for a new form of union security. In many ways that is what we are talking about in Bill 135, union security.

The checkoff of union dues from the wages of all members under the agreement, whether they were union members or not, was a significant part of Mr Justice Rand's decision. In his decision, he spoke to the increase in power that came to the union as a result of his decision. He indicated that, first of all, there would be a tendency to increase membership for the union and also a promotion of wider control within the union relating to issues that would be discussed.

I would like to read a couple of things that Mr Justice Rand had to say in his award, because I think they are important. He said:

"It is, in my opinion, essential to the larger concern of the industry that there be mass treatment in the relation of employees to that organization that is necessary to the primary protection of their interests. I consider it entirely equitable then that all employees should be required to shoulder their portion of the burden of expense for administering the law of their employment, the union contract; that they must take the burden along with the benefit."

He also noted:

"It may be argued that it is unjust to compel non-members of a union to contribute to funds over the expenditure of which they have no direct voice; and even that it is dangerous to place such money power in the control of an unregulated union. But the dues are only those which members are satisfied to pay for substantially the same benefits, and as any employee can join the union and still retain his independence in employment, I see no serious objection in this circumstance."

When Mr Justice Rand was rendering that decision, he was speaking very much about a labour issue rather than a health care issue. I think there are some differences, because he also noted in his decision—and I would like to read this quote from his decision because I think it is significant. He was talking specifically about the employees at Ford at the time in 1945, members will recall. He said about them:

"The employees are co-ordinated with mechanical functions which in large measure require only semiskilled operators. No long apprenticeship is necessary to acquire those skills; some operations can be taken on at once, and there is a general rise in complexity. But it is essentially the utilization of concentrated manpower in a framework of machines in which the initiative and artistry of the individual is either non-existent or becomes stereotyped."

As we think about that, we should think about the position of doctors in our society today and as their profession has evolved. They are professionally trained. They are a self-regulating profession. They are delivering a professional health care service. They are not semiskilled labourers as were the labourers who contributed to the significant decision that Mr Justice Rand made. They are highly skilled, highly trained professionals, and the expectation is that their primary work will be as advocates for their patients, delivering the professional skills in which they have been trained.

I am the first to say that Mr Justice Rand's decision was a singularly important one in all of our labour negotiations. I am saying that he was not addressing the specific needs and requirements of professionals in the health care field in a professional self-regulating body.

One of the things that concerns me, therefore, because of the expectation that physicians will be primarily advocates for their patients, is that the bill brings with it the sense that the doctor's advocacy has shifted from the patient to self-interest. That is of grave concern and it is something that is being brought to my attention by doctors as well as by patients.

The Ontario Medical Association then of course becomes the advocate for the self-interest of physicians. I think that worry is something that is not to be taken lightly; it is something that people are very concerned about. The minister may laugh, but frankly it has come to my attention on more than one occasion.

Hon Ms Lankin: Excuse me. Qualify which minister.

Mrs Sullivan: The other minister. The one who is giggling. The Minister of Natural Resources was giggling, not the Minister of Health. The Minister of Health understands the concerns I am raising.

The purpose of Bill 135 is of course to bring the Rand formula into the payment of dues and fees for all physicians who practise medicine in Ontario and who do health research. Those who are members and those who are not members of the OMA must now comply with the legislation, and if they do not, there is provision that their fees can be treated as a debt which is collected through the courts. With Bill 135 the Ontario Medical Association becomes the doctors' union. The OMA has gained the right to be a trade union, and all doctors, even those who might aspire or who have aspired in the past to be Deputy Minister of Health, must now pay union dues.

I was quite interested to learn recently that this bill will affect not only doctors in doctors' offices who have in the past been represented by the OMA, but those doctors who are compensated on a different basis: those doctors in health service organizations, in comprehensive health organizations, in academic settings where they may be paid by contract, doctors who are on salary, doctors at the Workers' Compensation Board and doctors who may be employed by an insurance company in a private sector environment. They all have a new union and that union is the OMA.

One of the things that I found interesting is that discussions relating to the implementation and bringing them into this union arrangement are only beginning now. Meetings are only now under way, for example, with the OMA and doctors who are employed at the Workers' Compensation Board. There may be substantive and substantial issues that have to be ironed out in those circumstances.

As you know, Mr Speaker, the introduction of the agreement met with some considerable controversy at the time, although it was certainly welcomed in some quarters, particularly by the OMA and by the Minister of Health at the time. One of the things I would like to raise relates to some of the press attention that was provided at the time of the agreement.

The Globe and Mail, on May 23, suggested that the OMA, which was supposed to be on the side of the patients, "voted to accept an agreement that makes the doctors comrades in arms in the great socialist enterprise of managing and controlling, right down to the simplest pinprick, every aspect of the medical needs of nine million people."

The Globe and Mail also said, "The OMA has stripped individual doctors of control over their earnings, their right to secret ballots, their rights of free association and ultimately their ability to determine how they practise medicine."

Ten days earlier the Globe and Mail had said, "While the government says that fiscal management is at the heart of the deal with the doctors, taxpayers remain to be convinced."

Additionally, there were comments from some doctors reported in the Globe and Mail, where they said, "Instead of continuing the fight against a system that nationalizes the means of production of health care, the OMA joined the power grab. The OMA executive has assumed powers that no trade union executive should enjoy and effectively turned the association into a trade union—the Ontario medical workers' union—in which members do not have union membership rights."

I understand about 2,000 to 2,500—the Minister of Health may be able to provide further information on that—doctors who are not fee-for-service doctors are affected by this legislation directly. But all doctors in the province are in fact affected by the new powers that have been given to the OMA under the agreement. All health care deliverers have been affected by that agreement through which the OMA supersedes other health professions in the hierarchy, because the agreement changes the way the system works now, and the way the system will work in the future.

A substantive part of that agreement is binding arbitration affecting a $5-billion budget through which the Treasurer has no control—if indeed the union camp comes to terms with the government—and therefore the taxpayer has no control. That means someone from outside the government, from outside the system, can make a decision that will have a significant effect on the development of health services, the prioritization of health services and the cost of health services. But more important than that the arbitrator, if the government and the union cannot come to terms, does not have to take into account other issues outside the health care field or how the government will prioritize those issues.

Money can be sapped from environmental issues, from education, child care and other services that are high on the priority list of the government of the day. That is a singularly difficult and controversial part of the legislation, and one that I think was irresponsible, frankly, when it was negotiated.

We know that today in Ontario we spend more money per capita on physician compensation than any other province and we have more doctors per population than any other province. We are increasing our physician population by about 5% a year. Something like 1,000 to 1,200 new doctors were added last year to the system, and just the inclusion of that number of doctors adds a significant amount to our health care budget, I think about $450 million if you add 1,000 new doctors per year.

This bill is an integral part of the agreement made with the OMA last May about which there is some concern. In totality the agreement is something that can shift the burden not only of health priorities but of entire governmental priorities and social spending, not only in the short term but in the long period of time.

One of the issues that has also been raised in some fields suggests that in contrast to ordinary labour-management relations—in fact this bill is a labour bill under the guise of a health bill—the government cannot control the total cost of physician services because it will not control the number of doctors or the number of services doctors provide.

“If the government was really acting the part of the employer,” the report to the board of health on the payment of Ontario physicians said in February 1991, “it would raise the payment for services it wanted, and reduce payments for services it felt were provided too frequently. With binding arbitration and the Rand formula, the OMA has gained the rights of a trade union without the government gaining the rights of the employer to set hours and conditions of work.”

That report summarizes my view of the import of the place of this piece of legislation in the context of the entire agreement.

Mr J. Wilson: I am pleased to rise and speak for just a few minutes on Bill 135, An Act to provide for the Payment of Physicians' Dues and Other Amounts to the Ontario Medical Association.

The legislation makes the payment of amounts to the Ontario Medical Association's dues and assessments compulsory for all practising physicians, whether or not they are members of the association. The legislation sets out to implement the Rand formula. I do not have any particular problem with that and I want to say from the beginning that I will support this piece of legislation although I have some concerns that perhaps the minister could respond to. I am sure she will respond; she is a very capable minister. I will tell the government that a number of my colleagues will be speaking later this afternoon and perhaps tomorrow and they have some very serious reservations about this legislation. I think what will be seen in our caucus is some voting for and some opposed.

I will raise some concerns here. The bill was initiated as a result of the agreement between the Ontario Medical Association and the Ontario government signed in May of this year. It still makes it voluntary for physicians to be members of the OMA and that is good. Interns and residents are excluded from the fee checkoff, as it were, and the OMA may waive payment for specific physicians if it decides collecting the dues would bring financial hardship to a physician. It is hard to imagine a case where a physician might be in financial hardship, but I suppose it does happen and that is why it is in the agreement.

The bill also allows the general manager of OHIP to collect OMA dues from the billings of fee-for-service physicians prior to January 1 each year and will pay the deducted amount to the OMA. Where applicable, other governances that compensate physicians will collect dues for the OMA and the OMA will have the right to use the courts to collect unpaid dues.

I have a question for the minister in that area in the sense that it has been raised by some of my colleagues and members of the public who I had an opportunity to discuss this bill with. It is really setting a precedent in collecting, being the collector of dues for the OMA, and they are collecting at source. Is the government going to be compensated in some way by the OMA for the administrative costs incurred as a result of collecting those dues?

I think that is important for taxpayers because generally my experience with physicians and medical doctors is that they make a good wage and can probably afford to offset that administrative cost for the government. So I ask that question. I do not know what the answer is. Perhaps the minister could let me know.

Going back to the agreement signed in May of this year between the OMA and the government of Ontario, I do not have any particular problem, as I said, with the Rand formula. It recognizes the principle in society that a professional association that represents and negotiates benefits for a particular group should be supported financially by all individuals in that group. As I say, some of my colleagues will speak on that later. They have some real problems with that.

I note that the current full membership dues of the OMA are about $1,050 a year. I would ask the government not only about the administrative costs associated with collecting dues on behalf of the OMA, but I would really like the reason behind the government agreeing, as part of the wage settlement and setting up the joint management committee, as part of the agreement earlier this year, to be the collecting agency for the OMA. That needs to be clearly stated on the record because I believe it is setting a precedent.

The agreement between the government and the OMA has been sold to the public partly on the basis that it contains a number of cost containment measures, and I am kind of sceptical about some of the cost containment measures in there.

Just to go over what the agreement is, the government and the OMA will share financial responsibility if the volume of OHIP billings goes over a certain amount.

Some of the financial aspects for the next three fiscal years: “The government will pay for all increases in overall system utilization resulting from demographic changes. Example: for increases in population, in the number of older people plus a 1.5% cushion. In the current fiscal year it is expected the government will be solely responsible for utilization increases in the OHIP globe up to approximately 3.5%”—I will put this into English in a minute,

Mr Speaker—"and the government and the OMA will share financial responsibility if the volume of OHIP billing goes over 3.5%."

The ministry has estimated that a 3.95% increase will cost about $250 million. Doctors were given a 2% retroactive payment of their gross OHIP billings, gross fee for services, from the time they last got a raise, which was 1988 or 1989, I believe, and it was a lump sum. That is going to cost the taxpayers $140 million.

I do not have much problem with that because doctors had gone quite a while without a fee increase. I wish the government had the same sympathy for MPPs, because we are now going to go quite a while without a fee increase. None the less, some would argue that doctors are somewhat more important in society. I am not one who would necessarily argue that, but the Minister of Health may agree with me that we would not necessarily argue that.

It seems to me that when people go to their doctors, they are generally happy about the level of service and the treatment they receive from their doctors. They are usually very grateful to their medical doctors. But if we talk to the public about physicians' wages, I think the general consensus in my riding of Simcoe West would be that doctors are pretty well paid for what they do.

I happen to believe that society should award excellence; society should pay doctors what they are worth. I guess the debate that members will introduce this afternoon is whether doctors are really worth all this money. As I say, I do not have any real problem with that part of the agreement.

I do have a problem with—and I will ask the minister to explain—why the taxpayers are paying $84 million this fiscal year and the past two years. The government has agreed to pay the malpractice insurance for doctors and it is going to cost the taxpayers over that time about $84 million. I ask the ministry and the minister why there is an agreement to pay the malpractice insurance when I think doctors probably could afford to pay their own malpractice insurance. During a depression, $84 million is a lot of money, especially when you are giving that type of bonus, as it were, to a group in society that is currently well paid, much better paid than most people I know. In fact the richest people I know are doctors and dentists. Even some of the kings of industry do not make what doctors and dentists do.

I also have concerns about binding arbitration, which the previous speaker, the member for Halton Centre, also touched upon. I think binding arbitration in the long run will be extremely expensive for the Ontario taxpayers. Negotiations on an increase in the 1992 OHIP schedule of benefits will be subject to binding arbitration, I understand. In the latter three years of the agreement signed by the government, negotiations on the utilization formula as well as on fee increases in the OHIP schedule of benefits and billing thresholds will be subject to binding arbitration.

My limited experience with binding arbitration in the past is that it tends to be very expensive for taxpayers and the government, but I gather the ministry is budgeting for this. They have signed the agreement and must know where the money is going to come from.

The agreement signed by the government and the OMA sets up a joint management committee. It has been expressed to me by the Ontario Hospital Association, by nurses and by other health care practitioners, providers and administrators that they very much wish they were part of the joint management committee. I would ask the minister to explain why we now have a joint management committee which has been established under the agreement with only representatives of the Ontario Medical Association and the government.

The joint management committee apparently has the mandate to enhance the quality and effectiveness of medical care, including the pursuit of more value for existing spending. I am really of two minds on the joint management committee. I think it is a good idea if we can finally get the doctors to sit down with the government and come up with some cost savings in the system. No matter how much wishful thinking one may have when in government about how it is going to cut back some parts of the system and reallocate resources and try to make the system more efficient, I know that anything it does is not effective unless the doctors are on side. I gather the joint management committee is to work these things through together. That is a good thing.

I ask the minister, though, has she given thought to the concerns expressed by the Ontario Hospital Association? They very much feared, or did when I last spoke to them a couple of weeks ago, anyway, that the joint management committee will be the government's major committee and major set of advisers—and it just has OMA members—instead of giving advice to the government on the direction that health care will go. The Ontario Hospital Association, of course, would very much like to be a member of the joint management committee, or it wants it clarified that the joint management committee will not be the be-all and end-all of government decision-making for the future. Maybe the minister could make a few more comments about that.

Finally, I want to say one thing about the $400,000 gross fee-for-service threshold that has been established in the agreement. I am of two minds on that one too. We have had a number of specialists call my office—as Health critic for the Ontario PCs, I get a lot of calls from practitioners weekly—and quite a few specialists tell me in all seriousness that the $400,000 threshold on gross billings is too low. In a couple of cases I can think of off the top of my head, they reach that threshold at six months and they are closing their offices for the next six months of the year, or threatening to do that anyway. One actually has done it. They are going away or, in one particular case, going to Florida for six months. That particular specialist, who is badly needed in the area he is serving, reaches the threshold fairly early, because other people are on his billing number or a number of reasons he has given, and he finds it really is not worth his while to continue to practise after he has reached the $400,000 threshold.

I hope the public understand that this is not a $400,000 salary for the doctor. This is his gross billings to OHIP. I do not know what his take would be after expenses, but I imagine most specialists make a good buck. Society normally tells us they should. People complain, on the one hand, about doctors' salaries but, on the other hand, most of them are pretty happy after they have been dealt with by a doctor. We certainly know, and the minister would agree, that people want to see a doctor when they want to see a doctor. They do not like to wait six months to see a specialist in particular. We are a little worried about the brain drain to the south and specialists threatening to leave or at least close down their offices.

I have some general practitioners in my family who tell me—and they are going to shoot me when I say this—that $400,000 is a new threshold they never dreamed of aiming for before, but now it is a new one to aim for. Maybe the minister could comment on that. I have heard it directly from a couple of people I know very well, saying, "Gee, I never thought of billing that much but if I work hard enough, maybe I can get there."

So I am a little dubious about what the saving will be out of this agreement for the taxpayers of Ontario, given that the government has given a pretty good increase to doctors in a retroactive lump sum, that now taxpayers are paying the malpractice insurance retroactively and over the next little while that will be $84 million, that the joint management committee does not include everyone in the health care system or is not more representative of those people in the health care system. I am dubious but I am willing to give the benefit of the doubt to the government because I like to see the fact that there is an agreement. But they will find that other caucus colleagues certainly do not agree with a number of things I have just spoken about.

I also would take a final parting shot at the OMA. I would suggest to them that they do a little better job of listening to the specialists who are part of their association. I understand that 86% or 87% of the doctors who voted were in favour of the agreement with the government. But there is a very important 13% or 14% who did not agree. It is my understanding that those were mainly specialists, people who are very much needed in the health care system.

In some areas we tend to get shortages from time to time of certain specialists. I would suggest the Ontario Medical Association do a better job of listening to that sort of minority group and its membership, because the comment has often been made that the OMA really just represents general practitioners and is made up of general practitioners, and that this agreement is a sweetheart deal for general practitioners but not necessarily for specialists and other important medical doctors.

With those words I reiterate that I will be supporting the bill, but I think there will be some lively debate later this afternoon and tomorrow with members of caucus who will not be supporting the bill.

Hon Ms Lankin: I have just realized that in fact there is a longer list of speakers today and the member for Renfrew North is intending to speak and I am sure he will be most eloquent, but we are unlikely to finish up today. I will not be here tomorrow to do a response so I am going to take this opportunity to do a short response as speakers address some of the points.

I want to clarify a couple of things that have been raised by both the member for Halton Centre and the member for Simcoe West when they speak with respect to the overall cost of the package. It is a bit outside of the legislation in front of us today, but it is part of the overall agreement.

I correct the member for Halton Centre, as she indicated that the budget with respect to physicians' services was $5 billion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): Order, please. I would have to advise the minister that this is in response to the member for Simcoe West only.

Hon Ms Lankin: I would indicate that references have been made to the amounts paid out in the agreement, for example, the retroactive amount, the lump sum amount. I think it is important to keep in mind that in fact that 2% and 2% was paid out on a lump sum basis. What that means is that it was not folded into the base increase to the schedule of benefits. In fact, that is a forgone expenditure, in that sense, for us on an ongoing basis. I think it was reasonable and achieved some savings for us above what an agreement that had a retroactive increase to the schedule of benefits would have saved. You can argue whether that is substantial or not. It is something we felt was a worthwhile part of the agreement.

It has been referred to that no other group in the health care system has binding arbitration and that there are potential problems with binding arbitration. I would point out that in fact in hospitals, nurses, nursing assistants and medical laboratory technologists all have binding arbitration. That is a feature of the system.

I guess, bottom line, what has been said with respect to the issue of Rand is that this is creating a union out of the OMA. In fact we are not dealing with a situation of a union; we are not dealing with employees. It is a very different situation, but the principle is that people are receiving service and that they should pay for the service that is provided.

Mr Frankford: As a beneficiary of the OMA, and not always a member and not currently a member, I certainly recognize the validity of making membership compulsory. There are, I believe, 10% of physicians who are not members, and I think it is only fair that this bill will make them contribute for a benefit they are getting.

I would just like to comment briefly on the member for Simcoe West's statement about what he calls malpractice insurance. I think it is probably fair to call it liability insurance because, as the member knows, the premiums go up considerably in riskier specialties like obstetrics and neurosurgery, and I think it is most unfair to say these people are guilty of malpractice. I think it may be liability because these are more risky ventures that they are into.

The member asks why physicians should get this as a benefit, and I think he might acknowledge that with the capping it is perhaps bringing in some equity, that those amounts are paid separate from the capped income. I assume that in his area, where I am sure there are difficulties getting highly specialized physicians, it probably does help to bring in some of those specialists and perhaps will counteract the brain drain he referred to. I think, in addition, it brings in an element of risk management and avoiding defensive mechanism, that there is a contribution both by the government and by the profession.

Mr J. Wilson: I will just take one minute and thank the minister for her comments. I know she wanted to have more time to answer some of my questions, and perhaps I will try to stay for most of the debate this afternoon, what is left of the day, and hear other comments the minister may have from time to time.

I appreciate the comments of the previous speaker. I know he is a physician and well respected in his community. I will note, though, that I would like a good explanation why we are paying so much money, why the taxpayers are being asked to pay so much money for physicians' malpractice insurance.

I mention it because the previous speaker was trying to respond to it. It seems to me that is a dangerous precedent too. I mean, not only is this bill going to be collecting OMA dues for the OMA; the agreement the government signed with the OMA costs a lot of money to taxpayers, and the particular point there is the malpractice insurance.

I would think that as a practitioner I would be responsible for my own overhead and for my own insurance, and it is one aspect of the agreement I do not like, because I think it was sort of a giveaway to the medical profession to make sure it plays ball in future on the joint management committee.

Certainly that is the suspicion that is out there and that has been expressed to me by a number of sceptical people. Some people are more sceptical than I. In the final analysis, I will be voting for the bill, as I said, but some of my caucus colleagues will be raising some very serious concerns.

Mr Henderson: I want to begin by recalling a line in Robert Frost's poetry to the effect that there is something very fundamental in human nature that does not like fences. The idea is that whatever divides people, stands between people and demarcates territory somehow is offensive to something deep in human nature.

The same can be said of whatever makes belonging to a group a mandatory thing, although in passing I have to say this bill, in lessening the distinction between physician members and physician non-members of their professional association, does do away, I hope, with dividing the province's doctors into two groups.

I can speak with some fervour on this subject of mandatory groups, because many of my colleagues and friends will know I am not by nature an especially groupy kind of person. I become quite nervous about the phenomenon of groupthink.

I think I have a fairly good understanding of much of what is known about human psychology, both the good and the bad of it, and politics, like love and war, is a theatre wherein both the good and the bad come to be seen with good frequency. But there is also a psychology of people in groups, a psychology of large groups, so to speak, and somehow the balance of the good and the bad always seems to me to be tilted a little towards the latter when it is the behaviour of groups that is in question, as opposed to the behaviour of individuals acting for themselves and on their own behalf with good personal conscience.

I am not by nature a fan of whatever makes group belonging and group support a mandatory thing. This bill makes the payment of OMA dues but not, I believe, OMA membership mandatory for physicians. I feel a kind of stirring of distaste in my gut for such a measure, but I believe that on balance it may be a necessary step and one that in principle at least I would want to think of supporting. I think the government showed some wisdom in acceding to the Ontario Medical Association's long-standing insistence on such a measure.

This point can be argued from many points of view. First of all, there is the Rand formula, which seems to uphold the principle that a group that is actively lobbying in support of individuals by virtue of their role or position in society in turn deserves their support. This principle has been applied to unions and to other representational and negotiating bodies. Perhaps considerations of common sense and symmetry suggest, a priori, that this principle should apply as well to the official body that represents practising physicians in the province.

Certainly that will be to the advantage of physicians and I will say a few words about that, but members should not misunderstand where I am coming from. The worth of Bill 135 is not that it is good for physicians, clearly, but that it may be good for the people of Ontario, for the consumers of health care services. More about that in a moment, but let me just say in passing that I think Bill 135 is good for physicians and will, I suspect, in general, enjoy their support. It is good for physicians because doctors have, as a profession, a way of putting their worst foot forward when it comes to lobbying in a way that reflects their own enlightened self-interest.

Doctors do many things very well. The level of technical sophistication and skill that doctors bring to their science and art is truly remarkable. I say that not from any chauvinistic position, because in speaking of the incredible advances and successes of medical practice in recent decades, I am not thinking so much of psychotherapy and psychiatry. Those are fields that have in general a little catching up to do, in my opinion. But physicians generally practise with enormous knowledge, skill and sheer gut determination and commitment, for which they often receive far too little thanks and recognition.

It is sad that this very dedicated and skilled group in society often seems to sell itself so short when it comes to taking an enlightened and principled position in favour of its own professional need, indeed very often on behalf of what is best not only for the practitioners but also for the recipients of service and care. That leads to demoralization, and demoralized practitioners do not do their best work. It is in the interests of the government, the consumers of health care services—that means just about everybody—and the profession as well that the legitimate interests and needs of physicians be understood and spected if the profession, the health care system and medicare generally are to thrive in Ontario.

For this pursuit of enlightened self-interest to occur in a way that is of benefit to the consumers, the providers and the government requires that physicians be represented by vigorous, articulate, principled and persuasive associations and representational bodies. For the Ontario Medical Association to satisfy those criteria, it must enjoy the strong fiscal and hopefully moral and experiential support of those for whom it purports to act. It is for that reason that the providers of medical care in Ontario should support this bill.

However, others may want to support it as well. The only main reason for supporting the principles of this bill would devolve from it being good for the people of Ontario, the consumers of health care services. I will argue at that point, taking as my position of departure that demoralized physicians are not doing their best work. Clearly the consumers of health care services would wish for something better than that. A system wherein health care providers feel fairly remunerated, vigorously represented and well supplied and serviced in their offices and facilities would be a good system for the consumers of care. Surely medicare demands no less.

Not all physicians feel these conditions are met right now. Physicians have had little in the way of substantive fee increases for several years, at a time when living costs increased steadily and practice costs increased sometimes logarithmically. I keep reading about physician incomes on the order of several hundreds of thousands of dollars. The member for Simcoe West made reference to that. I do not know where those figures are coming from, because doctors working conscientiously, even in busy practices, are just not making the kind of money that is attributed to them.

It is true that a figure of $600,000 or $700,000 may show up beside some doctor's name in OHIP records. However, on closer examination one might find that a group of physicians are doing their billing under the name of the leader of a clinic, that the clinic employs up to two dozen or more staff, that they have hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of sophisticated equipment that is being amortized over several years and that the physicians themselves are earning incomes in the five-digit or low six-digit range. These are not bad incomes perhaps, but not extravagant in an era when some lawyers, accountants and architects are earning several hundreds or up to a $1,000 or more an hour. Physicians, whose training, experience, expertise and mental stamina must be equal, and upon whom human lives depend, are earning as little as a tenth of that.

I am not crying poverty on behalf of physicians by any means. I am simply questioning the myth that all doctors are earning fat incomes at the taxpayer's expense. The ones I know who practise good medicine—I know quite a lot—are living modest though comfortable lives and struggling to make ends meet the same as most others in society. Beyond that, the growing frequency of lawsuits, expanding networks of bureaucratic regulation, the sometimes undermining of prestige and honour of conscientious doctors and the growing militancy of patient advocacy groups—the leaders of which sometimes seem to take a rather adversarial position vis-à-vis the providers of health care—augur badly for the morale of Ontario's physicians.

I am not lamenting all of these developments—some of them are called for and even overdue—but they have an effect on the morale of an important group of practitioners in our health care system, and we should worry about that morale because it bears directly on the quality of care that Ontarians receive.

For all these reasons, I believe this bill, in principle, has merit and that we should consider it very carefully. To its credit—I know it is not usual for the government to hear words of approval from this side of the House—the government was able to correct a certain inherent bias and its partisan point of view in this legislation and to recognize that there are times when what is good for a profession is good for the people.

The government seems to have recognized that and recognized that a strong and vigorous representing body, acting firmly and passionately with enlightened self-interest, is at least a partial goal and is in this context a populist ideal and one that this assembly should consider and examine very closely.

I recognize, of course, that the government may have had some partisan reasons as well for wanting to heal its traditional sense of estrangement from the physicians of Ontario. I recognize also that politics, as nature, abhors a vacuum. The relationship between physicians and the previous government was not always as cordial as it might have been, and an opportunity was thus provided for another party to step into what I might call the potential space left open by its predecessors and to look good in so doing. That is in the nature of political life. It happens to all governments, and mark my words, it will happen to this one.

The only further comment on this bill would be to say that of course we would have done it much better and that there is lots of room for further growth, goodwill and collegialship between government and health care practitioners that we will act on when we return to power very soon. For the moment, let us settle for limited gain and say that this bill is in principle worthy of very careful consideration.

Hon Ms Lankin: In response to some of the points the member raised, I would like to thank him for his comments about the balance that is needed to be achieved in looking at issues of compulsory dues payment versus issues of compulsory membership. I think those two things are very different and it is important that they are underlined with respect to this legislation.

This legislation does not compel from anyone membership in the Ontario Medical Association. It does not exclude the opportunity of individual physicians belonging to other professional associations as well, whether those be specialty-related associations or related to areas of work like the field of public health or the university setting and faculty associations. There is not an exclusive relationship in that sense. What it does do is recognize that the OMA has for a number of years played a role with respect to setting the level of compensation for payments for physicians and that this should be rewarded and returned by a payment of dues.

In general terms, the member spoke about the levels of income that are enjoyed and the liabilities that are being faced across the physician sector right now. I think the agreement we put in place, with its thresholds and its utilization clauses, tries to seek a balance on that. With respect to the liability the member raised, the issue of the $84 million that is being paid for with respect to malpractice insurance, I should indicate that a small portion of that is covered by a percentage of the physicians' fees. It is being deducted at source, where we do the billing and paying out, which is a normal procedure. The remainder of it is paid by the government and has been for a number of years.

In fact, this was a result of a recommendation from a fact-finder's report over five years ago, so this is not something that is just a result of this government looking at this issue. It is an attempt to blend the old with the new in terms of forging a new relationship with the doctors and trying to end the acrimony that has existed in this province between government and the physicians.

Mr Henderson: I have only one brief comment. The minister mentioned the subject of incomes again. I often think of a physician, a very conscientious general practitioner, rather representative of a certain group of general practitioners in a city not far from Toronto, who told me not too many years ago that his net income from his practice in his office—he worked 8:30 to about 6 and he spent time with his patients, the way physicians ought to do who are practising conscientious medicine—was $18,000 a year.

He made more than that, because of course on weekends and at night he would be covering emergency and his annual net income was up in the low 40s range. But those kinds of figures, which admittedly are on the low side but are representative of a certain group of very conscientious practitioners, never get talked about when we hear these figures of six-digit and multiples of six-digit incomes. Those practitioners need to be thought of as well and need to be remembered when it comes to matters of negotiation and the kinds of things we in government and even in opposition become involved in in our discussions.

Mrs Marland: In rising today to speak to Bill 135, An Act to provide for the Payment of Physicians' Dues and Other Amounts to the Ontario Medical Association, I really have to wonder why we are here, spending unnecessary time on an unnecessary bill. Quite frankly, I think it is irresponsible of this government to say that it has priorities in terms of people in this province, yet bring forward this bill as a priority as a piece of legislation it wants to process in this session of Parliament. With all the problems there are in the province today—people out of work, businesses going bankrupt, people suffering every day because they do not have enough food to eat—what are we doing? We are here in this House today discussing the medical association dues, the fees physicians pay to belong to their medical association.

I think it says a lot about this government's inability to prioritize in terms of human need. It certainly says a lot about its inability to prioritize in terms of what is going on in this province today. It just confirms that this government is so far out to lunch it does not have a clue what is going on in this province today. They think it is important to push this bill forward instead of other pieces of legislation that were promised to the people of this province in their Agenda for People when they campaigned one year ago.

How ludicrous it is that the government is now saying "We'll make a union out of the Ontario Medical Association, because we'll make sure that their membership fees, their membership dues, are collected."

I know the Minister of Health is going to respond that this is all in an agreement. I have a copy of the agreement. She is going to tell me that this is in the agreement that was reached between the government of Ontario and the Ontario Medical Association on May 22 of this year, and so it is, but what we really should be spending time doing is looking behind this document, this agreement.

I also think it is worth while noting that we now have a new mode of operation with ministers who bring bills into this House. In the past, when a minister brought a bill to this Legislature, that minister would not comment after each speaker in the two-minute portion for questions and comments on the previous speaker's words. The minister would wait until his or her opportunity to speak, which is his or her prerogative as the last speaker before the bill receives the reading. We noticed that in the amendment to the Power Corporation Act the Minister of Energy used the two-minute time slots to rebut and correct the members who were speaking to his bill, and I see this afternoon that this minister is also jumping up after every speaker and using that two-minute portion to rebut the previous speaker.

I think this process is actually an abuse of what was established when the rules of the House established that members would have two minutes to speak. It was not two minutes to hear from the minister, the proponent of the bill; it was two minutes to hear from backbenchers in all three caucuses who wished to speak on the bill and would not at a future date have that opportunity.

The sad thing that is happening is that with this piece of legislation, the physicians in this province are automatically going to be billed for their dues to the Ontario Medical Association, although while they are going to be billed for those fees, they are going to be billed in a way that they obviously would have no control over, even if they wished to, because the dues are going to be taken from the OHIP billing of those physicians. This is very interesting in itself because while this is happening, the bill says very clearly that actual membership in the association remains voluntary. This current year's membership is $1,050. At the same time a physician is having $1,050 taken out of his OHIP billing, it is not compulsory for him to be a member of his professional association.

What really is happening here is that we are unionizing doctors. I recognize that the Ontario Medical Association or the executive of that association, and they have had some kind of vote of membership, has said this is okay. They do not mind. The thing is that since December 1986 when Bill 94 was passed by the then Liberal government of this province, doctors have been pushed further and further with their backs against the wall. Members may not be concerned about doctors and any individual group of people who practise medicine in this province. That may not be the members' responsibility.

Before somebody says, "Your husband is a doctor," I have to tell this new government that my husband isn't a doctor; he is a dentist. I always have to put this on record because usually somebody says, "You have a bias because your husband is a doctor." My husband is a dentist and my husband pays his own dues and fees to the Ontario Dental Association.

Hon Mr Laughren: Have you got a swimming pool shaped like an upper plate?

Mrs Marland: I tell the Treasurer, who is not at his desk and who is interjecting, that we do not even have a swimming pool.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I appreciate the fact that the Treasurer did perhaps need a reprimand in the sense that he was speaking out of turn and out of his seat, but I want you to address your remarks to the Chair and not directly to the Treasurer.

Mrs Marland: I would be more than happy to address my comments to the Speaker in the chair if you would rule from the chair that the Treasurer was out of order when he interjected, which you failed to do, I say with respect.

The Acting Speaker: I just have. The member for Mississauga South will be cognizant of the fact that I have just reinforced her position and I encourage her to continue the debate.

Mrs Marland: Nobody worries about physicians in this province until they are sick and they need one. Fortunately, the majority of people in this province are healthy. But those people who are not blessed with good health and need physicians and specialists are the people who know what is happening to our medical profession in this province. They are the people who know that we are losing the best people we have in this province, who go and practise medicine elsewhere. They are the people who understand what this agreement between the Ontario socialist government and the Ontario Medical Association is really about. They are the people who understand what this bill is about. They are also the people who would say to anyone in this province that it is absolutely ridiculous for this government to have decided that it will now pay the malpractice insurance of physicians.

Those people who require malpractice insurance are quite happy to pay their own, but I see this as a little carrot that this socialist government has negotiated with the Ontario Medical Association. It is a little give and take to get the Ontario Medical Association on side. The minister said a few moments ago that this will put an end to the acrimony. I want to say that this will not put an end to the acrimony, because there are a lot of people in this province who understand very well why the physicians have succumbed to this document, of which this bill before us today is a part.

There are a lot of people who understand how physicians and specialists in this province have been made the scapegoat for the inflated cost of health care today in Ontario. I remember when the Liberal government brought in Bill 94 in December 1986. At that time, the discussion was about opted-out physicians and the loss of $50 million we were not receiving from Ottawa under the Canada Health Act if we allowed physicians to extra bill. The extra billing amount equated to a loss of this $50 million.

How ironic that in the first year of the enforcement of Bill 94, when physicians were forced to bill for everything they had not billed for before and were forced to practise turnstile medicine because they were told they could not opt out of being an employee of the provincial government, the increase in OHIP billing that year alone was in excess of $113 million. The irony is that the whole debate was over $50 million but it ended up costing an additional $63 million to the people of this province.

If we are saying it is the physicians who are driving the cost of health care in this province and we must control them, and the way we do that is to buy them off in an agreement with their professional association, and we cap their billing, if we think the people of this province are so short-sighted that they will not come to understand what this means to them in terms of their access to health care, then we insult the people of this province.

The people of this province understand what is going on. They understand why the best of the best have either left or are thinking of leaving this province. They understand what percentage of the cost of health care is actually under physicians' billing.

At the time we passed Bill 94 in this House, the physicians' billings were actually about 18% of the cost of health care. I do not know what the physicians' billings actually are as a percentage of health care today. I think it is somewhere around 23% or 25%.

But what an irony that now we are saying, "You cannot bill over $400,000 a year." That would have the people think that physicians earn $400,000 a year. Let's be very clear about this point, because physicians who may bill $400,000 or more a year are not earning that. That is their billing amount. It does not take into consideration what their overhead is.

A rough overhead in a general practice of medicine, I am told, is about 50%. That is not dealing with specialists who have very expensive equipment and specialized instruments such as specialists who do colostomies, for example, who use fibre optics which cost millions of dollars and who, at their own expense, invest in the capital cost of that equipment.

For example, let's say we have a physician who bills $400,000 a year and his overhead is 50%. There are not very many who do, but let's look at that example. That physician then earns perhaps $200,000 a year. Is this not the socialist government that felt the head of Ontario Hydro could be paid $400,000 a year and has now cut him back to $230,000 a year or whatever it is? Is it not ironic that this socialist government does not know how to weigh an argument on one side and the other? The thing is, the government cannot talk out of both sides of its mouth.

If we look at a specialist in this province who has invested 12 or 14 years in his education without any income whatsoever, then—

Hon Mr Wildman: We have also invested in it.

The Acting Speaker: Will the honourable Minister of Natural Resources refrain from interjecting? Allow the member the floor. Continue with the debate.

Mrs Marland: If we look at the personal investment that physicians and specialists make in order to practise medicine today, we are looking at an investment of 12 to 14 years in education. That is 12 or 14 years where they do not earn anything. They have no income, but they have costs. They have a cost of living, cost of books, cost of instruments and so forth.

Is it not something to think that we expect people today to decide to go into the practice of medicine, to go to university to learn medicine, and we say to them: "Okay, you won't earn anything for the first 12 or 14 years because you're going to be in school learning to be a specialist" with all the combination of specialties that are needed when we go to hospital? If they ever doubt that, they should ask some time when they are talking to a specialist how many years he or she has spent in school. We say: "Okay. You can donate 12 or 14 years of your life and then we're going to cap your income. We're going to control you. We're going to unionize you." That is what this bill is doing. It is making physicians belong to a union. If it is not, why would the government be collecting those fees?

What an incredible issue it is anyway, if we are talking about 17,000, 18,000 or 19,000 physicians in this province and we are talking about $1,000 per physician. Is this government such a poor manager of our finances in this province that it will scrape and grovel and do whatever it can to get another $1,000 in and so decided to attack this particular professional group?

If we went out on the street today and asked the first 24 people we stopped, "Do you know that the only way a physician can practise medicine in this province is as an employee of the Ontario government?" I doubt if we would find two who know today that one cannot practise medicine except as an employee of the Ontario government. What other professions have we limited in such a way?

Even if members opposite think all of that is okay, I simply say, if they are looking at capping the income of a physician, if I were a physician who billed the maximum amount and when it got to that amount the government said, "You can't bill any more," what I would say to the government is: "Okay. If I get to my $400,000 limit by September, I am going to take the other four months off and I won't be here to render the professional services for those patients who need me, because from here on I am only going to get paid two thirds or a third," whatever figure the ratio works out to.

Here we say to these physicians: "Go ahead. Practise medicine. Look after our sick people. Invest in your education and we'll tell you how much you can earn." It is outrageous. The fact that the Ontario Medical Association has agreed with this and to the part of this which deal with collecting professional association dues is not an indication that it is what it really wants, but it is an indication of how this socialist government, on the heels of the previous Liberal government, has hammered the physicians, the health care providers in this province, into the ground.

If all those members who are sitting there shaking their heads are going to get sick, they had better get sick in the first half of the year if they want a complete physical and the consultation of the top specialists in this province. When they are sick I know they want to go to the best. They will be lucky if the best are still practising in this province.

Second, they will have to go before they have reached that magical figure at which they have capped doctors' income. They seem to think it is okay to say to a specialist "Your income is going to be capped at this amount" even though the operating rooms may be empty, even though the testing laboratories they need that are used by the referral of their patients are sitting there not being used, even though all this capital investment in physical plant and equipment for the protection of the people of Ontario is there. If the physicians who use those resources are capped that magical figure of income, those facilities may well not be used.

If the members opposite think that is okay, that is fine. I pray they will not be sick, that they will not need specialists and physicians. What they get and the legacy they have driven the future of this province into in terms of relationships with their health care providers is on their heads, not on mine.

I stayed up all night when Bill 94 was passed in this House in December 1986, because it did not take very much common sense to recognize that what would be the outcome of that piece of legislation is what we have here where we are now formally unionizing the medical people in this province.

At the same time, the government has decided it will collect the professional dues for the Ontario Medical Association membership and pay malpractice insurance. At the same time they are doing all that, is it not rather significant that we have had thousands of hospital beds closed in this province, that thousands of nurses are now going to be out of work because the government cannot pay their salaries and therefore the beds are empty?

On the one hand the members opposite are saying "Okay, physicians, we are going to cap you at this level of income." On the other hand, they are saying it is okay to close hospital beds and allow nurses to be out of work. It is a total mismanagement of the health care system, and the members opposite are fortunate because they are healthy enough to be in this House today and not need the health care system. But when they do need the health care system—

The Acting Speaker: Order. Has the member concluded her speech? No? She will have the floor tomorrow when the House resumes. It now being close to six of the clock, this House will stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

The House adjourned at 1758.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Subscriptions

Subscription information may be obtained from: Sessional Subscription Service, Publications Ontario, Ministry of Government Services, 5th Floor, 880 Bay Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone (416) 326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1 (800) 668-9938.

Table des matières

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi qu'à celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Wednesday 6 November 1991

The House met at 1330.
Prayers.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

GATEWAY PROJECT

Mr Ramsay: It is a pleasure to stand in my place today and to salute a group of hardworking women and men in my riding of Timiskaming. On Monday of this week I attended the official opening of the Gateway project in the town of Haileybury. This is a skills training initiative that is both imaginative and I believe will prove to be truly effective.

First, Gateway is a partnership of a broad cross-section of organizations in Timiskaming: the Canadian Steel Trades Employment Congress, commonly known as CSTE, which is a partnership between the United Steelworkers of America and the steel companies of this country; the Sherman Mine Adjustment Committee; the Timiskaming Board of Education; Employment and Immigration Canada; the Ministry of Northern Development and Mines, and the town of Haileybury.

The group has developed a hands-on work project of building a home that will provide employment and job training. At the same time, the workers are going to be going to an adult training facility in Haileybury to upgrade their academic qualifications. The beauty of this project is that the proceeds of the sale of the house will allow the project to continue so that we in Timiskaming can continue to train unemployed workers.

I urge the Minister of Skills Development to take a look at this project as a model. I believe it is important to develop the skills of workers in Ontario so that we can stay competitive in a changing global economy. I salute the men and women and the organizations for their work and creativity and I wish all the participants well.

H. GORDON GREEN

Mr Arnott: On Sunday, November 3, Ontario lost one of its most renowned literary figures. H. Gordon Green—broadcaster, newspaper columnist, editor, novelist, teacher, farm leader, politician and homespun philosopher—died at the age of 79.

Raised in Arthur in the county of Wellington, in an area that was known as "stumptown" at the time, he received his early education at Arthur public and high schools. Very much a renaissance man, Gordon Green contributed greatly to promoting among the urban population of this province, and indeed throughout Ontario, a fundamental understanding of rural Ontario, its character and its people. With his death, rural Ontario has lost one of its best friends and strongest allies.

His political ambitions, fortunately or unfortunately, depending on one's perspective, were not realized when he ran for the New Democratic Party in the 1962 federal general election in the riding of Wellington-Huron, which was ably represented for many years by yet another Arthur resident, Mr Marvin Howe.

In conversation yesterday with my friend Jim Hamilton, our local historian in Arthur, who was a lifelong friend of Gordon Green, Jim recalled his last visit with Gordon back in May 1990 on the occasion of the 100th anniversary reunion of Arthur District High School. Gordon felt it might be his last visit to his home town.

H. Gordon Green will be sadly missed by his family, his friends and his faithful readers. Those of us in rural Ontario who have a special place for him in our hearts mourn his passing.

HAZARDOUS WASTE

Mr Hansen: I rise today to inform the House of a very important ongoing activity in my riding of Lincoln.

With Lincoln being made up of five municipalities and being mainly rural, it is difficult to implement an effective waste management program. In 1971, four of the municipalities, Grimsby, Lincoln, Pelham and West Lincoln, got together to form a board of management committee to jointly administer one municipal landfill to serve all four communities. However, their collective efforts have not stopped there. Since 1987 they have been operating special household hazardous waste days to allow their residents the opportunity to rid themselves of old paint, oil and so on, instead of having to go directly into the landfill.

This year the group opened a permanent facility for household hazardous waste in Grimsby. Now residents from all four communities have a place to bring their hazardous waste on a regular basis. On Saturday I visited the depot to congratulate the staff who help collect the waste and to thank the people for taking the time to separate their waste to help protect the environment.

The four communities have shown that politicians and people can work together to help solve the problems Ontario is facing. The board of management should be commended on its fine effort in dealing with its own waste problem and for getting the residents so actively involved. Even though the board is busy preparing an environmental assessment document for a new landfill, it has taken it upon itself to initiate new waste management programs.

LEGAL AID

Mr Callahan: I rise today to address the flip-flop by the Attorney General. He was reported recently in the Law Times as proposing that legal aid should be phased out in favour of a public defender system.

I am old enough to remember when the legal aid program was brought into this province and the decision was made that the public defender system was of less quality and would be more costly in the long run. In addition to that, it sets up a two-tier system of justice in this province. It provides very efficient paid-for justice for those who can afford it and it actually dumps on those people who are not able to afford it.

Legal aid has provided megaservice to this province over the years it has been in existence and I suggest it is the way we should go. I ask the Attorney General to make a decision quickly, because there are people out there who cannot afford to retain their own lawyers and are being served very well through the legal aid system. If he intends to dump on the very people the New Democratic Party professes to protect and preserve, then that is what he will in fact do by setting up a public defender system. If any review is taken of New York or any other jurisdiction that has a public defender system, it is less than desirable; it is in many cases a sham.

I suggest to the Attorney General and to the Treasurer, please do not eliminate legal aid. It is the best-quality system; it is the best program in existence and our justice system will be served well.

ORANGEVILLE SWEET ADELINES

Mr Tilson: Today I would like to offer my congratulations to the Orangeville chapter of the Sweet Adelines on the occasion of their 10th anniversary, to be celebrated on November 16, 1991.

For those who are not familiar with this great-sounding group, the Sweet Adelines International is an organization of 30,000 women in more than 700 chapters across Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom, Sweden, the Netherlands, Japan, the Republic of Panama, Finland, Germany, Australia and New Zealand. This group's mandate is to develop and promote a public awareness and appreciation of the art form of barbershop harmony and to teach its members to sing and perform four-part harmony in barbershop style.

The Orangeville chapter of the Sweet Adelines was established in October 1979 with nine members, and by the time the group received its charter in November 1981 the membership had grown to 40.

They have experienced great success over the past 10 years. They can be heard performing throughout the community at dances, seniors' homes, hospitals and of course their own very popular concerts. The Orangeville Sweet Adelines also encourage new recruits and welcome women who love to sing, are energetic and interested in being the best they can be.

I wish the Orangeville Sweet Adelines best wishes and continued success on their 10th anniversary. I have had the pleasure of enjoying many of their performances and I encourage all Ontarians to support their local chapter of the Sweet Adelines.

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr Hayes: As all the members will recall, the Minister of Agriculture and Food asked me to chair a task force across this province last fall. As a result of that, we were able to come up with a financial assistance program that helped some farmers in the long term.

We spoke and listened to many of the individual farmers across this province, and the message we got was that they are tired of ad hoc programs. They have asked us to look at the long-term solutions dealing with agriculture and also other sectors in the rural community.

I am very pleased to say today that we have been able to bring together a large group of people representing agriculture in this province, and having them all in the same room is really an accomplishment of this government. We have had the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the National Farmers' Union, the Christian Farmers Federation of Ontario, the Catholic Rural Life Conference, the Union des cultivateurs franco-ontariens, the Farm Women's Network, the Ontario Commodity Council, representatives of supply-managed marketing boards and also representatives from the financial institutions.

I am very pleased we were able to do this, and I can tell the members that it is a very good working group. I ask the members from all sides of this House to help and assist us in reaching our goal of protecting the family farm in Ontario.

METHANE GAS LEAK

Mr McClelland: The city of North York received a letter not too long ago from the Minister of Housing. The letter was dated August 27, 1991, and was in response to communications about the possibility of an existing hazard on a parcel of land previously used as a landfill site being proposed for a high-rise development. The Minister of Housing responded that the Ministry of the Environment had decided that a review of the hazard was not needed since there were only trace amounts of methane present.

The Finch-Ardwick community is very concerned about the investigation by the Ministry of the Environment—might I say the lack of investigation—was not rigorous enough and did not really look at any of the details and that a greater hazard exists than the government is willing to acknowledge. It is important to note it has said there were trace amounts. I remind the ministers involved that Bluehaven public school, which is very close to the building site, was closed and remains closed because of methane gas seepage.

I want to caution the ministers involved and the local member, the member for Yorkview, that the issue here involves public safety and requires a close, hard second look. I hope the relevant ministers will re-examine the files on this very important issue so that a serious mistake is not made. We have to remember that people's health and safety is being put in jeopardy here. I remind them that their answer was, "There were only trace amounts." The school has been closed because of seepage. I ask the minister to please review this and exercise caution.

GEORGE TOTTENHAM

Mr B. Murdoch: Today I would like to congratulate my constituent George Edward Tottenham, who has been made a serving brother of the Order of St John. He received his award from the Governor General of Canada at a ceremony in Ottawa last month.

Mr Tottenham, for many years an elected municipal official, has served his community in many capacities, but his selfless volunteering of more than 7,500 hours to the St John Ambulance cannot go unnoticed.

As most members know, St John Ambulance is an organization committed to improving the health, safety and quality of life of Canadians, partly through the work of people like Edward Tottenham who are trained in the care of the sick and the injured and who volunteer their time to help their fellow man.

St John volunteers have distinguished themselves throughout the 20th century in Canadian history by serving overseas in both world wars and by assisting victims and their families in tragic situations at home such as the springhill, Nova Scotia, mine disasters, the Mississauga train derailment and the Barrie tornado devastation.

I am very proud that Edward Tottenham has devoted so much of his time to as vital an organization as St John Ambulance. I am sure all members join with me in applauding his achievement, thanking him for his commitment and wishing him well in the future.

ROBERT CARLIN

Ms S. Murdock: A little bit of the Sudbury basin's history has been brought to mind. I rise today to honour a distinguished former member of this House, not only a great Canadian but a committed builder of the labour movement and of social democracy in Ontario. On Tuesday, October 22, Robert Hugh Carlin, who sat in this House between 1943 and 1948 as MPP for Sudbury, passed away at the age of 90.

Bob's life was a history in miniature of the labour movement and of social democracy in this province. At age 15, he went to work in the mining camps of northern Ontario where he soon became a life-long, dedicated trade unionist. He eventually held executive positions in the one big union, the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers and the United Steelworkers of America. He served as a delegate to the International Labour Office of the United Nations.

In his two terms as MPP, he was a forceful and committed advocate for working people and for the city of Sudbury. In his years in the Legislature, he pushed for many measures to help working people, including a 40-hour workweek and a mandatory two weeks' vacation with pay. He was at the forefront of the fight for a university in Sudbury, a fight that was ultimately won. He received an honorary doctorate in 1978 from Laurentian for all his work on behalf of the city.

On behalf of the government and my party, I offer my condolences to his family and friends. I did not know Bob Carlin personally; I wish I had. But I must say that I hope to live up to the example and the high standards set by the first Co-operative Commonwealth Federation MPP for Sudbury.

VISITORS

Mr O'Connor: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to bring to the attention of this House a delegation of senior Czechoslovakian representatives sitting in the members' gallery east.

The Speaker: The member does not have a point of order. To the guests, welcome.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

ONTARIO INVESTMENT AND WORKER OWNERSHIP PROGRAM

Hon Mr Laughren: Our government is very pleased to announce today an important piece of legislation.

The Ontario investment and worker ownership program is an important step on the road to rebuilding the economy. It will provide businesses in this province with a new source of much-needed capital. It will provide our workers with an opportunity for greater participation and increased decision-making in the places they work.

It is well known that employee participation in the workplace helps to increase productivity. It also fosters better understanding between business and labour as each becomes more aware of the other's needs and challenges. Finally, worker ownership helps save jobs by supporting viable companies that would otherwise close.

We are proud to say that this program is the product of a successful consultation process with the various stakeholders—business, labour and investment groups. As a result of our extensive consultations, the government has altered the draft legislation somewhat. For example, one of the suggestions we incorporated was to move from a majority control position by employees alone to a significant participation position with outside investors, thus allowing outside investors to join with employees in acquiring control of their companies. This will broaden the program's appeal and better meet its objectives. Another change is the institution of payroll deduction systems to facilitate share purchases. These changes to the draft legislation confirm the government's commitment to a process which not only listens to the people of Ontario, but which also responds to their needs and concerns.

We all know the economy of Ontario is undergoing enormous change. The role of this government is to help the people of Ontario respond to those changes, and to respond in a way that includes all the players in the economy.

As I said before, both employer and employee will benefit from the Ontario investment and worker ownership program. Small and medium-sized business will now have access to a new source of capital. This capital will help businesses grow and modernize, and employees will have more opportunities to be participants in the economy.

All the results of the program—new sources of capital, increased productivity, better labour-management relations and saving jobs—will contribute to rebuilding the economy, and rebuilding the economy is the most profound challenge facing Ontario today and one which this legislation will help address.

RESPONSES

ONTARIO INVESTMENT AND WORKER OWNERSHIP PROGRAM

Mr Phillips: To respond to the minister's statement, I think his last sentence was most appropriate. Indeed we are facing a very difficult economic time.

There are several aspects of this that we will want to study in some depth. The statement today is fairly bare bones—I think the minister will agree—because for everyone's information, we are talking about a lot of money here. I think the Treasurer at one time said there may be as much as $100 million a year of taxpayers' money involved in this program, so it is not a small program that we are talking about.

One of the aspects we will want to get into in some detail—and there is another level of consultation that has to take place, and that is with the Legislature—is the protection of workers. People are going to put their hard-earned savings into this and there are two aspects they are going to purchase. One is, as I read the minister's document, companies that may be failing, where the government will want the workers to purchase them. We will want to be sure that as they put their hard-earned savings into this, there is some protection for them and there is full disclosure. I think the Ontario Securities Commission has already expressed its concern about the lack of disclosure.

The second thing we will want to debate is how much money is involved here. The Treasurer has indicated in an interview, I think, that it might be as much as $100 million a year. The actual taxpayers' subsidy can be $50,000 per individual, as I think the Treasurer will acknowledge—approximately $50,000 per individual investor of taxpayers' money in this.

I understand there is a proposal in the document that if an owner of a business is planning to retire, he could sell the business to the employees. Again, we have to recognize there could be as much as $50,000 per employee of taxpayers' money involved in that, so we will want to look at what protection there is for the taxpayer.

The final aspect of this that we will want to look at is the issue I raised yesterday. That will be addressed by one of my colleagues who is also responding. It has to do with just who has access to these venture capital programs, who will manage them and who has the authority to run them.

We look forward to taking certain aspects of this and ensuring that the workers are protected, the taxpayers are protected and we still achieve the objectives the Treasurer has outlined in terms of ensuring that, wherever possible, workers in this province have an opportunity to participate in the ownership of their businesses and, wherever possible, firms that may be viable long-term but need a little injection of help can be saved.

Mr Offer: As my colleague the member for Scarborough-Agincourt has indicated, we recognize that there are certain aspects of the Treasurer's statement in the Legislature which we know will require further debate. In his statement he has spoken about the need for consultation. The question today becomes, was he in fact listening?

This particular announcement and the proposed legislation only applies to trade unions. It excludes, for instance, co-operatives and employee associations. The Treasurer will be aware that in Saskatchewan and BC, for instance, this type of legislation applies not only to trade unions but indeed to associations of trade unions, to investment co-operatives and to associations of employees. Real legislation which provides real protection must embrace these types and forms of associations.

We will also be asking the Treasurer in this debate how he can respond to the question of this limited form of protection and application of legislation when just yesterday in this Legislature, in response to a question by the member for Scarborough-Agincourt on this very issue, whether the Premier will be able to assure all workers of the province that they will be treated equally, the response of the Premier was yes, yet in the Treasurer's statement today he has limited the application to trade unions. He has excluded employee associations; he has excluded co-operatives. These are areas which will require debate and certainly are of concern to us in order to provide real protection for those who very badly need it.

Mr Stockwell: When I discuss the announcements such as the Treasurer has made today, I tend to be somewhat cynical, I suppose, because if we look back on some of the other programs and offers that have been put forward by all levels of government under programs much the same as this—for instance ESOP. The employee share ownership plan, in two or three years, has had nine takeups. Members opposite would probably class that as a dismal failure. It is that way because it is so complicated and difficult to qualify. I firmly believe the Treasurer has made it that way. I would not expect the member for Scarborough-Agincourt to worry too much about the $100 million because I doubt very much if we are going to get anywhere near that kind of number when we are talking about takeups or people who qualify for these particular programs.

Mr Sorbara: It is public relations.

Mr Stockwell: The suggestion is it is public relations. It probably is public relations. It is public relations for the unions in this province. I make a wager as well. I think the unions will be about the only people who qualify under these programs.

The Treasurer suggests, "The Ontario investment and worker ownership program is an important step on the road to rebuilding the economy." That is a farce. If this is the most important step this government is taking, it is in a far sadder shape than anyone could have expected. They are playing on the margins. Let's ask ourselves one simple question: Why, if this is such a good idea, do we have to give tax incentives to unions or the employees? Because nobody would finance these plans. Nobody would finance this employee takeover. Why? Because it is a huge investment for a very risky business. No question about it, it will be very risk-oriented. If you cannot find capital financing out there today, you go to the government. The government will be left holding the bag, in my opinion, on a lot of risky programs that the private sector would not pick up.

Having said that, we must understand that we are in a public relations forum here. They are not going to be allowed to qualify. Even if they do qualify they are going to be very risky, operated and run by unions. This is not going to be a step on the road to recovery. We are going to balkanize the capital markets, particularly because the government is venturing into the capital market business.

my opinion, that is not going to bode well for our economy in this province.

This is a clear hurdle between interprovincial trading, in my opinion. We are offering preferential treatment to provincially run businesses. There is no doubt in my mind that this will be seen as an interprovincial barrier established by this Treasurer and this province.

The Treasurer suggests, as I said, it was a takeover. What it comes down to is simply this: It is asking the taxpayers in Ontario to subsidize union takeovers. That is really what it comes down to. They are asking the taxpayers right across this province to subsidize union takeovers of businesses that basically are not viable. They could not get capital financing, they are not making money, so the province is going to guarantee the loans so a union can buy out a failing business.

If it were the personal money of the Treasurer or any of his colleagues, would they lend it out on this basis? Of course they would not, because it is a very risky business, a risky venture and, as I said before, it is using the taxpayers' money to bail out companies for a union takeover, which I cannot endorse. I would not endorse that on a union basis. I would endorse it on a private sector business operation. If a business fails, it fails. That is the free market system.

I know what is going to happen. The takeup under this program will be marginal. It will be exclusively the domain of unions. It will be a taxpayer risk to finance these takeups. Most of the businesses will fail. We will be stuck with a tremendous bill to pay because they will not be able to service their debts.

This, the Treasurer is suggesting to us, is the first step on a road to rebuilding the economy. This is public relations, it is farcical and it will not work. It never has and it never will. I do not hear any taxpayers coming up to me and saying, "Please, could you start subsidizing unions to take over their companies so they can lose money, go out of business and you guarantee their loans?" Not very right.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

Mr Jordan: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: Yesterday in this House I made a statement regarding the government's policy on conservation programs and I pointed out that they were costly and, in our opinion, not effective.

After returning to my office I found I had received a call from a senior official of Ontario Hydro. I returned the call to find this official very critical of my statement. He said he thought they had an excellent program, had received excellent press and he was disappointed that I could make such a statement in the House.

I was representing the feelings of the people I represent in Lanark-Renfrew, and I was representing our party policy. I am wondering if this is going to be a policy of the new Minister of Energy to try to harass members so they are not free to express their views relative to new policies.

The Speaker: I will be pleased to take a look at the situation brought to my attention by the member for Lanark-Renfrew. Perhaps the member could provide my office with further details.

Mr Mancini: On the same point, Mr Speaker—

The Speaker: You are rising on what?

Mr Mancini: On the member's point of privilege, because the member—

The Speaker: No, no. Take your seat. You rise on your own point of privilege, not someone else's.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr Elston: I have a question for my favourite storyteller, the Treasurer. He has by now been seen to have considerable competition but he is far and away the leader in storytelling in this province. I would like to talk to him just a little bit about the loss of jobs in Ontario, the fact that thousands of working women and men have been thrown out of work and that there has been little if any response by his government to any of these things.

Last Friday, for instance, Komdresco in Cambridge shut its doors for the last time, throwing some 200 women and men out of work. The day before, Borden announced it was closing the Ingersoll plant, putting another 79 people on the unemployment lines. While the Premier continues to speak of consultation, dialogue and consensus, the sad reality is that we continue to await his grand economic recovery plan and nothing comes as these men and women lose their jobs.

I want to know what plans the Treasurer and the Premier have, since the Premier is in charge of almost everything in this province of ours now, to stem the flow of capital, jobs and talent out of Ontario and into places like Pennsylvania, Mexico and other locales?

Hon Mr Laughren: I regret that the leader of the official opposition chooses to cast such a pall of gloom over Ontario. I think most of us feel that Ontario is still the best jurisdiction in the world in which to live, work and invest.

We acknowledge the fact that the last year has been an extremely difficult year. To deny it would be downright foolish. We know that in the last 18 months the private sector has laid off over 250,000 people. Government cannot pick up all of that slack. That is simply not possible to do.

At the same time what is bothering us is that of all the job losses, about two thirds of them are deemed to be permanent. Without getting into all of the reasons for that, since I would be accused of finger-pointing at the federal government because of its high-dollar, high-interest rate policy, we are trying very hard in this province to create an environment in which the investment community will see that this remains the best jurisdiction in the world in which to invest.

Mr Elston: I merely stated in my opening question that several companies had recently shut down. That there are others is clear to all of us. While my favourite storyteller does not disappoint with his new stories, perhaps he could hear these companies and the number of people they have thrown out of work: Kendall in Peterborough—they have gone south—144 people; Amerock, Meaford, 140 people; Heinz, Leamington, 280 people; H & K Manufacturing in Cobourg is shutting down on the 25th of this month to concentrate production in Dallas, Texas.

The people in this province are not finding it to be satisfactorily competitive with other jurisdictions. I do not think any of us need to be told by the Treasurer that he is hoping it will remain a competitive climate to do business in, rather than asserting that is the case.

I want to know what the Treasurer and Deputy Premier is going to do to stop the haemorrhaging and in fact to enhance our competitiveness in the international field.

Hon Mr Laughren: Before I do that, I wonder if I could put it in a bit of perspective here that the leader of the official opposition is not giving. He went through a list of some companies that have closed. I wonder if I could give him some good news, if he can handle it.

First of all, we announced in this Legislature yesterday funding for the Industrial Research and Development Institute to be located in Midland. I think that is a good sign; it is a very positive sign in this province. In Windsor, a GM trim plant has won a contract to provide seats for a GM assembly plant in Michigan. That is good news for Ontario. Piper has chosen to move the main business of its aircraft company to Canada—from the United States, I might add. Both Toronto and Vancouver are short-listed as potential locations.

Mr Elston: You are really stretching.

Hon Mr Laughren: No, I am not stretching it. These are all good-news announcements which the leader of the official opposition does not want to hear.

Finally, I remind the leader of the official opposition that in the last year, of all the foreign investment that came to Canada, three quarters of it, a full 75% of it, came to this province because people know this is a great place to invest.

Mr Elston: I think I want to thank Darcy McKeough for leaving one of his old speeches in the Treasury. I cannot ask any of us here to listen to this story without joining the debate but perhaps on another occasion.

It is very clear indeed that a whole group of people in business in Ontario find that it is onerous to be in business in this province and that they need some leadership from this Treasurer, from this government, to help them compete against the international competition.

To ask the same question again and ask him once again, will the Treasurer tell us what he is doing to make Ontario competitive? What role will the release of his government's statement tomorrow on the Labour Relations Amendment Act add to competitiveness in Ontario?

Hon Mr Laughren: There are a number of questions built into that supplementary. But I truly believe this government has indicated and shown by its actions, not simply its words, that it is prepared to sit down with the business community to work out differences we might have. I do not think any government in this country has ever spent the time we have in consulting with the business community. When we do it, we are criticized by the opposition for spending too much time consulting with the business community.

Interjection.

The Speaker: Order, the member for Grey.

Hon Mr Laughren: I do not think we do spend too much time consulting with the business community, and there are examples. The statement I made today is a good example of how we went out and consulted with the business community, with the labour movement, with investment groups, we made changes to our proposals and we have come up with a better package than we went in with and I think that is the way it is going to be.

Finally, the leader talked about the Labour Relations Act amendments, which I gather will be introduced tomorrow. I think there has been a lot of hand-wringing over the legislation and the discussion paper before anybody even knows what is contained therein. I ask the leader of the official opposition to check what happened with labour relations in Quebec when it reformed its labour legislation a number of years ago. I believe that, if anything, it created a better atmosphere of labour relations in the province than had existed before.

Mr Phillips: My question is also to the Treasurer and follows along with my leader's questions. It also has to do with developing confidence in the economy.

I think the Treasurer would acknowledge that the area that is perhaps of most concern to the people of Ontario and certainly to the investment community, is his four-year economic plan. I think most people would accept living with a deficit in tough times—perhaps not the deficit he has, but a deficit. The thing that concerns people the most is a four-year economic plan that calls for deficits that never get below, I believe, $7.8 billion, and even that assumes a healthy economic climate for the next three years and about $5 billion of new taxes. We recently saw the two new governments that were elected out west both calling for balanced budgets over the mandate of their term.

Given that experience, given the fact that the minister has now had this job for a year, could he outline for the people of Ontario that it is his intention not to live with that four-year major deficit plan, but rather that he will undertake to come out with a balanced budget by the end of his mandate?

Hon Mr Laughren: It seems like longer than a year. I want to assure the member opposite that when we put the budget this past spring the deficits for what we call the next four years, the three years after this one—and his numbers are quite correct—we did it based on our forecasts of where the economy was heading in the next three years after this one. While there are some indications by some forecasters that the growth will be greater than we have predicted, it is not a lot greater. Even the more optimistic ones are not greatly more optimistic. The unemployment rate will stay very high for the next three to four years. Even in that third year, when the forecasters assume we will be completely out of the recession, the unemployment rate will still be flirting with between 7% and 8%. That was the forecast upon which we based the numbers in the budget.

I see the Speaker is looking nervously at me, so I will simply wait for the supplementary, other than to say that I think it is going to be difficult enough reaching the figures for those out years, without pretending that we can balance the budget in three years.

Mr Phillips: That is a problem. On the unemployment rate, I believe the Treasurer predicts higher than 7% to 8%; I think he is in the 8% to 10% range, which I think for all of us, on every side of the House, is unacceptable.

At the standing committee on finance and economic affairs the noted economist Mel Watkins spoke to us. He spoke on behalf of the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives and 59 economists. When we asked, should this government balance the budget, he was quite critical of the Treasurer and the government and said, "I would think that this government...with a four- to five-year mandate"—which it does have—"ought to aim to balance its budget over that period." He was just one of virtually everyone who felt the Treasurer should balance the budget over his mandate.

My question to the Treasurer is, what are we going to tell Professor Watkins the next time he appears before our committee, asking his advice on the Treasurer's balanced budget?

Hon Mr Laughren: I think all Keynesians want to balance the budget over the economic cycle. He might take offence at me for referring to him as a Keynesian, but I think he is. I think it is simply unrealistic to think we can cope with the rising utilization of the health care system—it is raised in this Legislature almost every day—increased enrolments in the educational system, the absolute essential—

Mr Elston: You're cutting it back. You're slashing health care.

Hon Mr Laughren: The Liberal leader even complains when we try to contain the cost of the health care system. At the same time, the members opposite say we should be cutting expenditures. The opposition has to understand that there is a serious problem out there in terms of rising expenditures. At the same time our revenues are not going up as quickly. I simply say to the member opposite that nothing would make me happier than to have a balanced budget at the end of three years, but I am not going to kid the troops and pretend that I believe we can do it in that period of time, because I simply do not believe

Mr Phillips: Just so we know what we are dealing with over essentially the next four years, is the Treasurer confirming today that he is making his financial plans—because he is laying them now for the next 18 months to two years—on the basis of continued deficits in the $8-billion range, new taxes in the $5-billion range and unemployment running in the 8% to 9% range? Is that what Ontario has to look forward to over the mandate of this government?

Hon Mr Laughren: There is no question that in the next three years after this one—I think we are talking about the same time frame—we are going to be faced with budget deficits; that is absolutely correct. If the economy rebounds faster than, quite frankly, I think it is going to, and if our revenues are more buoyant and we are able to contain our expenditures even better than we have already—we have stayed within our forecast this year despite some very substantial pressures—then of course we would have the deficit lower than is forecast in our 1991-92 budget.

At the same time, I am not going to stand in my place and, simply to take off some immediate heat, say that people should not worry and that we will reduce the deficit more than is indicated in the out years in the 1991-92 budget, because I do not think we are going to be able to do that unless there is a much more buoyant recovery in the economy than I think there is going to be.

RETAIL STORE LEGISLATION

Mr Carr: My question is to the Solicitor General. I quote from the throne speech to start off with, and we are going back a year or so ago: "It is a government that will listen to the people and respond to their needs to the best of its ability."

There is a group of drugstore workers who have attempted to make their views known. They appeared before the standing committee on administration of justice. They wrote to the Solicitor General and they have met with him. They have taken out full-page ads in the papers. They have given him about 20,000 petitions. They have protested in front of the Legislature. They have confronted him as well as the Premier in the alley. Last night they were at the Premier's office protesting. Why will the Solicitor General not listen to the people and change his bill that discriminates against drugstores that are over 7,500 square feet?

Hon Mr Pilkey: In the amendments presented by this government, Bill 115 does not discriminate against those drugstore workers. In fact, the bill and the amendments do not alter the previous legislation brought in by the former government. The promise this party brought to the people of Ontario was for the enactment of a common pause day that could be enjoyed by individuals and families alike, and also worker protection to require that those who wish not to work on Sunday would not have to. There is nothing in the bill or the amendments brought forward by this government that alters the facts for these people, as it was the law for, I believe, the last two or three years.

Mr Carr: I know the Solicitor General is fairly new to the position, but there are his draft regulations on tourism. I will speak slowly so he will understand this. This is his document and if he will look to it and refer to the very bottom of the first page, in clause (a) this government says that if a municipality decides to open—he remembers that he was a mayor; this is a municipality—if they are above 7,500 square feet and decide to open, under the tourism criteria they cannot open.

Let me put it very simply to the Solicitor General: If Toronto decides to open, under the tourism criteria these drugstores cannot open if they are above 7,500 square feet. Will the Solicitor General take a look at these regulations—remember, we are talking about his draft regulations—look at the 7,500 square feet, get an eraser and take that out?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I would like to indicate to the members of the House on this particular issue, because I think it adds great clarity, that drugstores that are providing pharmaceutical, cosmetic and related goods can and are open 52 weeks a year on Sundays in this province. The only caveat there is that they be no larger than 7,500 square feet. All I can indicate to anyone who is a shopper of any ilk at all is that if a drugstore cannot serve the need for pharmaceutical goods in 7,500 square feet, there is something wrong.

Mr Carr: The problem is that they cannot do anything with the square footage. In case he does not know, they cannot close it down. They even wanted to be a little bit practical and said: "We would only sell the things you tell us we can sell on a Sunday and 70% of the things we sell are drug items. We have cash registers that we can program so the only things that will be able to be processed are what you tell us. The advanced technology is such that if somebody tries to take a piece of bread or a Coke, and you does not want to include that, it will not be able to go through the register, those little things that go through and print the money."

This is the situation. The Solicitor General has said continually that he is listening to the people. This is what somebody said, and I have a picture of this lady: "You don't care, Bob"—referring to the Premier—"as long as you have your pockets full, as long as you're chauffeured around all the time. What would you care about the people in this province, trying to look after it, because this province is going to the dogs?" I agree with this lady. It is going to the dogs.

The Solicitor General can decide what needs to be sold. If it needs to be drugs, that can be programmed. He can even tell them what he wants them to sell. My question is this: Will he commit today to letting those drugstores open?

Hon Mr Pilkey: In terms of the comments read by the member, those are obviously extremely objective remarks by that individual that he conveys to the House. I would also like to indicate that if the member opposite believes—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Pilkey: To the second part of the question, I would like to pass along the opinion that if drugstores start back into the roping-off example, or if people are allowed into stores to take products off the shelf and bring them to a cash register to find out they are then rejected by some kind of automated tape, it would certainly create tremendous confusion, disruption and a not very harmonious circumstance in those retail outlets. I can only indicate to members that this party did not campaign or promise amendment to the drugstore issue. It did promise and campaign on a common pause day and worker protection, and we have delivered on that promise.

HEALTH CARE

Mr J. Wilson: In the absence of the Minister of Health, my question is to the Deputy Premier. CKCO-TV reported yesterday that the Ontario Hospital Association says that provincial hospitals are running a total deficit of $200 million, that 3,500 hospital beds, will be closed by the end of March 1992, and that 5,000 full-time positions will be eliminated.

The government is squeezing the hospital system without an effective management plan. The OHA says hospitals are being forced to plan for the future in the dark. Will the Deputy Premier, the person who holds Ontario's purse strings, today table this government's comprehensive plan for controlling health care costs in this province?

Hon Mr Laughren: I think it is important to get a couple of things on the record in this assembly. First of all, when we issued our transfers to our partners in the province last spring, the hospital sector got an increase of about 9.5%, as I recall, which is a fairly substantial increase in funding for hospitals.

Second, the Minister of Health has asked the hospital system in a very direct fashion, in her inimitable way, to live within their budgets. We are not into bailing out hospitals that have deficits. That has been stated categorically to the hospital sector. I think we should understand that there is a lot of money spent on the health care system in this province. We are determined to maintain the best health care system anywhere at the same time as we maintain its costs because I believe as fervently as it is possible to believe that if we are going to save and maintain the principles of medicare in this province, we have to contain its costs as well.

Mr J. Wilson: We would agree that Ontario's health care system needs to be managed more effectively, yet this system is starting to haemorrhage and this government is applying only Band-Aids. The minister has no overall plan for maintaining accessible, quality health care. The OHA president, Dennis Timbrell, told the Globe and Mail that the province has complicated matters by failing to provide clear guidelines on the future of hospitals within the health care system. Mr Timbrell said, "We've got to have some leadership from the ministry, and some very clear policies." When can we expect to see those policies?

Hon Mr Laughren: First of all, when a comprehensive program for managing the hospital system is released it will be released by the Minister of Health and not by me. But I can tell the member that, in particular, the Conservative Party of this province simply cannot rise to its collective feet every day in this Legislature and start demanding that we control the expenditures in the province and then at the very moment we try to effect savings, whether it is the closing of registry offices or the rationalization of the hospital system, complain that we are not doing enough or doing too much.

I do not know whether the Conservative caucus believes we are doing too much to control the cost of health care or whether we are not doing enough. I wish they would tell me which it is.

Mr J. Wilson: I say to the Deputy Premier: Read my lips. I already said to him that we agree Ontario's health care system needs to be managed more effectively. The point is that they do not have a plan in place. They cannot close beds and lay off workers in a piecemeal fashion. The majority of the jobs cut will be in critically needed nursing positions.

The integrity of our system is at risk because we have no clear direction from this government. In fact, the Minister of Health told the district health councils in a letter recently that she is looking to them for leadership. I ask the Deputy Premier, what message does this send out when the Minister of Health is shirking her responsibilities and failing to provide the necessary leadership?

Hon Mr Laughren: When I think of the way in which this Minister of Health conducts herself and works with the health care system compared to the way the honorable Frank Miller used to deal with the health care system, there is no comparison; none whatsoever.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Laughren: I will make sure the balance of my remarks are not provocative.

I would say in a very serious way that the debate around managing the hospital system cannot be conducted simply between the Minister of Health and the OHA. There are other major players in the delivery of health care in this province, including the people who work in the hospitals, the district health councils and the communities in which the hospitals are located.

We are not going back to the old days when the Minister of Health and the OHA simply locked horns to resolve their differences. We live in a different era, a more consultative, collaborative era, and we are not going to go back to the old way of managing the health care system.

SNOW REMOVAL

Mr Mancini: My question is for the Minister of Transportation. Less than two weeks ago, during the estimates debate of the Ministry of Transportation, he assured me that public safety was at the top of his priority list.

Yesterday I spoke to Hector C. King, president of the Armstrong Metis Association. Mr King had called to complain about a situation that developed last Thursday and Friday due to heavy snowfall and, I should say, little or no snow removal by the ministry. Highway 527 between Thunder Bay and Armstrong was left in a deplorable condition.

A regular bus service leaving Thunder Bay on Friday, November 1, at 5:30 pm and scheduled to arrive in Armstrong at 9 pm did not arrive until 3:30 pm the following day, 18½ hours behind schedule. Why was there no snow removal service on this important northern highway? Does this represent the public safety the minister promised us two weeks ago?

Hon Mr Pouliot: The member is quite right. The unreasonable snowstorm that struck Minnesota and Manitoba with a vengeance, the one that originated in western Canada, left fully 95% of the Trans-Canada Highway closed in the month of October.

The member is talking about Armstrong. The riding I represent—and I have an interest here—is 114,000 square miles and extends all the way to Hudson Bay. I have been in Manitouwadge for 26 years and I never blamed the government of the day, be it the Conservatives or the Liberals. I am more aware than anyone else that safety, maintenance, road conditions and a lifeline for the people of the north—of all Ontario—are extremely important components for the Ministry of Transportation. We mean what we say. We do the best under very difficult circumstances when we have two to three feet of snow in October.

Mr Mancini: We were not interested in a weather report about Minnesota. We wanted to know about Thunder Bay to Armstrong.

I spoke with the manager of the bus line and he told me this was the first time in his six years with the bus company that a serious delay had occurred due to the ministry's failure to remove snow on Highway 527. I am talking about a near tragedy in the minister's own riding. I am told that travellers on the bus included two pregnant women and six children under the age of six.

We need to know why the snowplows were not out on Friday, November 1, clearing Highway 527, and why the snowplows did not leave their yards in Armstrong until 9 am Saturday morning. Is this an indication of what we can expect for the rest of this winter? Can the minister tell the Legislature if there have been cuts in the snow removal service for northern Ontario?

Hon Mr Pouliot: I thank the member for his sincere concern regarding not only the riding of Lake Nipigon but all of Ontario. The commitment is there. There has been no curtailment, no cutback in terms of maintenance.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Pouliot: The member has asked me a question; he should have the decency to let me answer. We will do it together. The member should try to be positive for a change; maybe he will like it. Maybe he will find it becoming.

What we have here is a budget that allocates more money than ever before for the building of roads and the maintenance of these roads all across Ontario: $1.1 billion out of a capital budget of $1.9 billion in highway transfer payments to municipalities in maintenance of our roads. We are determined to keep up with the elements and we are doing the very best we can. In fact, jurisdictions across Canada come to Ontario, look at our management system and try to implement our system in compliance with their own jurisdictions.

TOBACCO GROWERS

Mr Villeneuve: My question is of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I am sure the minister is aware of the rumours of a tobacco control board. The same as an LCBO, we will now have a TCBO, and it is creating a lot of anxiety for our tobacco growers.

The government collects more than $1 billion a year in taxes on tobacco sales but is doing literally nothing to protect and assist our tobacco farmers. The joint federal-provincial Redux program was supposed to help tobacco growers take land out of production, yet we hear from the tobacco growers that $14 million of federal money is still there, unused, because the provincial government has abandoned that program. Is it really NDP policy to shut down the entire tobacco growing industry and also the tobacco retailing industry? What has happened to the crop transition team that was helping tobacco farmers a few years ago?

Hon Mr Buchanan: Is there no limit on the number of questions the member can roll into one question? I should have been writing them down, because I have forgotten the one he started with.

In terms of supporting the tobacco industry and the tobacco farmers in particular in this province, this government is concerned, and there are ongoing discussions with our federal counterparts and with the tobacco board. There are ongoing discussions, and we expect to be able to make an announcement this fall.

The member is right that there is federal money left over in the Redux program. We are aware of that. We want to make sure those moneys are made available to the farmers. We want to put in place a long-term program that will assist farmers who wish to get out of tobacco production.

In terms of some of the other points the member made about opening stores, I just ask the member to read the newspaper clipping a little more closely. The Minister of Health was quoted but did not say there was any suggestion or any idea of opening stores. She made comments about concern about tobacco consumption and dealing with that within a strategy for health but did not talk about or agree to any proposal of opening special stores.

Mr Villeneuve: The $14 million of federal money that is idle must be used now. These people cannot even meet their financial obligations. It seems to me that any tobacco control board—and the minister says it will not happen, but there is a mixed message coming from the government—is going to really create a bootlegging industry in the tobacco business. It will encourage a lot more cross-border shopping because, as the minister knows, the purchase of tobacco products is one of the main reasons Ontarians go to the states of New York and Michigan.

The minister is endangering some 14,000 shopkeepers if indeed what the Minister of Health has said comes to fruition. Can the minister assure us today that he will aid the remaining growers in the tobacco industry by returning some of the $14 million that is there and indeed not promote the bootlegging of tobacco products?

Hon Mr Buchanan: I would like to assure the member that we are very much concerned about the interests of tobacco farmers. I am sure the Treasurer is most concerned about any cross-border shopping or bootlegging of cigarette products in Ontario and wants to make sure that he collects all the taxes due to the province.

I believe it is actually $15 million that is left over in the federal program. We want to make sure, again, that the farmers of Ontario get that money. We also want to be able to try and put in our share, though, to ensure that tobacco farmers can get out of the growing of tobacco and have some hope of a reasonable future in this province.

PASSENGER RAIL SERVICE

Mr Farnan: My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Cambridge is among the largest cities in Ontario—indeed, it is among the largest cities in all of Canada—that is without any passenger rail service. It is totally unacceptable for a city the size of Cambridge to be without passenger rail service. It is a community that continues to grow. What has the minister to say to the residents of Cambridge on the issue of passenger rail service?

Hon Mr Pouliot: I thank my colleague and friend the member for Cambridge for the question. It is filled with validity. The grievance voiced by the people of Cambridge is indeed legitimate, and this is what we have done. Many communities wish to avail themselves of GO Transit service. It is a normal reaction, for the service itself is excellent. We have commissioned a study to look at all the needs of the community. The study is near completion and we are hoping to report to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario the findings of that study in rather short order.

Mr Farnan: The people of Cambridge are fed up with studies on this issue. Our request is very modest. There is a train to Guelph. We are asking that that train go on one journey in the morning and one journey in the night to Cambridge. The track is in place. The signals are in place. The station is in place. There is community support. There is a projected ridership for this. Cambridge is waiting and we want that service now.

Hon Mr Pouliot: In his unique fashion, the member for Cambridge reminds all of us of the many compelling reasons why Cambridge should have a GO Transit system.

I will make a commitment to my friend. I know he will appreciate that this administration operates in a most systematic and liberal fashion. Political expediency is not the order of the day. The member would be appalled and shocked if we go back to yesteryear and have political expediency decide who gets what. We are not going to do that.

The study is reaching its final phase. I can promise the member that before the end of the fiscal year, we will be in a better position to inform and say yes or no; yes or no because, not like these people, those are not election promises. The study will find all the compelling reasons we will acquiesce to what the member is asking for. I thank the member for his question and I would be more than willing to go and talk to him right after question period.

HEALTH CARE

Mrs Sullivan: My question is for the Deputy Premier. He knows that 2,300 people have already been laid off permanently in our hospitals and that this number will double over the next six months. He knows that beds will close in communities in which there are no alternatives, no other places for certain kinds of health service delivery, no chronic care facilities, limited or no home care facilities and no ambulatory care service that meets the needs in communities in many places in Ontario.

The Treasurer and Deputy Premier says he provides 9.5% in transfers; indeed, the operating transfers were 6% in 1996. Hospitals throughout the province are eliminating beds, they are cutting services, they are curtailing access and they are chopping jobs. I would like to know and the people of Ontario would like to know according to what premises are the hospitals to do those things? What are the standards of service that the Treasurer is requiring hospitals provide, and what are the standards of services that people across Ontario can expect?

Mr Bradley: Good question.

Hon Mr Laughren: Yes, it is indeed a good question. Some of the specifics that the member opposite is seeking could be better coming from the Minister of Health. But I will try to respond to the member in a very general way.

I think all of us appreciate the fact that the cost of the health care system cannot continue to grow the way it has in the past. We simply cannot sustain that level of growth in the health care system unless we rationalize health care. The Minister of Health has already taken some actions such as the removal of electrolysis from OHIP and restricting out-of-province expenditures, which I think are very responsible decisions on the part of the minister.

When we talk about the hospital sector itself, I think it is terribly important that the Ministry of Health, in conjunction with the Ontario Hospital Association, the district health councils, the communities and the people who work at those hospitals, sit down and work out the best way to deliver the most essential service there is in this province. We are determined to do that in the most appropriate way possible, but I hasten to add, we simply cannot sit back and just let her rip when it comes to the escalation in the cost of the delivery of health care in the province. We simply cannot do that if we are going to control the cost of health care.

Mrs Sullivan: It seems to me from the response of the measurer that hospitals indeed have a right to feel very concerned about what this government's view of their place is in the health care system and in the management of health care.

I would like to review, in posing my next question, some of the things that hospitals see facing them. When the agreement with the Ontario Medical Association was signed, it provided for a hierarchy that left hospitals out. Hospitals were recently, just last week, left off the distribution list for the long-term care consultative document. There have been no transition funds announced for the hospitals, which require them to deal with the risk, the questions of growth and the questions of safety in their communities.

Seventy five million dollars has been taken out of the hospital capital budget. Less than half of the moneys that were required to meet the pay equity requirements for hospitals are going to be provided. There has been no money for the nurses' settlements, nor for any additional wage increases for other employees. The hospitals have been told as of last week that district health councils will be providing the advice to the minister in relationship to hospital planning.

The Speaker: Does the member have a supplementary?

Mrs Sullivan: I have a supplementary, Mr Speaker. When over 50% of our hospitals are facing enormous deficits, the Deputy Premier cannot tell me that all the fault lies with the hospitals. He cannot tell me that all the hospitals are badly managed.

The Speaker: Would the member please place her question.

Mrs Sullivan: When will this government bring the hospitals back into the management of the health care system and provide them the funding to do so?

Hon Mr Laughren: The member opposite says the hospitals should be concerned about their plight. Of course they should be concerned; we all should be. But I think simply to walk away from the problem and say, "Whatever your deficit is, here's the money," surely is not the answer. I do not think the member opposite would come out and say that. She might imply it in her question, but I do not think she would support that kind of action either.

When it comes to the capital budget, the reduction in the capital budget that we anticipated this year was not because we are pulling back; it was simply because those expenditures would not be made this year in any case. That money was not going to be—

Mr Elston: Because you didn't approve it. Come on, Floyd.

Hon Mr Laughren: No, that is simply not the case. We announced that there was going to be $125 million for pay equity in the broad public sector. That commitment remains. No other jurisdiction has made that commitment. As far as the nurses' settlement is concerned, we indicated to the hospitals that the nurses' settlement was to be rolled into the 9.5% increase they received in their funding.

Mrs Sullivan: Six per cent.

Hon Mr Laughren: No, the 9.5% that they received.

Finally, Mr Speaker—I can see you are getting edgy—I want to assure the member that the hospital system in this province simply must be rationalized. I understand there are 700 or 800 empty hospital beds in Metro at any given time. We need to rationalize the health care system, and we are determined to make that happen.

COURT ACTION

Mr Harnick: My question is to the Attorney General. Last week, an action was commenced under the auspices of the Canadian Jewish Congress regarding school funding. The facts in this lawsuit are not in dispute; it is purely a legal issue. Will the Attorney General refer this matter to the Court of Appeal to save expense and time for all the litigants, including the taxpayers of Ontario?

Hon Mr Hampton: I can tell the member that after some consultation with the Canadian Jewish Congress, we indicated to them that we would not be referring the matter to the Court of Appeal.

Mr Harnick: Why not? The facts are not in dispute; it is strictly a legal issue. Why is the Attorney General putting the parties, including the representatives of his ministry, through a full trial when it can be sent right to the Court of Appeal, where it is going to end up regardless of the outcome of the trial in the trial court?

Hon Mr Hampton: I can tell the honourable member that senior counsel in the civil law division and in the constitutional law division of the Ministry of the Attorney General looked at the arguments that the Canadian Jewish Congress was advancing, and after a very thorough review, the view was that the arguments were not in any way substantially dissimilar from the arguments that were advanced in a court action, which the former government was very familiar with. Therefore, given that the arguments were substantially the same, the feeling was that there would be no benefit in referring this directly to the Court of Appeal.

NORTHERN LIBRARY SERVICES

Mr Wood: My question is to the Minister of Culture and Communications. In these tough economic times, northern communities are being hit hard. It is important to remember that they rely on their public libraries to provide free access to information and cultural resources. I understand the public library services in the north are being eroded. What is her ministry doing to counter this trend?

Hon Mrs Haslam: First off, I would like to assure my colleague that I do recognize the very special economic and geographic problems facing northern Ontario libraries. The vast majority serve communities of under 5,000 people. Many are isolated and have a small tax base and limited municipal support. The Ontario library service north, which supports northern libraries, receives $2 million out of a total of $7 million of the OLS budget from the ministry while serving only 8% of the population.

I have just approved a grant of $100,000 to the OLS north to continue to buy books that will supplement the collections of very small libraries in the north. While I recognize the many issues of inequality in the north, I believe we are providing the best and most equitable library service that we can currently afford.

Mr Wood: I understand the report of the Advisory Committee on Finance Matters to the Minister of Municipal Affairs on the provincial-municipal financial relationship, otherwise known as the Ballinger-Hopcroft report, recommends the deconditionalization of grants to many municipal agencies. Those agencies include public libraries. What is the minister's position on the initiative, keeping in mind that the whole move would seriously damage public library service in the north?

Hon Mrs Haslam: The Ballinger-Hopcroft report is, as the member mentioned, an advisory report to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and does contain many sweeping recommendations that will require considerable debate. My position continues to be that the per-household grants provided by my ministry will be paid directly to library boards for the provision of library service as required under section 30 of the Public Libraries Act. I anticipate no change in this position.

POLICE SERVICES

Mr Conway: My question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns policing by the Ontario Provincial Police in my part of rural Ontario and I gather in other parts of the province as well.

On the front page of this week's Eganville Leader, which is a very well read weekly newspaper serving my county, it is reported that the Killaloe OPP detachment, which serves a very large rural section of west Renfrew county, is now living with the following constraint, namely, police cruisers will be limited to not more than 108 kilometres per eight-hour shift. Can the minister confirm that is happening, and is he aware what that kind of constraint will mean to policing in rural Ontario?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I cannot attest to specific knowledge on that specific jurisdiction that the member raises his ear-nest concerns about. I can tell him that because of budget constraints that face the entire government, the OPP, as well as all functions within the Ministry of the Solicitor General and the Ministry of Correctional Services, have been asked to review their circumstances. I do know that Commissioner O'Grady has implemented certain operational requirements to try to comply with the budget restraint and with, I believe, a rather severe shortfall that exists within the OPP presently.

Mr Conway: The Eganville Leader report makes very plain that the force is struggling with very real service cuts in my part of Ontario. I note that the Lindsay Daily Post on September 30, 1991, contains the following paragraph: "People in Bobcaygeon, Dunsford and Woodville have been asking for increased police presence. 'But [quoting Lindsay OPP Staff Sergeant Jack Watkins] the safety of these communities in Victoria county is being threatened by these cutbacks.'"

It is quite clear from these two references, and the provincial press is replete with several others, that the budgetary problems at the OPP are serious and palpable and are having a real and negative effect on rural communities, whether they are in Killaloe or Eganville in Renfrew county or in Bobcaygeon or Woodville in Victoria county. Is the minister aware that the public is increasingly concerned about what this is doing in terms of safety and security in these rural communities, and what particular measures does he intend to initiate to alleviate this real and significant concern?

Hon Mr Pilkey: An expenditure reduction plan has been implemented to contain costs, but without compromising the Ontario Provincial Police's ability to serve the public. As I indicated, the OPP have forecast a financial deficit for this fiscal year. It has been pressured as a result of a variety of cost increases. There are cost-cutting measures by the commissioner that he has directed. We hope they are of a temporary nature, but I am assured that none of those particular expenditure reductions will compromise the OPP's ability to serve the public in a safe and competent fashion.

PAY EQUITY

Mrs Cunningham: My question is for the Minister of Colleges and Universities. In the 1991 budget the Treasurer announced he will make available $125 million to assist our major transfer payments on the issue of pay equity, talking about municipalities, school boards, hospitals and universities and colleges, and they are looking for these pay equity adjustments now. It is my understanding some of the institutions already have them.

Rumours are circulating that the colleges and universities will be receiving only 50% of the amount they were originally promised. Could the minister clarify in this house exactly what was promised, whether they will be getting only 50% of that, and when he will be making the transfer payments for pay equity to the colleges and universities of this province?

Hon Mr Allen: I cannot answer the final part of that question, which is to give a date at which the information will be relayed to the institutions, institution by institution, in terms of the pay equity transfer each of them will receive. I can tell the member that the original allocation in the budget of $125 million for pay equity in the broader public sector is still in place and will be devoted entirely to that objective.

What I also must tell the member, however, is that a portion of that has been set aside for the calculation around proportional value of pay equity to apply to some sectors of employment in the broader public sector. That does mean the initial payment that will be made to the transfer partners will go ahead at a somewhat lower rate of transfer for the pay equity payment to those institutions.

Mrs Cunningham: I do not think the minister answered the question, so I am going to give him another opportunity. I have to have an answer because I have been asked to get it, and I want the minister to respond as early as he can, with numbers. I am not sure what he promised the colleges and universities. I have read three different announcements and I cannot find that number, so I need to know what was promised.

I also need to know, and I think the colleges and universities need to know, what they are probably going to get. I suppose if the minister is going to stand up in the house in the next week or two and tell them they are going to get the money, that is fine, but they have a responsibility to provide the education to our students and preplanning a budget is very important. Could the minister please tell us what he promised, whether or not the rumour is true—that is, the 50%—and if he does not want to say when, I will be happy with the answer to the first two parts.

Hon Mr Allen: The announcement will be made in some detail by the Treasurer very shortly and it is not my responsibility to give that detail. I have been asked the very same question by the member, with the same concern. What I will tell her in terms of further detail is that in addition to the 7.3% transfer announcement, there was indicated a 0.7% add-on that would relate to the pay equity transfer overall. It is not my responsibility at this point in time to make the specific announcement as to what that difference will be, but the institutions will know very shortly.

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

Mr J. Wilson: I have the pleasure of presenting a petition to the Legislature of Ontario that reads as follows:

"Whereas the Queen of Canada has long been a symbol of national unity for Canadians from all walks of life and from all ethnic backgrounds;

"Whereas the people of Canada are currently facing a constitutional crisis which could potentially result in the breakup of the federation and are in need of unifying symbols;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to restore the oath to the Queen for Ontario's police officers."

I have affixed my name to this petition and it is also signed by a number of good residents of the town of Stayner.

The Speaker: Reports by committees?

WITHDRAWAL OF BILL 149

The Speaker: Before introduction of bills, on Tuesday, November 5, the member for Parry Sound introduced a bill entitled An Act respecting the Amalgamation of Municipalities in the Districts of Nipissing and Parry Sound. It has been brought to my attention that this bill is in a unilingual format only, which is contrary to subsection 3(2) of the French Language Services Act, 1986. I must advise all honourable members that this matter contravenes section 37(d) of our standing orders in that it is in improper form. I must therefore rule that this bill is out of order and must be omitted from the order paper.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

LABOUR SPONSORED VENTURE CAPITAL CORPORATIONS ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR LES CORPORATIONS À CAPITAL DE RISQUE DE TRAVAILLEURS

Ms Wark-Martyn moved first reading of Bill 150, An Act to provide for the Creation and Registration of Labour Sponsored Venture Capital Corporations to Invest in Eligible Ontario Businesses and to make certain other amendments.

M. Wark-Martyn propose la première lecture du projet de loi 150, Loi prévoyant la création et l'inscription de corporations à capital de risque de travailleurs aux fins d'investissement dans des entreprises ontariennes admissibles et apportant des modifications corrélatives.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Hon Ms Wark-Martyn: This bill is an act to support labour-sponsored venture capital corporations investing in eligible Ontario businesses. This is the government's first initiative designed to deal with two important issues raised in the 1991 Ontario budget, the need to promote investment in industries to enable them to compete and grow in the Ontario market and the need to provide opportunities for workers to get involved in and initiate economic change.

The act proposes to set up the Ontario investment and worker ownership program. It has two parts: the labour-sponsored investment fund, which offers a 20% tax credit for eligible investors—this credit is based on existing federal legislation that offers investors a matching 20% federal tax credit—and the Employee Ownership Labour Sponsored Venture Capital Corp, which offers a provincial tax credit to workers investing in the corporation they work for as part of an employee buyout plan or company restructuring.

This bill also contains certain other provisions required for administration of the act. By working together, business, labour and government will find economic solutions for Ontario. This bill is an example of this government's commitment to that goal.

Mr Stockwell: Mr Speaker, may I request unanimous consent to introduce the report from the standing committee on government agencies which was somehow omitted?

The Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent to revert to reports by committees?

Agreed to.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Mr Stockwell from the standing committee on government agencies presented the committee's 17th report.

The Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 104(g)(11), the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ONTARIO MEDICAL ASSOCIATION DUES ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR LES COTISATIONS DE L'ONTARIO MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 135, An Act to provide for the Payment of Physicians' Dues and Other Amounts to the Ontario Medical Association.

Suite du débat ajourné visant la motion de deuxième lecture du projet de loi 135, Loi prévoyant le paiement des cotisations des médecins et d'autres montants à l'Ontario Medical Association.

Mrs Marland: I am happy to have a further opportunity to complete the comments I was in the process of making yesterday afternoon on Bill 135, An Act to provide for the Payment of Physicians' Dues and Other Amounts to the Ontario Medical Association. When I was talking yesterday, I was saying to my colleagues in this House that I hope they remain healthy, because as long as they are healthy and do not need the health care system, the impact of what is going on today with the health care system will never touch them; but should they need the health care system, then they will realize in a personal way exactly what is going on in Ontario today.

Yesterday, when we were talking about Bill 135, we were talking about the government collecting dues for physicians in this province to belong to the Ontario Medical Association. We also were making very clear the fact that now the Ontario Medical Association is nothing more or less than a union. This professional association has become unionized, with the right to arbitrate what its fees will be for services. We recognize it is all part of this famous agreement that was signed in May of this year between the Ontario government and the Ontario Medical Association.

One of the things I tried to address yesterday was the very real concern I have for the fact that all this is on the surface and nobody really realizes what the impact is going to be underneath. One of the examples of the impact is contained in a letter I wish to read into the record. What all of us are concerned about in this province is not only the quality of health care but also the cost of health care and this letter very clearly gives an example of one specialty where the cost of health care will increase because of this legislation and the part it forms of the total agreement between the OMA and the government.

The letter is on the letterhead of the Rudd Clinic and is dated July 19, 1991. Interestingly enough, the letter is addressed to Dr Tom Dixon, chairman of the board of the Ontario Medical Association:

"Dear Dr Dixon:

"I would like to present the following reasons why and also my colleagues at the Rudd Clinic should be exempt from the threshold limits.

"I understand that your main reason for exempting doctors or groups is in cases of specialties where there are insufficient doctors to service the community, where the service is unique and where under-serviced areas are taken care of.

"I would think that other very important considerations to government should be whether maintaining the status quo saves the taxpayer money and still maintains the quality of service with equal availability to all.

"First, our clinic certainly is unique. We have five colorectal surgeons who do nothing else but colorectal surgical procedures. There is no other clinic like this in Canada. Because of the way we are set up, with our equipment and experience, we are able to do a lot of procedures in the clinic which almost all other surgeons do in the hospital.

"As evidence of this, we service approximately 3,000 referring doctors, who refer patients from all parts of the province and from every university centre and hospital in Toronto.

"We have made great efforts to teach our techniques to others, but it is hard to duplicate our results without our extensive equipment and well-trained staff; hence, our clinic remains unique.

"There are only a few colorectal surgeons in Canada let alone Ontario. This is not enough by a long way. There is little chance for many more colorectal surgeons in the future as there is no significant university training program in Canada. We are an underserved specialty. We cannot afford to lose any colorectal surgeons.

"Second, we service all Ontario, including the underserved areas of Ontario—especially the north—Kapusking, North Bay, Thunder Bay, etc. We see many patients from Ottawa to Sault Ste Marie.

"Third, we have saved government many, many tens of millions of dollars. We do many surgical procedures in the clinic which normally are done in the hospital (eg, anal haemorrhoids, fissures, anal lesions, most fistulae and colonoscopies and polypectomies). In the large number of patients we have treated just for one of these (eg, haemorrhoids) we have saved the government over $30 million by keeping the patients out of hospital and working. This figure increases proportionately when all the other techniques (and especially colonoscopy) are included since all of these are done in our clinic and out of hospital. The savings to government in hospital beds alone is staggering and must be an important consideration to government and taxpayer and voter.

"There is no question but that if I and my colleagues were subjected to threshold limits, we would see fewer patients, have the rest seen by less experienced doctors and the whole effect would be inferior-quality care for many of the patients who come from all over Ontario to benefit from the expertise in our specialized clinic. We don't mind contributing to our high overhead because we want the best equipment, etc, for our patients; it does give the best results. It does not seem logical or desirable to penalize those who are helping keep the quality of medicine high, for which Ontario can be proud.

"We are unique. We are in a specialty which has very few specialists, and we see many patients from underserved communities in Ontario. We save government huge amounts of money and have a very large, loyal and happy group of patients who appreciate our work. They are taxpayers and voters. I hope we will be allowed to continue this service.

"If there are other considerations you wish me to address, please let me know.

"I hope you will look favourably on my request to exempt myself and my colleagues at the Rudd Clinic.

"Yours sincerely,

"W. W. H. Rudd, MD, FRCS (C), FACS."

That is a very significant letter, and it is only one area of specialty. This specialist is trying to say that his particular practice of medicine for the health care of his patients in this province is unique. While it is unique, it is saving the government, and therefore the taxpayers of this province, millions of dollars. The alternative to his practice is that patients are hospitalized and they lose time from their places of employment. So we not only have people away from their places of employment; we have the daily cost of their being in hospital.

This practice is one of those being addressed in the new agreement between the OMA and the government of Ontario. The people in his practice are included in Bill 135, which is before us today. They are very special physicians who now will have their Ontario Medical Association dues taken out of their billings. I do not think that was necessary for these particular doctors. I think they were more than happy, as most of the doctors in this province were, to pay their own professional association dues, just as I am quite confident that most of the doctors in this province were quite happy to pay their own malpractice insurance. Physicians and surgeons around this province have been paying their own malpractice insurance for a very long time. They accept that as a cost of doing business.

Interjection.

Mrs Marland: Mr Speaker, every time I speak in this House, the member for Yorkview interjects, and I take strong exception to it. If he wishes to make a contribution to this debate, he should arrange with his whip to get on his own speaking roster.

The Speaker: Indeed, the member for Yorkview should know that interjections are out of order. Of course it will be helpful if those who are speaking address their remarks to the Chair.

Mrs Marland: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I will address my remarks to you.

What is happening here is a big game. It is a game being played at the expense of the health of the people who live in this province when we say to doctors: "We're going to control you. We're now going to unionize you. We're now going to force your professional association to come to the bargaining table with us, the socialist government, because that way we can control how much you earn."

I thought we lived in Ontario, in the free country of Canada. I did not really think we were going to regress into pure socialism, the like of which has now been discontinued in eastern European countries.

What has happened with Bill 135, as part of the overall agreement the physicians of this province have been forced into, is that they are now part of a union. The irony is that when the physicians of this province were young men and women deciding what they wanted to do with their careers and their lives in terms of a vocation, I am sure, like all of us, they looked at many options for employment. Those who chose medicine did not choose the practice of medicine to become members of a union. They chose the practice of medicine in order to maintain the health of people. They chose the practice of medicine because they wished to serve in the most human way possible, which is to help people live healthy lives, help people regain health if they are in poor health, perform surgical procedures to correct problems people have that are able to be remedied with surgical procedures.

Whatever area of practice of medicine these young men and women chose when they entered that profession, it was because they wanted to serve the public in that capacity. They are not business people, for the most part. I think any doctor in this province will tell us that if they had wanted to be business people, they would have gone into a business field. They chose medicine because they wanted to serve that basic human need directly with their patients, that of preserving and recovering good health.

But the way doctors have been treated in this province has now resulted in their all giving up. They have been pushed so far by the governments of this province that they say: "What's the use? We might as well tell our professional association"—the Ontario Medical Association—"to bargain the best deal it can with the government, because we're now unionized government employees."

We are killing the very essence of their professional ethic by treating them the way we do. If the government does not care about doctors, that is fine. But I care about people, and I care about the people of this province who will end up paying the penalty for the way we have treated our doctors, our specialists and our physicians in this province.

I remember standing in this House during that lengthy debate on Bill 94 in December 1986, when I talked about children in my riding who needed very special surgery on their faces and on their heads. One of the best specialists at that time was just in the process of leaving the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto to go and practise in Houston, Texas. Ironically, one of the reasons he was leaving was because he was being so controlled here by that legislation that he would not be allowed to practise the number of hours that he wanted to. He would not be allowed to serve those patients to the extent that he wanted to.

Mr White: He came back.

Mrs Marland: He did not have that freedom. Because of that he decided, "What's the point?" He would move to Houston, Texas, where he could work whatever hours he wanted.

Mr White: Why did he come back?

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): Order. The member for Durham Centre contributes nothing to the process of this House with this kind of interjection. Please give the floor to the speaker.

Mrs Marland: I appreciate that, Mr Speaker. Thank you.

This individual surgeon wanted to dedicate his life to his very special surgery. I am talking about children who are born with tremendous deformities. Through his expertise, his particular dedication and his skill, and all the investment that he had made of his life to obtain that level of ability, he was able to operate on these young babies and young children to give them an opportunity to live normal lives.

Because of what was happening to him in Ontario, because of the attitude that doctors are not any different from anybody else—we must control them and now ultimately we must unionize them—we have lost hundreds of our specialists. I am just giving that doctor as an example.

We are now losing those specialists who had been teachers in our university hospitals. Why would they bother trying to teach medicine when the practice of medicine in Ontario has become, in the mind, thinking and philosophy of this socialist government, nothing more or less than people who work on a shop floor in a factory? The people who choose the practice of medicine for their career and profession are the people each one of us will be looking for if that need has to be met personally or by a member of our family.

I know very well that when we need that specialized kind of health care, none of us wants to settle for anyone but the best. We only have one chance at life, and life itself is so fragile that when we start to lose our health, we want the best health care possible. We are saying to the physicians and specialists of this province that we are going to treat them like any other unionized group. We are going to tell them how much they can earn, regardless of how much it costs them to practise.

Dr Rudd, whose letter I read into the record a few moments ago, spends millions of dollars on his specialized fibre optic equipment. That is his own capital cost; that is how he chooses to practise. While he is practising and able to give that service to his patients, he is saving the taxpayers money because he is keeping them out of the hospital. Otherwise, that procedure would be done in the hospital.

Now we are saying to them that we are going to take their Ontario Medical Association dues out of the billing we receive from them. It is almost as though the government does not trust the physicians. Is it such a big deal that the government has to control them by saying one of the things we have to do is make sure we get those OMA dues in? It is something like $1,000 per physician. I would really like to know how many physicians in this province refuse to pay their $1,000, but it is such a big deal that we are in this House today discussing a piece of legislation that is an insult to the medical practitioners in this province.

More than that, it is an insult to all those people in the province today who are suffering all kinds of emergency situations, whether we are talking about housing, food or jobs—all the things this socialist government is always yelling about. They are always saying we must help the workers and save the jobs. What are we doing today? We are dealing with a piece of legislation that has a system of collecting dues to the Ontario Medical Association from the physicians of this province.

Is this a priority of the government? In November 1991, when people are without food, homes and jobs and we have an economy in a recession, the only thing this government can come up with for a piece of legislation before this House is a bill dealing with collecting professional dues from doctors. Is that the priority of the government?

I simply place the question, because the answer is very obvious. The irony goes even further because, as I think I mentioned yesterday, even though it is compulsory that these dues and assessments come from all practising physicians, it is not compulsory that they are members of the association. It is only compulsory that the government collect the money. It is voluntary whether those physicians are actually members of the Ontario Medical Association.

It is depressing when we try to understand what it is that this socialist government wants out of the doctors and the health care providers of this province. We have invested millions of dollars building our hospitals, building additions to our hospitals and building new hospitals in remote areas. While we have made this tremendous capital investment over the years in this province, this government is saying it is okay for hospitals to close hospital beds and have nurses out of work and patients waiting on stretchers in hallways because there are no beds for them. We are dealing with this situation on a daily basis, and I can give the minister names of patients in my riding who cannot access the health care they need because the hospital has just made another cutback.

We talked about 250 beds last week at the Toronto Hospital. We had 30 beds in the Mississauga Hospital two weeks before that. Psychiatric patients are unable to access the kind of in-hospital care they need because there are no beds for them.

We heard yesterday from the Minister of Health when she answered the question about the request for the new rug for schizophrenic patients. We heard that they are looking at it but they have not decided yet and she mentioned something about cost. If somebody can be kept out of hospital by paying for his drugs, does it not make sense to spend the money on the drugs rather than have him hospitalized at the daily cost of a hospital bed?

Here we are with all these problems, yet today we are discussing who will collect the dues for the OMA on behalf of the physicians in this province. To say it is okay to treat the physicians as employees of the government, to say it is okay that they are unionized, I suggest, is handing the responsibility of health care in this province to an unknown quantity.

If we are going to say they can have binding arbitration in the future in the settlement of what those professional fees will be for medical services in this province, then we are saying this government really does not care, because it will not have that responsibility. There will be an arbitrator somewhere who will decide what medical services are worth in this province. That is a black day for Ontario, Mr. Speaker, because you and I will decide what health care services are worth in this province when we need them.

The way we are treating the medical profession through this agreement between the government and the Ontario Medical Association is unacceptable; it is deplorable. When people say, "The Ontario Medical Association signed this, they agreed to it," of course they agreed to it—they were pushed to the wall. They had no other choice at this point.

When you cap the income of physicians and specialists at an arbitrary amount, regardless of what their overhead is, then we really are dealing with something with blinkers on. When government members look at an operation like the Rudd Clinic and say its billings will be capped at $400,000 and they do not care whether it costs them $250,000, $300,000 or $350,000 a year to operate—I have no idea what the figures are, but by the equipment it has, government members know there is a tremendous investment and cost of operation. But if we do not care about that we say, "Okay, the billing is still limited at $400,000." As I said yesterday, we thought it was okay to pay the chairman of Ontario Hydro $400,000, or even $230,000 or whatever his new, revised figure is, and he does not have any overhead at all. Where is the comparison? Where is the logic? Where is the fairness? There is none.

If I was a young person today I would think twice about entering the practice of medicine in this province. Why would I invest 10 or 12 years of my life going to school to be a medical specialist in surgery or psychiatry, whatever area, and then have the government control my income? We do not do it with anybody else—or is that what is coming? Is that what is going to happen next, that we are going to control all the other professions?

Perhaps Bill 135 is only the beginning of the written enforcement of the philosophy of this socialist government. Maybe their plan is to unionize all the professions in this province and control what everybody earns. Maybe that is the road we are now on. If it is, then we are going to see a very large exodus of professionals from this province, from many professions, not only the practice of medicine. If they are saying as a socialist government, "We're going to control everything you do because we're paying your salaries. We're not going to pay you too much; we're going to cap it at this amount," then the only people who lose are the patients and the people of this province.

Members had better get sick in the first half of the year, the first two thirds of the year or however long it takes for those individual practitioners to meet that $400,000 in their billing, because when they meet that $400,000 in their billing and their overhead may be $300,000, why would they continue practising that year? Members had better make sure they are not looking for a specialist in the latter part of the year with the kind of legislation that is coming down.

Bill 135 is in my opinion the tip of the iceberg when we start forcing one group of professionals in this province to pay their professional association dues through the billings they send to the province. People do not understand that doctors get paid by the government only. Doctors do not have any other source of income from the practice of medicine except from the government. People do not understand that today. They today do not understand that the government has made doctors in all specialties and all practice of medicine government employees, civil servants, whatever word members want to use to describe them. That is what they are.

Now we are saying, "We don't even trust you to pay your professional association dues, so we're going to take them out of your salary." I do not think the majority of physicians in this province realize the significance of this legislation. Do members know why? The majority of physicians in this province are so dedicated and so committed to the profession they have chosen that they spend all their time looking after sick people. They are not up to all these games and pieces of legislation that come from this socialist government. They do not have time for that. They are saving lives and looking after sick people. They do not have time to get into the gamesmanship that has been going on with this socialist government and the Ontario Medical Association. They will not find out until they have done their billings that their OMA fees are now deducted. They did not have a problem paying them themselves anyway. That is the issue.

I do not think there is any point in continuing this debate on this unnecessary bill any further. The socialist members in this House could not care less. The fact remains that Bill 135 is only the beginning of the end. As we deal with each piece of legislation that comes through, it further penalizes health care in this province by pointing a finger at one group that forms a percentage of the overall cost of health care and says: "It is those rotten doctors that drive the cost of medicine in this province. That's why we've got to control them and that's why we've got to cap them."

Why do we not let them continue paying their professional dues? Why do we not let them continue paying their own malpractice insurance? That is not a problem for them. Instead of that, we are going to say, "You can only practise so much at such and such a rate, and then after that we control you." It is a very sad day.

Mr Sutherland: It is a pleasure for me to respond to the member for Mississauga South. The member is somehow implying that there is something wrong with a majority of a group deciding that they want to pay membership fees to an organization, namely, the OMA. The member has tried to imply somehow that this deal was coerced upon the doctors. As we know, the doctors voted in a democratic election where they had the opportunity to participate. Those who wanted to participate did so and they ratified this deal. The doctors did not have to ratify this deal. Their representatives did not have to negotiate it either. So I find that a little bit disturbing.

The member for Mississauga South also talked about doctors who are in teaching hospitals and leaving this province and going to other provinces. I want to remind her that the reason many of those doctors are leaving is not the most recent deal. The reason many of those doctors are leaving is that our post-secondary education system has been seriously underfunded, starting in 1977-78 when her party was in power.

I also want to say that I know many of the doctors—one of my former roommates from university is in medical school—are very dedicated and caring individuals and are very concerned about health care. There is no doubt about that and I do not think anyone questions that.

I will wait to see the next time a member of the third party decides to get up and rail at this government about the high cost of expenses and talk about the deficit. We will see whether the member for Mississauga South will be one of those people up talking about the deficit at the same time as this government is working on curbing health care costs.

Mr Frankford: The member for Mississauga South said physicians are going to be pushed to the wall, while I think the Liberals say the physicians are being wrestled to the ceiling. I hope the members on the opposite side will get their act together and decide where we actually are.

We have heard some extraordinary statements about health care from the last speaker. I am really not clear what her position is on universal medicare. I thought her party was for it. I believe the federal party actually supported the Canada Health Act. Clearly it is something that is coming in all over. I think it is a nice opportunity to recognize the wise decision of the voters of Pennsylvania yesterday when they elected a Democratic senator who took a very strong pro-universal medicare position. This follows on the election to Congress of a socialist from Vermont in the elections last year.

The industrialized world is moving in that direction, and I am sure the people who feel they are moving to greener, free-enterprise pastures, which are not that free whatever the member for Mississauga South may imply, are going to be disappointed. In fact, those who emigrate find themselves in a very restricted system.

I really should concentrate on this bill. It is a simple piece of legislation that is part of the thrust to a rational health care system which we need and which can improve on what we have right now.

Mr Bradley: I was wondering, with the money that will take to implement this act—there is always some expense that will take place—whether there will be any money left in the budget of the Ministry of Health for a second CAT scanner for the Niagara region. I look at what the member has said and I know she is very concerned about that. I thought that when she addressed her remarks to this bill, she would look at the potential negative implications of it as they relate to other expenditures within the ministry.

I know that in her area the member is concerned about these matters. I know my colleagues from the Niagara Peninsula are very concerned about these matters and are probably wondering, as well, will the implications of this bill mean that there cannot be a second or third CAT scanner in the Niagara region when people are waiting five or six months to use one, when up in York region at night the dogs and cats can get a CAT scan?

These are the concerns I have. I know the member for Mississauga South, if she had had the time—she did not want to take the entire afternoon—would probably have asked the very same question I have asked. I am sure that in Cambridge they are probably in the streets talking about the fact that there is not a second CAT scanner permitted in the Niagara region, even though it would not cost the Ministry of Health very much money at all. It requires the individual hospitals to foot the cost and the public to raise the capital cost.

I simply raise that. I know the member did not have the time to address that issue and I was pleased to be able to address it myself this afternoon.

Mr Bisson: I listened intently both yesterday and this afternoon in the House to the comments by the member from the third party, the member for Mississauga South. I want to touch on one thing she touched on. I tried to listen to her really well. If there were a coherent message in what she was saying when she kept on embroidering a tapestry, I guess of—I am not going to use the word because it would be unparliamentary, but it was not quite the way it should be.

One of the very strong points she made was that this government was wasting the time—

Mr White: What tapestry? He has lost the thread.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I would ask the member not to leave the House. On several occasions the member for Durham Centre has used the opportunity of exiting the House to make interjections. It is totally unacceptable. We would appreciate it if you cut it out of the process.

Mr White: Mr Speaker, I have not left the House since this afternoon—

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Bisson: I have lost about 20 seconds on the clock. I hope I can get it at the end.

The point she was making was that the government was wasting the legislative time of the House by introducing Bill 135. I took the liberty of going back and taking a look at the last recession we had in Ontario, which was in 1981. I remind members of this House—they do not need to be reminded—that it was a Conservative government that was here at the time. I looked at some of the bills that were before the House in any one week within the month of June. I will just read a few to you, Mr Speaker: the City of Ottawa Road Closing Act, the County Courts Amendment Act, the Executive Council Amendment Act, the George R. Gardiner Museum of Ceramic Art Act, the Legislative Assembly Act, the Liquor Licence Amendment Act, the Live Stock Branding Amendment Act—the list goes on.

The member says we are wasting time speaking about something that is as important as Bill 135 in regard to the health care system. I just point out that when they were in government it was no different. There are acts that you must bring to the House. This is an important piece of legislation and I ask for all the members to support this because it does mean the future of our OHIP system.

Mrs Marland: In response to the member for Oxford who talked about why the doctors were happy to sign this agreement with his socialist government, it is pretty hard to disagree when you have your hands tied behind your back. The doctors settled with this agreement because they had no choice. It was the best they could possibly get for the kind of bargaining they were into. When he talks about the deficit, yes, I will stand up in this House and criticize this deficit, and yes, I will refer to the deficit when we are talking about this kind of legislation because this legislation is going to end up costing us more money because of the way it treats the practice of medicine in this province.

If the member for Oxford did not hear what I was saying, then he could not have been listening. The examples I gave were procedures that one specialist can do that have millions of dollars because they are done in his clinic and not in the hospital. If that is too complicated for him, then there is nothing I can do about it.

As for the member for Scarborough East, who is not in the House at the moment but who was here a moment ago to respond to me, what can I say about him? He is a physician and I think he should be embarrassed to stand in this House and defend this bill or any other of the directions of his socialist government in the way it is treating the health care providers in this province.

Yes, I say to the member for St Catharines, I do have a lot—

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. Please address your remarks through the Chair.

Mrs Marland: Through you, Mr Speaker, I do have a lot more questions and a lot more comments I would have liked to have made today, but being the excellent Speaker you are, I knew you would not let me speak about anything else but Bill 135. That is why I kept very close to it. I simply say that if the member for Cochrane South has nothing better to do than stand up and list a whole lot of 10-year-old bills, then I feel sorry for him too.

Mr Bisson: I am just going to take a couple of minutes. I am not going to go on at great length for a couple of hours such as the previous speaker has taken—within her rights, I must add.

Bill 135 comes down to a couple of very essential points. One of those points is that it is a fact—the member for Mississauga South would not recognize it—that part of the health care cost is the payment of doctors. Every time somebody is sick he or she is treated by a doctor. That obviously has an extreme amount of cost, one that comes to the health care system. If we want to ensure that in the long run we have the dollars necessary to be able to fund the medical care system that Ontarians have grown very fond of over the years, along with other people across the country who enjoy the same kind of benefits in other provinces or territories, I think they would not only ask but would demand governments to be very judicious when it comes to being able to deal with the amount of money we are spending in our medical care system to ensure that in the long run the system is there and that we protect it.

Really, that is what this bill is all about. Back, I think it was, in 1985 doctors felt they wanted to have the ability to be able to bill above the OHIP guidelines. There was the whole extra-billing issue. I understand that. Like anybody else in this province who works for a living, I would always want to be able to get a little bit more for the services we give. But what they were doing at the time was attempting to extract more money from the public than is possible. The government of the day, I think, made the right decision.

Bill 135 basically makes sure that we have a better process by which we can negotiate with our doctors so that at the end we can ensure the dollars are there to be able to not only pay the doctors but pay our nurses, to pay towards the budgets of hospitals or health councils and all the other services that are necessary to deliver the fine health care system we are used to in this province.

The other question that has been raised in debate and that my honourable friend who is just leaving the House, the member for Mississauga South, mentioned is that she has seen this as some sort of bill that speaks to trade unionism, that basically entrenches the right of trade unionism or collective bargaining for doctors.

I do not think that is quite the situation, but the only point I would make is that there is nothing wrong with collective bargaining. Collective bargaining has been part of the democratic process of the nations of the free world for a long time. Why? That system was brought in so that you can bring people together to negotiate with their employer, whoever that employer may be, to get a fair remuneration for the work they do.

What Bill 135 does, very simply, is it makes sure that those doctors who are practising medicine within the province pay their dues to their association. Presently, there is roughly 10% of doctors practising medicine in Ontario who enjoy all the privileges of that association and do not pay their dues. All the bill does is to say, "Listen, if you're going to practise medicine within the province of Ontario and you're going to enjoy the privileges given by your medical association, you should pay those dues."

That was part of a position, I think, that the doctors wanted when they brought to the bargaining table their representatives to make sure that all the doctors within the province pay, and not have a system by which I will not pay, as one doctor, and enjoy all the benefits without having to pay those dues. I think that is something that is quite right, and I think it speaks to the whole question of what it is to work as an association. The more members we have in our association, participating, paying into the membership, the better the job the association will be able to do to have the dollars necessary to service its members.

I think in the long run the additional 10% of doctors paying into the medical association would only provide a better service, not only to the doctors, but I would dare say also for the public they serve.

The other point I just want to get to very quickly is the whole question of the usage in the House with regard to what pieces of legislation we bring to it. I did not get too much of a chance, Mr Speaker, because you were ruling on a matter that was somewhat out of order, and I tend to agree. The whole question is what the member was talking about, that she did not want to see Bill 135 come forward. Why? Because she felt we would be able to deal with more important issues, as she had put it, for the people of this province. Clearly, there are a number of issues that we need to deal with in this province, many of which, if we all had a lifetime, we would never be able to get to.

Bill 135 is an integral part of what this economy is all about. Health care represents the largest expenditure the province spends at any one time, within any one ministry. I think, just roughly, somewhere around $17 billion to $18 billion out of our $50-billion budget goes to health care.

It would seem to me a member who purports to represent the right wing, or the capitalists, as she likes to call herself, would be concerned that we have some opportunity of being able to manage that system. Certainly if I am in the private sector, I am not going to allow a department within my company to run uncontrolled, so that I do not have any say or any control over what is being spent. That is not directly what this bill is doing altogether, but that is what this government is attempting to do through legislation such as this: to put in some good management practices within the particular ministries or within particular services the government offers so that we make sure we have the best use for our dollar.

More specifically, when she talked about the types of bills we are dealing with, yes, we are dealing with a number of bills that are very central to what is happening within the economy of Ontario, but as I say, it is an essential part of what we are doing.

I wonder if I am straying away a little bit from the topic. I am looking at you, Mr Speaker, for direction.

The Acting Speaker: It would be very easy for you to get back on topic, I suggest to you.

Mr Bisson: I let myself go to your indulgence. The point is that in order to be able to make sure we have the money necessary to provide not only health care but all the other services in this province that people have come to expect of their governments, it is very essential that the government put together a good management strategy. Then that strategy will be put together, as well as a good plan to make sure we can get the biggest bang for our dollar with the money we get from the taxpayers of this province. That is what Bill 135 is about. It is simply that.

If a member of the opposition is going to say we should not do these things because they infringe on the rights of doctors, well, I am sorry. Everybody within society has responsibilities and we as members of our society have to live up to those responsibilities one way or another.

I have taken 10 minutes on the clock. With that, I will leave the time to other members.

Mr Mammoliti: I must commend my colleague the member for Cochrane South. I agree with most everything he said in terms of Bill 135. However, I cannot understand the member for Mississauga South, who spoke just before him and basically criticized the doctors.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. Your comments are directed to the speech that was given by the member for Cochrane South, not the member for Mississauga South.

Mr Mammoliti: Yes, I understand that.

In his speech, the member talked a little bit about the doctors, and I got the impression that he meant to say it was a democratic procedure. Being pushed to the wall, as the member for Mississauga South said earlier, is just not the case. I cannot see it being that way. I cannot see it in terms of democracy and what it is all about. In this particular case, that is what it is: democracy. I tend to agree with my colleague the member for Cochrane South when he says democracy is where it is at.

In terms of his views on unions, I tend to agree with him as well. The difference between us and the speaker before him is that we believe unions are where it is at. I certainly believe that. I feel the member for Mississauga South insulted the doctors when they said they belonged to the union. If anything, the union will bring them together and it will be a united front, an understanding of all. That is what unions do. So I would have to agree with my colleague when he talks about unions.

Frankly, I am sticking up for the physicians, because I believe they are here for care.

Mr Conway: I would like to take some time this afternoon to join the debate on Bill 135 and to make some comments about what I think is a very important piece of legislation, not just for the government, not just for the Ontario Medical Association, but for this Legislature and a lot of other interested parties who particularly relate to the government of Ontario in some kind of pecuniary way.

I was not here yesterday to hear the minister's opening statement, although I have taken the time today to look at the transcript of yesterday's legislative debate, and I found what she said quite interesting. Basically, she spoke for what looks like about 45 seconds and had four paragraphs worth of commentary. I think that is probably a good guide for some of the rest of us, but it is also illustrative of how pleased this government must be to see this agreement.

I want to quote the minister's remarks of yesterday, November 5, speaking to Bill 135: "The proposed legislation flows directly from the agreement signed with the Ontario Medical Association"—and the government of Ontario—"earlier this year." I think any understanding of Bill 135 must be put in the context of that framework agreement which the new government signed in May of this year and to which the minister made reference in her statement to this Legislature on May 6, 1991.

I want to begin my remarks this afternoon by just looking back over the last few years at some of the relationships various governments have had with the Ontario Medical Association. It is no secret that the relationship between that government of which I was a part and the Ontario Medical Association was not very good. In fact, it was hostile and very bad on those occasions in 1986 and 1987. I make my observations as well on the basis of having served as the Liberal Party critic for Health in the period from 1977 through 1982. I must say, I never thought I would see the day when we would have a government and a medical association voluntarily committing each other to what we have in Bill 135. In that respect I congratulate the new government, because it has been able to come to an arrangement that other governments were unable neither to contemplate nor to fashion.

I well remember those days years ago when, in a wonderfully stentorian voice, Stephen Lewis would rail at Dick Potter and Frank Miller, and even Bette Stephenson for a few weeks 10, 12 or 15 years ago. He would say, "Minister, why don't you come clean and recognize what you're dealing with? What you're dealing with in the Ontario Medical Association is the most powerful, the most well-financed and the most highly respected labour or trade union in the land." Ministers of Health and Tory colleagues, and I dare say a few Liberals as well, just covered the face of that Niagara of analysis offered by the great Stephen Lewis. It is too bad Stephen Lewis is not here today to celebrate this occasion, because he has been proven right, as he has been elsewhere.

What I would not have imagined, however, is that the day would come when organized medicine would genuflect before not just the public will but an NDP government and voluntarily subscribe to Bill 135. I do not think Stephen Lewis imagined that day would come either, certainly not in his lifetime. Here now, 13 years after Stephen Lewis left this place, he has been proven right in more ways than he might imagine, and I just want to make that observation.

When I read Bill 135 I fantasize, as I rarely do, about what Bette Stephenson must be thinking, what Joan Charbonneau must be saying.

Interjection.

Mr Conway: I say to my friend from Orono, the government is looking for new energy sources. I recommend the following alternative. I think there is a very real alternative built into Bill 135. I suspect we could displace most of the electrical energy of Darlington if we could somehow harness the rage that people like Bette Stephenson and Joan Charbonneau, representing those independent physicians, must feel about Bill 135.

For any members who served here with the former member from York Mills, the redoubtable Dr Stephenson, ask them to reflect on what she must now feel to be legislated into a union. I see some very learned, bespectacled faces underneath the press gallery representing the public service and they have served several governments with distinction. If no one else, at least two of those gentlemen over there will know of what I speak.

I will remember that night in 1986, because the member for Mississauga South referred to it, when the Peterson government with the support of the NDP passed Bill 94, was it? I have a great deal of regard for Dr Stephenson. I do not think anyone here fought with her quite as often as I did, but I will remember that night when for the first and only time in my legislative career I feared for her health, because again, to use another analogy from the energy world, I thought we were going to experience, on this legislative floor, a meltdown. I thought she was literally going to melt down in rage over Bill 94.

I say to my friends in the third party, ably represented by the Acting Speaker, what Dr Stephenson must feel. I would say to my friend the member for S-D-G & East Grenville that it would be interesting to send a copy of Bill 135 with affection to the former member for York Mills, just to see what kind of return post one might receive.

This is a very important day when we have this framework agreement, and as part of that framework agreement, Bill 135. I say it is important not because the NDP has managed this. I think anyone who knows anything about the New Democratic Party would see this as something, as has been mentioned by the previous speaker, the member for Cochrane South and others representing the government, that would be just perfectly sensible and natural to them. I respect that. That we have the leadership, the apparatchiks, at the Ontario Medical Association volunteering to be part of this is a day about which there should be some comment.

I thought it interesting when I read in the May 1990 edition of the Ontario Medical Review, which is the publication of the Ontario Medical Association, some observations in an editorial by none other than my former friend Dr Edward J. Moran, general secretary of the Ontario Medical Association. I should not say "former" friend. We meet very sporadically these days because it has not been a happy time since 1986. I think my own doctor was the president of the Ontario Medical Association that year, and that relationship has certainly been impaired to some considerable extent.

I think it interesting and I read a few paragraphs from the special edition of the Ontario Medical Review, which speaks from the OMA's point of view to the so-called framework agreement. I am sorry the member for Mississauga South is not here, because I do not agree with many of her observations, and I think the member for Cochrane South made some very good points that I do not need to repeat. But in speaking to the framework agreement of which Bill 135 is so central a part, Dr Moran, in his opening editorial in that journal, says:

"Apart from such pragmatic considerations, we must accept the public's right to determine the type of health care system it wants. Through a democratic process, the people of Ontario have decided that physicians are to function in a publicly funded health care system, and that to ensure the system's viability, physicians cannot have the right to unilaterally set their own fees. It is counterproductive to continue to oppose a framework for health care that has been embraced by a majority of Ontarians. Certainly it is the responsibility of physicians to continue to oppose government strategies that harm quality of care and unfairly treat health care providers. But the medical profession also has an obligation to work within, and develop to the best of its ability, the health care system that society has established."

I think that is a very important observation and I commend Dr Moran for it.

We have had a number of elections in which the question of health care has been, if not a central question, an important question. I do agree with the good doctor from Scarborough who made the observation that there is clearly an expression of democratic will. I want to come back to that a little bit later.

I begin my remarks this afternoon by observing that for me, it is significant to see the Ontario Medical Association voluntarily subscribing to the Rand formula, which it has long wanted, but to have it in the way in which Bill 135 presents it, where it is all-encompassing. I suppose that is inherent in any Rand formula. But when I think of some of the more colourful members of the medical profession, some of whom have almost had strokes in my presence—I can think back to days in Brantford and Sarnia, to two most vivid encounters as a Health critic with members of the medical profession a decade ago.

It is a very special day for me here to be able to say that the OMA has been able to bring itself to this point. I repeat: I hope someone is monitoring the blood pressure of some of my friends in the medical profession, because I suspect hell hath no fury like Joan Charbonneau these days on subjects of the kind contained in Bill 135.

Then I look at the agreement and I see some very interesting things. I am struck by the minister's own defence of the agreement. Let me say—I do not know if I have said this before—that I have a very high regard for the new Minister of Health. I think she is a very capable lady and I expect we are going to see a very significant performance on her part. I think she is going to have to live up to that high billing, because anyone who knows anything about the health care debate these days knows that she is sitting on, shall I say, a Mount St Helens of anxiety and concern and tension.

What do we find in the statement made to this Legislature in May of this year as the Minister of Health, the member for Beaches-Woodbine, seeks to explain and defend the framework agreement? I am not going to go into all this again, but it is quite clear from what Dr Moran says in that special edition of the OMA Review that the profession had some very real expectations, and that to a very significant extent they felt they got what they were after in that agreement.

Let me perhaps talk a little bit about what they were after. Again, coming back to the medical association and its special review edition of May 1990, the OMA said there were three things about which it felt very strongly.

First: "The government must accept that the medical profession is an important, crucial participant in the health care system and must work with it co-operatively. It must not act unilaterally." Second: "The government must accept...independent, fair binding arbitration" of the fee negotiation and any dispute that might arise therefrom. Third: "The government must accept that all Ontario doctors, regardless of the method of compensation or practice mode," are entitled to be represented by the OMA.

Those three conditions were deemed by the OMA to be central and what we have in Bill 135 is the meeting of that third condition. I gather that in the discussions it was also indicated that the government had to table this Bill 135 before the end of June 1991, and it did that. I think the actual tabling of this bill was on June 26, 1991.

I want to briefly touch on a couple of the other conditions before coming back to Bill 135. "The government must accept...binding arbitration" of the fee process. Let me deal with that for a moment. There has been a debate for a long time in this Legislature around the whole question of binding arbitration for this particular aspect of the public purse. Doctors have said to me and to others that there is something wrong with a scheme of things where the government gets to be player and referee. To some extent they are correct in that; government is in a conflict of interest.

It troubled me then, as it troubles me now, that it is not as even-handed a process as I would like it to be. Binding arbitration has always been recommended as the way out of this that will relieve the tension. So this government has acceded to binding arbitration on the medical fee account.

My friend the member for Halton Centre, in her excellent assessment of this policy and this legislation yesterday, observed that what we are talking about here is a budgetary allocation of somewhere between $4 billion and $5 billion at the present time. My learned friend underneath the gallery shakes his head in the negative. Perhaps it is not $4 billion and $5 billion, but it is, by my calculation, a very significant account. I think my friend would not nod negatively in that connection.

Taxpayers out there will want to know that the fees paid by taxpayers to medical practitioners through the government of Ontario, the health insurance plan, amount to billions of dollars annually. That is an incontrovertible, incontestable reality. What we have in this policy now is a determination by this government to turn the final determination of that to an outside arbitrator. My friend nods affirmatively.

I just want to make this point, and I make it to all members of this Legislature and I make it with absolute seriousness in such a way that perhaps I will be misunderstood: I hope members of this Legislature understand what the advent of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms has meant to our responsibilities as members. We all, I think, or most of us—outside Sterling Lyon—in 1980 or 1981 said that Pierre Trudeau was more right on that question and that we should have a charter so there would be a clear constraint put on these parliaments, which on occasion do things that are very injurious to the rights of citizens, either individual or collective rights.

We have now almost a decade of experience with the Charter of Rights. This much can be said, and it can be said in a way that is consistent with what its sponsors argued would happen: that the Charter of Rights has in fact significantly constrained legislative and executive power. That is what it was intended to do, so people should not be surprised.

Now we have an advance in one of the most interesting mechanisms used by modern government to settle disputes, particularly around payment and working conditions in vital or essential or controversial sectors of the public or parapublic sectors, namely, binding arbitration. I just want people to think about what that is going to mean. I want individual members to think about what that is going to mean.

I think it is going to mean that the government of the day has essentially abandoned its capacity to make decisions around a multibillion-dollar account. We have done it elsewhere, as others have observed. Government psychiatrists have access to binding arbitration. You, Mr Speaker, will know from your long experience in the great united counties of Glengarry, Stormont and Dundas that firemen have access to binding arbitration. We have it to a certain degree in the teaching profession with certain mechanisms that are provided under Bill 100 that can be triggered to that result. But here we are now granting for the first time the right of an outside party to decide a multibillion-dollar government account.

My observation is simply this: I hope members of the legislature understand what this is going to mean over time to all of us, whether we are the current member for Kenfrew North or Don Mills or whether we are a successor member in Brantford or in Prescott-Russell. Increasingly we are establishing and supporting mechanisms that delegate out a spending authority, and I repeat, in this case on a multibillion-dollar account representing, I think, nearly 10% of the total budget of the province. We are setting ourselves up as duly elected members to essentially tax.

I do not know about you, Mr Speaker, but I did not run on six different occasions to come here and be a taxing authority for a whole bunch of other people who get to set the rates. I believe in the doctrine that he or she who taxes has something to do about setting spending limits or priorities. We are abandoning that right to a significant extent in this bill.

I am sincerely hopeful that the optimistic interpretation around this policy, this framework agreement, is borne out, but in talking to former members of the Schreyer administration in Manitoba—I think it was the Schreyer administration; it may have been Schreyer-Pawley—I do not have a great deal of confidence that it is going to be borne out in an optimistic fashion.

I do not know about you, Mr Speaker, but I repeat, I did not come here to tax so other people could spend what they have to defend in terms of taxation policy. I think there is a linkage. I think the doctrine of accountability means something, and if I spend I should have to tax for that. The people in Durham East or Simcoe Centre should be able to point a finger and say: "Mr Conway, as a member of the Treasury bench, you taxed and you spent. I don't like very much of either. Off with your head." But oh, no, it is getting much more complicated and I do not wonder.

If I were in one of the special interests, if I were an apparatchik at the OMA or at OSSTF or at OPSEU, I would pray for this kind of policy because tactically I could pick off these poor politicians everywhere at different times. I could apply a guerrilla tactic that would bring a government or a legislature to its knees in a way which, quite frankly, to some extent we have seen. I feel very badly for all of us because in a few years' time we are going to have to go back to Barrie and Orono and we are going to have to give an accounting of what has been done in our name and we are going to have to stand there naked in the wind and protest that an arbitrator did it.

I do not know how the members feel about some of those court rulings that have flown from the charter—the charter I support—but they have made my life as a legislator a little more complicated in ways I had not expected. I will be damned if I have to go out and start justifying what Marty Teplitsky will decide when the OMA and the government cannot come to an agreement. If Marty Teplitsky is going to decide, then I want Marty Teplitsky in this Parliament. I find it offensive that this is not going to happen.

I am whistling in the wind, I know, but I am going to tell the members that this policy is a Trojan horse and members of this Legislature on all sides are going to remember the day this framework policy began a new era, as the Minister of Health said that sunny day in May of this year. She is right.

I will say as well that there will be some people listening to this who will say—the NDP apparently says this a lot—"You know, poor old Conway, he's just sucking a vinegar stick. He's so bitter." I am bitter about a few things, I will be quite honest.

Mr White: About what, Sean?

Mr Conway: Well, I have a great respect for the NDP. I have always regarded the NDP as a party a little different than the others. That smear campaign of 1990 still nettles. I think they should feel contaminated by that disgusting smear that besmirches the record and reputation of Ted Jolliffe and Stephen Lewis and Donald MacDonald, but it has been done. I am angry. I am no angel, but I have not done some of the things that were done in that campaign. So if I am a little angry, I hope my anger can be understood.

There are other aspects of that campaign and I want to talk a little bit about those because they are felicitously touched upon in the most recent report of the Ontario Medical Association. I am sure the members gets this. If they do not, they should read it: a wonderful picture of Basil Johnston, the president, a sage-like picture of my friend the general secretary, Dr Moran, a wonderful little section in this report, "Political Professional Activities." I want to read from page 6 of the annual report of the Ontario Medical Association, 1990-91, under the chapter heading "Political Professional Activities":

"The Ontario provincial election campaign of 1990 afforded an opportunity for the Ontario Medical Association to forge alliances with other major provider groups as well. The experience of expressing joint concerns about major governmental shortcomings in the provision of vital health, education and social services in Ontario with representatives of the Ontario Teachers' Federation and the Ontario Public Service Employees Union created a momentum that has continued beyond the election. The result is the emergence of a new group called the Coalition of Health Care Providers, which has as its mandate a broad vision of health care delivery."

I do not want to go on, but let me just say that I think that observation is at least disingenuous. It is incomplete because I think that happy activity produced more than just a new group called a Coalition of Health Care Providers. I think it helped produce the framework agreement. I congratulate the OMA, if for not unduly abandoning itself to the Rand formula, for the not inconsiderable financial gains this framework agreement offers. Not since Larry Grossman a decade ago has the OMA wrestled a government to the ceiling. I want to say they have done it twice in my legislative lifetime.

They have done it, interestingly, at the very time when the province was in the absolute pit of recessionary circumstances, and they have done it not just in the pit of a recession for six months, but in both cases they have extracted first from the Davis government and now from the Rae government by any standard—certainly any recessionary standard—an enormously successful and remunerative multi-year, I think six-year, agreement that cannot be touched.

I just want to observe that if they had to adjust some of their principles for some of their members on the Rand formula, they had to adjust none of their principles in so far as, "We want as much as we can extract from the government and we found another government that is prepared to kneel before us," is concerned.

I read the minister's statement very carefully. This is her statement accompanying the framework agreement this spring. I am quoting the member for Beaches-Woodbine: "Over the last 10 years, payments to fee-for-service physicians have been increasing at an average annual rate of 12%. Even with a fee increase of under 2% in 1988-89—those bad old terrible Grit days—"and a 0% increase in 1989-90 and 1990-91, physician payments in the two years without increases jumped by $400,000 million."

The minister's own statement I think makes a case for a more rigorous agreement than we have before us on the fee account. It is not because I want to penalize doctors. In the main, I agree with a lot of what others have observed. But my salary is a matter of public record. I have no difficulty and I have no intention, I might add, of trotting out a whole range of numbers, but the last year for which we have data is 1989. According to the data I have for 1989, the average GP salary in that year was $184,000, the average specialist was $297,000 and the all-in average was $238,000. That was almost three years ago now, and they are averages and averages are insidious; I accept that.

What have we done in this agreement? In this agreement, the government has agreed, "The agreement provides for a one-time payment in lieu of a fee increase of 2% for each of the last two years, at a cost to the Treasury of $140 million." Moreover, the government has agreed to provide malpractice or, as my friend from Scarborough would like me to refer to it as, liability insurance for the past two years at an additional cost of $84 million. "These one-time payments will, however, not be incorporated in the base for determining future fee increases."

Finally, I make the point that I represent rural eastern Ontario, and we are a deferential lot. We want our medical providers well paid and we want them happy. New Democrats and Tories could say, "You know, the Liberals didn't do a very good job of keeping the medical profession happy." I accept my responsibilities in that connection. We did not do it very well, I suppose. I think we did the right thing. We may have not done it too efficiently, but it was a very fundamental clash. I believe it was a fight we had to have. In a funny kind of way, as Dr Moran's observations have made plain, I think that fight has made this Bill 135 possible.

I just again observe that for the coming year, under the new agreement, remembering that over $140 million has been paid out as retroactive payment to the profession for those years 1989 to 1991, what do we know about the fiscal year in which we now find ourselves? According to my information, under this agreement the government will provide a 3.95% increase on fees, representing an additional $140 million, and $110 million, roughly 3%, on utilization, meaning a total increase for this year, fiscal 1991-92, of approximately $250 million in new money or an average increase of 7%, on an average that is very nearly, according to data now two or three years old, $250,000 per Ontario physician.

I repeat: I do not have a particular quarrel with doctors being well paid, but how well paid does well paid have to be? I repeat what I have said here before. The loggers and the farmers and the retail people and the unemployed in Renfrew county are hurting and they are hurting badly. They applaud the fact that their member's salary has been frozen for very nearly three years, and they applaud the fact that 1% of the senior public service has been frozen at whatever rate—zero increase. I applaud it too. But what do we see? For the most well-paid people in our society, 7%.

I want doctors happy, and I want them well paid, but how much is enough? I think this government ought to think about what it has done. I am angry, not because they have made a deal we could not make, but 7%? I do not know what the calculations are for the out years, but my guess is that as a result of this now firm and untouchable six-year arrangement, we are going to see these kinds of increases on an annual basis. Oh, it may not be 7%. There is going to be a joint management committee and it is undoubtedly going to ratchet down the utilization; it is going to do a variety of other things.

How many people do members know who have got 7% in 1991 or 1992, particularly those people who may be at an average salary in excess of $200,000? Not bad, I say, if you can manage it, and the OMA to its credit has managed it with the new government, as they managed it with Larry Grossman 11 years or 10 years ago.

I become a bit worked up on this, because when I look back on that Grossman agreement of 1981 or 1982, I cannot believe that we let it happen. I cannot believe that this Legislature was undressed to that extent, but we were. And let me offer kudos to the OMA. They took us down in splendid form and some of us did not even really complain about it. Now I see again something that I appear to have experienced before.

How does this compare with others? Let me restrict my observation to the health care debate. How about nurses, for whom we all rightly profess a new and higher order of commitment? We have worked quite the deal, have we not, for nurses? We are all on side with the nurses, and the government negotiated a new day for the nurses, but what does that come to mean? Members of the opposition are up daily now talking about hospital budgets, which in significant measure means nursing budgets. I myself reported the news and it is well understood.

The Toronto Hospital Corp has had to retire something like 150 full-time nursing personnel as a result of these constraints, and that is just the tip of the iceberg. It is going to be happening in Thunder Bay and Brantford and Pembroke and Alexandria and Brockville and every other institutional health care setting across this province; certainly virtually every hospital setting across this province.

Nurses gained a pyrrhic victory. They won, but they will be shown to have lost at least as much as they won. It may take a few more months for that reality to present itself, but I ask my friends, how have the nurses fared vis-à-vis the doctors? I want to say it is game, set and match to the doctors. In comparative terms, they have won all, and they have got it in a way that it is untouchable.

Yesterday I was down in the standing committee on social development, putting an oar in the water with the member for Brantford and others—in my case very paranoically—for the optometrists, who have come to me and said: “Listen, we think we are getting a bad deal, unintended perhaps, in this health disciplines review. We think we are getting a bad deal because the ophthalmologists, as a result of the new framework agreement, have had a chat with the people at the ministry or the Minister of Health and said, ‘No, we think those optometrists’”—front-line eye-care people in my county, where we have, I think, one ophthalmologist. I have had people, largely senior citizens, from Eganville and Chalk River and Barry’s Bay coming to me and saying: “What is this? What am I being told? As a result of this policy, I am now not going to be able to be diagnosed in the Barry’s Bay office of my friendly optometrist, but rather, I’m going to be shipped off to Ottawa.” They may be overreacting and maybe their optometrist is overreacting, but that is how they feel and I am concerned about that.

I have reason to believe that part of the informing logic and the pressure in this is coming from this framework agreement which now gives organized medicine a very significant say on the health care waterfront. I do not think it is a bad thing entirely, but it is a bad thing if underneath that water line they are now exercising a veto that may be having real, intended or unintended health care effects in any part of rural eastern Ontario.

I come back to my main point. When I look at nurses and how they have fared with these cutbacks everywhere—and we are not in any way finished with those as I speak—I tell you, if I were a nurse, I would be looking at this framework agreement and I would be angry, because once again I have been dealt an unfair hand in the power politics that are so central to this policy and this legislation.

Mr White: Address your remarks to the chair.

Mr Conway: I know my friend from Brockville wants to get involved in this debate. I am notorious for going on in these matters.

I repeat, there are some very serious issues in this bill, and more important, in the policy of which this bill is a part. I do not want to talk about whether or not this is, as some people will say, a payoff for the OMA’s participation in the common front. I suppose that would be indecorous. It might even be unparliamentary. I will believe what I will believe.

I will never forget that day. I thought I would never see the day when, on behalf of Bette Stephenson and Joan Charbonneau, Ed Moran would voluntarily agree to the principles of Bill 135. I never thought I would see the day when the Ontario Medical Association would weigh into an electoral campaign, as it did so overtly with its long-term friends in the Ontario Public Service Employees Union and its longer-term friends in the Ontario Teachers’ Federation.

I will say here what I have said before: When I look back over the first 14 months of the Rae administration and I ask how well OPSEU and the OTF and the OMA have done, I say dispassionately, if not totally objectively, they have done very well indeed. I am sure it is fortuitous. I am sure it has nothing to do with the sinister motives that conniving oppositionists might manufacture. But I hope OPSEU, the OMA and the OTF go out one of these evenings and have a very good dinner on their success, because it is not an inconsiderable success.

When I look at the health care professions, the doctors have bested the nurses and they have left the optometrists well behind. Apparently the doctors are going to get an average of 7%. Compared to a sawmiller in Palmer Rapids, a retail clerk in Pembroke, a farmer in Westmeath township, they have won the main prize, and they have won it not just for this year but for five more years. I know the good people of Glengarry, if they had this agreement, would imagine they had died and been transported to another place.

We should celebrate success, because this is an enormous success these doctors have won at the expense of the public Treasury; a huge, lasting and significant pecuniary success. They have won it all. If no one else wants to celebrate that, I am going to at least observe it.

I want the farmers, the retail clerks, the trappers and the unemployed to know that this has happened and it is happening. I want members of this Legislature to know what they have surrendered. They have abandoned any kind of final control over a multibillion-dollar account; a great day for responsible parliamentary government.

I suggest that the defenders of this policy go forward and not run for this Legislature or for Parliament, but run for Marty Teplitsky's job or for some arbitrating tribunal. They will not only be better paid, they will be more anonymous and, most important, they will not be accountable. Some hopeless dupe who went through 37 days of excitement, of agony and ecstasy, will be standing up in Parliament defending what he or she did not have very damned much to do with deciding. Oh, a brave new day. I will end my comments at that point.

Mr White: I wish to congratulate my colleague on his excellent speech, as always well worth listening to, if not for the substance at least for the rhetorical flourish he offers us.

I thought when he brought up allusions to New Democrats past that he was a little bit too precious by half. In the midst of this rhetorical storm, the centrifugal force of his oratory splashed allegations all over. He is making allegations about teachers, about doctors, about nurses, etc. Perhaps he neglects to recall how his own party is saying we are too tough on the medical system, how his colleagues to his immediate right are talking about this terrible bill and how it would limit doctors' incomes.

The fact is we are talking about a basic, fundamental principle called the Rand formula whereby when a group offers services, those services are paid for. The Ontario Medical Association offers services for all the doctors in Ontario and in consequence should be paid for those services it offers.

We are not talking about the Ayn Rand formula, as the member for Mississauga South would suggest, but the Rand formula, a basic principle. We not talking about the settlement, but the method of that settlement, which is a sensible agreement.

M. Poirier : Comme d'habitude, mon collègue le député de Renfrew-Nord a fait une présentation tout à fait superbe qui décrit, très précisément, la nature conflictuelle de la façon dont le gouvernement néo-démocrate traite du sujet de financement du budget pour l'année en cours, mais qui décrit également la contradiction : comment le gouvernement néo-démocrate fonctionne à contre-courant, qui va contre tout le bon sens, contre la logique, de maîtriser les dépenses gouvernementales.

Ça a pris un collègue comme mon collègue le député de Renfrew-Nord, justement, pour être capable de démontrer ça très clairement, d'une façon bien élaborée, d'une façon bien énoncée. C'est bien son type à lui.

Moi aussi je suis très inquiet et j'appuie profondément les déclarations de mon collègue le député de Renfrew-Nord, justement parce qu'à un moment où tous les autres gouvernements serrent la vis, d'ailleurs, deviennent plus raisonnables, il a bien décrit jusqu'à quel point le gouvernement néo-démocrate se moque du contrôle budgétaire à un moment tout précis où nous, les députés, on nous demande depuis déjà deux ans et pour les deux ans à venir de limiter et même de contrôler et réduire à zéro notre augmentation de salaire, ce que j'appuie fortement, bien sûr, et que toute la population appuie.

Moi, je ne comprends pas du tout comment le gouvernement néo-démocrate peut aller de l'avant et faire ce genre de proposition-là : proposer un taux de pourcentage totalement non réaliste, dans un moment très difficile du financement des budgets gouvernementaux en Ontario. Ça défie la logique. Je m'y oppose fortement. Ce n'est pas raisonnable.

Je félicite mon collègue le député de Renfrew-Nord d'avoir très bien démontré les problèmes de manque de logique du gouvernement néo-démocrate.

Le Président suppléant (M. Villeneuve) : Je veux remercier le député de Prescott et Russell pour sa participation aux questions et commentaires. Autres questions et commentaires?

Mr Stockwell: One of the most important points we should be taking from the speech that was just made is the abdication of responsibility. When people elect us to come to this House they expect us to come here to make decisions that affect their lives. Every time we push off another decision to an arbitrator, committee, board or commission—it has been happening for decades not just in this House but across the province and the Parliament itself—it does not allow the electorate to get a full hearing and an opportunity to vote on decisions we make.

The statement was made that some $5 billion or $6 billion of government moneys will be set aside now and decided upon by a single person who was not elected to anything, who did not put his name forward, did not stand for any job and was not accepted or declined by the voters at large.

It is one of the sad situations that has happened over the political period of two or three decades in Ontario from municipal politics to provincial and to federal. It makes me very frustrated to think that the budget of this province will be set by one person when it comes to increases in fees and a vast amount of money. Not one person sitting here in this House today, and I include ministers, has as much control over that kind of dollars as the arbitrator.

The most important thing we do is to represent our constituents. We represent our constituents who elect us to come here. If we continue to pass away those responsible decisions we should be making, we cannot represent our constituents and our constituents cannot make proper decisions if every time a tough one comes down we say we did not make that decision. It is not responsible.

Mr Conway: I thank my honourable friends for their observations. I simply make the following point again in summary: Bill 135 is an important part of a very significant deal. It is a deal involving the government and one of the most enormously significant, important and resourceful interests in the entire community. It is a deal about power politics. It is a deal that is enormously remunerative.

I repeat that the government has been infinitely more generous than those miserable Grits. I will defend what we did. We took a tough line and we paid the price. We were thrown out of office with the help of the Ontario Medical Association and that was a very good participatory thing for them to do. We took a tough line, not just with Bill 94, t with the freeze essentially on fee increases for those o years in the last part of the Peterson administration. e brought the Ontario Medical Association into a happy alition with others like the teachers and the public ser- ce and they committed themselves politically to getting e scoundrels out and bringing a new day.

They have won a new day and they have won a very nerous deal that will take hundreds of additional mil- ons of dollars out of the taxpayers' pockets. It will, in the t of this recession, give an increase of 7% costing hun- eds of millions of dollars this year, while nurses get uch less and in fact will lose their jobs by the score and the hundreds, and while optometrists and others will el the pressure underneath the waterline.

Bill 135 is about power politics. It is about winners and sers. It is about deal-making and I want to tell members at in the first encounter between the OMA and the Bob e government it is game, set and match to the OMA.

Mr Runciman: Before I forget and the member for enfrew North leaves the chamber, he mentioned the con- ct in 1986 with the doctors with respect to Bill 94 and e extra-billing being a factor in the results of the last rovincial election. It is the only thing I disagree with him a with respect to his comments today. I find myself in reement with him more and more often these days. It is little scary, but in any event I can safely say I did not ar the question of extra-billing raised during the 1990 mpaign. Certainly, following the extra-billing debacle, whichever way members wish to describe it, we had a 1987 election and the Liberal Party came in with an over- elming majority.

Mr Conway: I am talking about the fee dispute, not e extra-billing, in 1990.

Mr Runciman: In any event—even the fee dispute—I o not believe the doctors had a significant impact with spect to the results of the 1990 election, partly because f their inability or unwillingness to lower themselves to et into the political trenches with respect to participating an active way in a provincial or federal campaign.

I want to talk about this. I know the member for enfrew North mentioned this and my colleague the mem- er for Etobicoke West mentioned it too, not just the bind- g arbitration element over this, but this is an extremely mportant initiative by this NDP socialist government and e the member for Renfrew North said we really cannot o much about.

I beg to differ with him again on that point because ven though we are told this is a done deal the Legislature, or all intents and purposes, has not been involved in this one deal and we are talking about in excess of $5 billion f taxpayers' money being spent. I think it is only respon- ble on our part to play a very active role with respect to is decision. Bill 135 provides us with the only real opportu- ty to do that.

I guess when I think about its impact, not only its itial impact but the implications for this legislation over e long term for all of us as health care consumers, and erhaps even more important as taxpayers in this province, is a piece of legislation we should scrutinize very carefully, and in my view should be delaying. It is probably impossible to stop, but we should give it our best shot as opposition members in this Legislature.

As part of that process, we should make the public much more aware than we have done up to this point of the implications of what this government is doing and what it means to them as taxpayers and health consumers in this province. We in the opposition have sort of been sitting back on this and saying: "Look, there is nothing we can do about it. It is a done deal."

We have close to 60 members on this side of the House and I think if we start to play an active role in legislation like this we can have an impact, maybe not the one we would ultimately desire, but I think we can have an im- pact, if nothing more than elevating this issue so more and more people become aware of what is happening within the government and within the medical community.

I am not a big fan of the profession. Maybe I should not be saying that sort of thing. I know my colleague the member for Mississauga South was speaking today saying that doctors had no choice, that they had their backs to the wall in this negotiation process. I have a tough time with that when we are talking about the highest-paid profession in Ontario getting an increase of an average of 7%.

We had a doctor before the standing committee on government agencies today, Dr Perry Kendall, who is get- ting an appointment to the Metropolitan Toronto District Health Council. I think it was a very astute appointment and he is a gentleman who certainly seems to have a good handle on health care issues in this province.

He felt from his pew that it was an extremely generous settlement. When we talk about the rest of the Ontario economy, about the cutbacks and the belt-tightening going on within this province, and this government grants a 7% increase to the highest-paid profession in Ontario, I say something is wrong. That does not in any way, shape or form present a hardship to medical practitioners in this province, from my perspective anyway, and certainly not from the perspective of Dr Perry Kendall. I would like to see that gentleman play a more active role in decision- making with respect to government policy related to health care in the years to come.

My feelings in some respect are oriented towards the dispute back in 1986, Bill 94, the extra-billing dispute. We saw doctors across this province outraged at the Liberal government that brought in the legislation, which was part of the NDP-Liberal accord. Mr Speaker, I believe you were around in those days. Obviously the Liberals sup- ported it. It was part of their platform during the 1985 election, but the NDP, as part of the negotiation process with the Liberals to throw the Conservative government out of office, made it a major priority that they bring in a ban on extra-billing.

Otherwise I am not sure the Liberal government, if they had been elected with a majority, would have acted upon the ban on extra-billing. I think they did it as a result of pressure and as a result of their desire to obtain power, and as a result of the accord they signed with the NDP to enable them to achieve office in 1985.

When I look at those days in 1986, I remember the huge crowds out on the front lawn of Queen's Park, something like 10,000 or 11,000 doctors out there protesting the Liberal-NDP legislation, because that is really what it was. Now we see them in effect—the same people, the Ontario Medical Association—getting into bed with the architects of the legislation they were so vehemently opposed to, so furious about back in 1986, and now they have crawled into bed very rapidly with those same people, Bob Rae and company.

I was looking for a word to describe them. There is a new movie coming out starring Theresa Russell, and if you look at the title of that movie, it describes my view of the OMA. Another term we could use is "ladies of the night." I was looking at my thesaurus so I could use a parliamentary term to describe the OMA with respect to its dealings with the socialist government. I do not have too many complimentary things to say about them. I think they have indeed, as a previous speaker said, been wrestled to the ceiling by the government with respect to the settlement they have been able to achieve.

At the same time they have dragged something like 3,000 through this modified Rand formula that Bill 135 really is all about, compelling over 3,000 other doctors who, for a variety of reasons, did not feel they had any need or desire or wish to be members of the Ontario Medical Association. They are now going to be compelled by this legislation to pay dues to the OMA. So they go in kicking and yelling, but the government is not prepared to listen to those people.

Again, I say that perhaps this is the kind of legislation that should go to committee. We should not rubber-stamp it. We are talking about significant expenditures in the billions of dollars. When the member for Renfrew North and members of my caucus and members of the opposition parties generally say, "We can't do anything about this," I think we can do a heck of a lot about it, and perhaps the first step would be to send this legislation to committee. We have the numbers to do it. We simply have to get enough within our own caucuses to agree that it is worth while doing it. Obviously my views are that we should be doing that.

Another element of this is the cap on incomes. I have got some feedback on this from specialists—dermatologists, ophthalmologists, orthopaedic surgeons—who find that the cap is going to apply some severe pressure to them, not necessarily in terms of income but in terms of their ability to operate an office.

I was talking to a dermatologist a week ago who indicated to me—he operates in the city of Toronto—that he has had to lay off one nurse and may have to lay off additional staff because of the income cap. There is no recognition in that cap for a specialist's capital investment in new equipment. This specialist was indicating to me that when new equipment comes on the market, high-tech equipment which is going to provide the best possible service to his clientele, he simply, because of the government restriction on income into his office, is not going to be able to have that recognized by the government under this initiative it has undertaken.

We look at the overhead of doctors, especially specialists. I am not so concerned about general practitioners. I think they look upon this as a windfall in some respects—a goal to shoot for, the $400,000 cap. I am talking about specialists. Another element of this we have heard, and thank goodness this is only limited to a small number of specialists up to this point, is of ophthalmologists and dermatologists closing their offices after approximately six months of operation and simply going on a vacation or doing other things or looking into other areas of income generation rather than keeping their offices open, because they have already achieved their cap.

What in effect we are saying to these specialists is that once they have achieved their cap, if it happens to be after six months of practice and their income is severely restricted from that point onward, why should they continue to operate their offices? There is no recognition of the overhead, the staff component, no recognition of that whatsoever, so why should that specialist continue to operate his or her office? It does not make any sense. It is perhaps a modest problem at this juncture. I am not sure who the lackey is in this exercise, whether it is the OMA or the government, but together perhaps they can address this so that we are not going to see this sort of problem continue to grow and health care consumers in this province suffer.

The other element of this which is a concern of mine too is the migration of doctors to the south. It is essentially specialists we are talking about who are attracted. We saw—I cannot recall the doctor's name—a significant specialist in Metro Toronto who I think worked at the Hospital for Sick Children move to Texas a couple of years ago. We have seen very prominent specialists in Ontario already leave because of the offers to function in a much freer climate, if you will, in terms of restrictions placed on health care providers in the United States. To me this kind of initiative, which does not recognize these special circumstances of specialists in Ontario, is going to further aggravate that situation.

I think an element of this, and my colleague the member for Etobicoke West mentioned this in his brief comments and certainly the member for Renfrew North did at length, is one we have to stress as members of this Legislature, and that is the provision of binding arbitration. That was a platform of the NDP during the 1990 election. They believe in binding arbitration and that is not strange. We can understand that coming from that party and its particular ideology.

When we look at the history of binding arbitration in this province perhaps we can understand where the OMA is coming from as well. I think I read where 87% of the OMA's membership council voted in favour of this deal. I think they have taken a look at the history of binding arbitration with police services, if they have looked at fire services, and can understand that they would not necessarily be shy or reluctant to get involved in a process that is going to see them go to binding arbitration when they cannot reach a negotiated settlement with the government.

I served on a municipal council for a little over eight years. A number of us have served on municipal councils, and we have all had experience with binding arbitration. Frequently we find those settlements have no resemblance to reality.

I can recall in my community where an arbitrator would come in for binding arbitration on a seniors' residence, for example, and give a double-digit increase. The arbitrator did not take into consideration the average increases in the area and did not take into consideration the debt load of the municipality or the public body responsible for providing those salaries through the charges to the taxpayers. I guess what I am saying is that the history of binding arbitration in this province is something I think we could all be very much concerned about.

In binding arbitration with public bodies, these folks, for whatever reasons, seem to be overly generous with taxpayers' dollars. What we are talking about here is not a modest amount. We are not talking about a municipal budget; we are not talking about the budget of a seniors' residence; we are not talking about a local fire service or police service. We are talking about a province-wide service which represents over $5 billion in tax dollars. I think I have the figure here: $5.3 billion allocated for OHIP payments this fiscal year.

I think just that one element of this agreement is enough for us as legislators to say, "Whoa, is this the sort of decision-making we should be leaving in the hands of a third party? Is this the sort of thing that we do not want to play a role in? In effect, that is what the government is trying by bringing in an element of binding arbitration.

What we are doing is taking it out of the Legislature's hands. We are effectively taking it out of the government's hands. We are taking it out of the Treasurer's hands. When we are talking about numbers in the billions of dollars, that should be cause for pause and reflection, I would think, on the part of not just members of the opposition parties but certainly of members of the government party as well. Perhaps most of them are not looking down the road and they are only looking at the next three years because they realize, as most of us do, that a lot of them certainly are not going to be returning to this place.

I am going to continue speaking on this legislation until 6 o'clock.

Mr Mills: Oh, no. I'm waiting for the Fire Marshals to act.

Mr Runciman: Well, I am sorry; the member for Durham East can go home now.

In any event, I think this is the sort of legislation that we should be discussing in detail, and I want to encourage anyone in the medical community who may be viewing this broadcast, especially doctors, general practitioners, specialists, who has any concerns about this legislation to call my office in Toronto at 325-3868. I would like to hear your concerns. I would like to have them brought to the attention of the Legislature and to the public of Ontario.

I am not optimistic that we are going to hear from a lot of doctors because—

Interjection.

Mr Runciman: I will. The member should not worry about that.

Mr Wiseman: What was that again?

Mr Runciman: Just for the benefit of the government members, I will repeat it. It is 325-3868. They should not clog my lines, please.

I recall when we had a filibuster in this House, the most recent filibuster, if you will. It was conducted by the member for Welland-Thorold, a member of the government party. I followed him, as at the time I was the insurance critic for my party and I spoke for four days; not four full days, of course. While the opportunity to speak was present, I spoke for four days.

I must say that when I look back at the filibuster and the debate that took place with respect to no-fault auto insurance and compare that with, not necessarily Bill 135 itself but when we take a look at the complete package with respect to the funding arrangements arrived at between the government and the Ontario Medical Association—and the modified Rand formula that is being brought into effect is just part of that total package—and compare it with important pieces of legislation that you and I, Mr Speaker, have dealt with over our time in this Parliament, I have to compare it with the most recent filibuster, which was felt to be important enough a couple of years ago that the member for Welland-Thorold, with the full support of the now Premier and other members of the NDP caucus filibustered right into—we went into a 24-hour session at one point.

They felt strongly enough about the ban on extra-billing. When I take a look at the implications of this, I think they are certainly as important, if not more important, for all of us in this province as the introduction of threshold no-fault auto insurance, because this bill is not just having an impact on a one-year increase in payment to doctors; it is an agreement that is going to extend for the next three fiscal years—1991-92, 1992-93, 1993-94.

It has a number of measures which, as I said in my earlier remarks, are significant for all of us as taxpayers as well as health care consumers in this province.

When the announcement was made, they talked about cost containment. I want to say that those cost containment measures, upon scrutiny, appear to be largely symbolic and I want to run over some of those for the House and for the benefit of the members opposite.

The government and the Ontario Medical Association will share financial responsibility if the volume of OHIP billings goes over a certain amount.

Mr Sutherland: What's that number again?

Mr Runciman: I will get on to it later. I am having significant pressure, Mr Speaker, from the member for Oxford to keep repeating the phone number in my office, but I want to assure him that before the House adjourns at 6 o'clock I will get it on the record at least three or four more times.

Mr Harris: I'll be able to call you too.

Mr Runciman: We will keep a line open for the member for Nipissing.

For the next three fiscal years—1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94—the government will pay for all increases in overall system utilization resulting from demographic changes; an example: for increases in population and in the number of older people, plus a 1.5% cushion.

I think it is interesting that we had all this kerfuffle on extra-billing. My party, the Conservative Party of Ontario, from a philosophical point of view did not agree with the ban on extra-billing. We vigorously opposed it. Members will recall the government of the day bringing in time allocation because of the position the Conservative Party took. I guess in some respects we felt that we went to the wall on behalf of the medical community in this province.

Again, it raises my hackles, to say the least, when we look at the situation now, when the architects of the ban on extra-billing are now going hand in hand with the OMA—the same people, with 10,000 or 11,000 doctors out there violently opposed to a ban on extra-billing, now going hand in hand with the Premier, the architect of the ban on extra-billing. As I said, it is indeed shameful and I have already used some rather descriptive words to describe my feelings with respect to the OMA and its carryings-on in its dealings with the current socialist government.

Getting on to these symbolic cost containment measures again, in the current fiscal year it is expected the government will be solely responsible—we keep hearing that this government will pay for all increases—for utilization increases in the OHIP globe up to approximately 3.5%.

I was going on to a point about the ban on extra-billing and I forgot about it, but what has happened in terms of the fee-for-service portion of the health care budget since the ban was implemented in 1986 or 1987, whenever it was, is that the fee-for-service element of the health care budget in this province is, I think, somewhere in the neighbourhood of 30% to 35%. We have not seen any drop. Those ingenious doctors found some way to overcome that ban by finding new and innovative ways in which to bill OHIP so that there was no shortfall in incomes of the doctors in this province in any sense. In fact, fees for service have become even more of a burden on the Treasury and the taxpayers of the province since the ban on extra-billing.

For the government and the OMA, up to 3.5% in utilization increases is going to be completely absorbed by the government and anything in excess of the 3.5% is going to be shared. There will be some sort of sharing of financial responsibility if the OHIP volume of billings goes above 3.5%.

I talked to Dr Perry Kendall today, who is the medical officer of health for Toronto, about the increase representing something like 7% through this sweetheart deal that the OMA was able to get out of the socialist government this year for peace and quiet within the ranks. It is understandable that they have peace and quiet within the ranks when they get that kind of generous increase. We see over 200,000 manufacturing jobs being lost in this province. We see welfare increases so that we now have 10% of the Ontario population on welfare and social assistance. What does this government do? It gives the most highly paid profession in Ontario a 7% increase.

How do you justify that in tough economic times, Mr Speaker? How do you explain that to the laid-off worker in your riding or in my riding or in Nipissing? You simply cannot do it because it does not make any sense when the rest of us are being asked to tighten our belts and try to find ways we can cut expenditures and streamline government. What do they do? They give their public service a 14% increase for this last fiscal year and they give doctors a 7% increase. It does not make any sense at all. The increase has been estimated to cost $250 million. I think it is going to be significantly more than that. The retroactive element is apparently going to cost $140 million.

There is another interesting element which many members of the Legislature may not be aware of. Malpractice insurance this fiscal year—

Mr Harris: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: We are dealing with a very important piece of legislation. There is not one single cabinet minister in this Legislature, not one who cares about this bill and is here in the Legislature. I do not think the government is interested enough even to have a quorum in the Legislature so we can deal with this legislation properly.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Mr Runciman: Thank you for your help, Mr Speaker. I appreciate the intervention. This is an extremely important piece of legislation and one would hope the government members are prepared to play a role in this debate other than simply carrying on side conversations.

Another element of this I want to talk about is the establishment of a joint management committee. The agreement between the Ontario Medical Association and the government is going to give doctors a clear role in the management of all medical services and all issues relating to the health care system in the province through this joint management committee. We cannot say the same for other health care providers. They have been excluded from the process. It is totally excluding all other health care providers.

What in effect we are saying is that we are going to isolate the little guys from the bigger picture. That seems to me to be in contradiction to what the NDP has stood for over the years. At least the public rhetoric is that it is very supportive of the little guy, giving him or her a voice in government, making sure they have an opportunity to be heard and have input in the decision-making process.

That is not the case here. We have seen this sweetheart deal with the doctors of this province, with the Ontario Medical Association, whereby the doctors have said: "We don't want anybody else in this process. We don't want to hear from the nurses. We don't want to hear from any other profession or health care provider. We want to be at the table only, just the two of us, you from the government and us representing the medical profession. We are going to make the kinds of decisions that are going to impact on, supposedly, making health care in this province much more responsive, much more effective in terms of cost containment."

I think it is unfortunate that the voices of other health care providers are going to be excluded or given a minimal role to play and that we are putting all our money on the doctors in this province, through the Ontario Medical Association, to play that kind of role and provide the kind of co-operation that is going to see the changes necessary to prevent the further decline of Ontario's health care system, the decline we have already witnessed over the past number of years in terms of long lineups and waiting lists for getting health care provided.

In essence, with the OMA's agreement, with this measure, we are not going to see that take place. I talked about specialists earlier and the fact that we are going to see some of them cutting back on service or simply moving to other areas of employment, areas where they can generate income, during that time when the government says, "If you reach your cap within five or six months, we're going to restrict your income flow for the remainder of the year." Why should a trained professional not look to other income-generating areas to devote his time to? Why should he spend time looking after a long waiting list of patients who require dermatological care or care from an orthopaedic surgeon or an ophthalmologist? They are simply not going to do it unless they are extremely devoted individuals to the community. I am sure many of them are, but there is a limit to that kind of service they can provide to their community.

I want to talk extensively about the joint management committee again. Apparently it is going to develop action plans to look at issues raised by both physicians and the government. It is going to constantly monitor the health care system. I guess I cannot say this too often: We are talking about the health care profession being responsible in terms of controlling health care costs and getting the system in balance. Right now, health care represents about one third of the provincial budget and in many respects seems to be out of control in terms of getting a handle on

I compliment the Minister of Health. As does as the member for Renfrew North, I have a great deal of respect for her as an individual member of this cabinet. I think she has some tough decisions to make and she has a huge ministry with which to cope, with all sorts of issues facing her on a daily basis. Getting a handle on the issues and not being diverted by that huge bureaucracy is a challenge indeed.

I have talked about a number of issues of personal concern to me with respect to the community mental health branch of the ministry. I think this minister, at this point in time in any event, is being led down the path by professional bureaucrats within the community mental health branch of her ministry. The minister has a real challenge, and for her and this government to become even more dependent on the bureaucrats and on the medical community is not a prospect that heartens me.

I do not think that in most instances, in terms of getting health care costs under control, we have had a positive response from the medical community. Their interests es-entially seem to be centred on their own financial wellbeing. Maybe that is being too harsh. I certainly should not be tarring them all with the same brush, but I know the feedback and the comments I have received even in my own community seem to be centred on income levels and not necessarily on service provided to health care consumers. Perhaps I am not hearing from the doctors who are very much committed to improving and enhancing health care services to consumers in this province. Maybe they are out there, but they certainly have not been raising their voices in any concerted effort to be heard by me or other members of this Legislature.

We only see doctors playing an active role, as they did in the extra-billing dispute in 1986, when they feel they are going to be negatively impacted upon in terms of their own incomes. Maybe it would be a refreshing change if we saw the doctors of this province protesting about other elements of the health care system: when they see enormous waste occurring, for example; when they see things going on in their own practices or those of their colleagues where they routinely call for tests as part of a process within their own offices and then those tests are routinely ignored.

This is a frequent practice, according to testimony before my committee today by Dr Perry Kendall, who is the medical officer of health for the city of Toronto and a new appointee to the Metropolitan Toronto District Health Council. Dr Kendall was talking about that kind of waste within the system by doctors, at enormous cost to the taxpayers. We do not see doctors—I am certainly not aware of the OMA—trying to curtail those kinds of practices that we hear are rampant within the system.

When we say the doctors are now going to be the key players in terms of health care providers playing a role in this joint management committee the government is establishing, they are going to be the key players in terms of telling us where the cuts should be made, where the streamlining should occur and where the efficiency should take place. We are saying we are going to put all our chips on the doctors. I have a tough time with that. What about the nurses? What about the ambulance drivers? What about all sorts of people out there who are players in the provision of health care services in this province? They are being totally shut out.

In effect, for all intents and purposes, so are elected members of this assembly being shut out from the process, as we have been up to this point in this whole sordid deal with the OMA. We have been shut out. This is essentially really the first opportunity this Legislature has had to debate this deal made with the doctors of this province. All we are doing is talking about one element of it and the implications of the bringing in of a modified Rand formula, which is going to ensure that the OMA's tail is protected for ever and a day and that it is going to be able to dip into the pockets of doctors who are not supportive of the OMA and compel them to come up with the $3,500 dues annually—I believe it is something like that—that are going to have to go to the OMA whether they support it, whether they believe in it or whether it represents their interests.

I do not want to shock members on the other side too much, but for all intents and purposes I am not someone who has a lot of trouble with the modified Rand formula in most applications. At one time in my life I was union president, believe it or not, in a plant that had the modified Rand formula. It does serve a useful purpose when you have the union at the negotiating table representing the interests of all the workers within that operation. They are benefiting from that negotiating process and as a result they should be supportive in a financial sense, if no other sense, of the people who are speaking on their behalf.

In that sense you could say the idea of a modified Rand formula in this situation has some relevance, but we are talking about a professional organization here. We are not talking about a comparable situation in the chemical industry or in the auto industry where the workers have management above them and they have to deal with that management and have to have their interests protected and represented by a union in many instances. A modified Rand formula has suitable application there in many cases. Here we are talking about a professional organization that deals with the government, and I do not see this as being the sort of thing a professional organization such as the Ontario Medical Association should be getting involved in.

I can see the OMA's self-interest in respect of the binding arbitration element of this agreement. During the next opportunity I have to speak on this piece of legislation, I hope to review some of the history of binding arbitration settlements with public bodies in this province. I think it will be scary when we look at the impact and the implications of allowing a third party to enter into this process and make decisions that have an impact on the expenditure of public dollars to the exclusion of the people who are supposedly accountable to the electorate.

When someone pays taxes and votes, he or she believes that you, Mr Speaker, representing your riding, and I, representing the people of Leeds-Grenville, are going to be able to come back and say why these dollars were spent and why these decisions were taken. What we have done now, and what this government is doing through this legislation and some other agreements with the OMA, is effectively we have removed that element of accountability that is so important in a democratic process. It is even more important to all of us when we are talking about an allocation that is in excess of $5 billion in tax dollars in this fiscal year alone.

We are probably looking in the coming year at an expenditure that is going to exceed $6 billion in tax dollars. If the OMA, through its negotiating team, is unable to reach an agreement with the government of the day, it is going to go to binding arbitration, and who knows what that decision is going to be or what its implications are going to be on the Treasury of the government and all of us as taxpayers or what implications it could have on the financial rating of the province? There is a whole range of implications to this which I do not believe have been thoroughly thought out.

Again, I believe this is an extremely important piece of legislation and I want to encourage anyone who has an interest in the health care system in this province, who may be a health care provider, a nurse, an ambulance driver, a nurse's assistant, or who may simply work in a hospital or have any kind of role to play in the provision of health care services, but especially doctors, specialists, to call me. Call my office at 325-3868 in Toronto. Let me know what your concerns are. Make me aware of them so that I can bring them to this House, so that I can tell my colleagues that indeed there is concern and growing recognition.

Interjections.

Mr Runciman: I want to put on the record that there is a small group of socialists sitting directly across from me who find this whole discussion very amusing. They are simply having a good laugh over there right now. I want to tell the viewers watching this that we are talking about a bill that has implications for billions of taxpayers' dollars and they are sitting over there joking about it while we are debating this very important piece of legislation. I am offended, and the taxpayers of this province should be offended.

Mr Mills: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I would like to point out that the laugh was about the telephone number and the place it was seen.

The Deputy Speaker: Take your seat, please. That is not a point of privilege or even a point of order.

Mr Runciman: Just for the member's clarification, the number is 325-3868. It is my Toronto office. It is not the Queen's Park number. I am going to encourage everyone in the health care field to call me, but I am imploring doctors, specialists, orthopaedic specialists, dermatologists and ophthalmologists to call me and let me know what the implications of this deal are.

I am not going to be optimistic that doctors are even going to bother to lift the phone. They do not bother to get involved in the political process unless they think that in some way, shape or form it is going to be—I will not say in the best interests of their bank account, because that might not be nice to say. I guess I am rather hard on doctors and that is based on being around this place for 10½ years and seeing a variety of things occur during that period of time which have not made me very enthusiastic about the medical profession in this province or about a significant number of its members, or at least the people who represent them in the OMA.

Obviously they have a role to play in terms of looking after the best interests of the people they represent, but I think they have a broader interest, and that is serving the people of this province and serving the best interests of the people of the province in terms of health care services. I do not think they have done a very adequate job in that respect. Again, this whole business concerns me. When we lodge with the doctors that significant responsibility through the joint management team, placing them in a crucial and pivotal role in the decision-making process respecting health care in this province in the years to come, when we are talking about the OMA effectively monitoring the system, how effectively are they going to monitor the abuses within their own profession?

The abuses are there, but do they stand up and catalogue them? No. We have to have someone like Perry Kendall, who is looked upon as something of a radical because he dares to stand up and say, "Look, there are colleagues within my profession who are calling for routine lab checks," which cost all of us $100 or $200 per check, depending on the complexity of that check. They do on a routine basis. Then when the patient comes back with that test, they simply ignore it.

They go through this exercise which is not in the best interests of the system. We have a long waiting list. We are losing hospital beds. We are looking at all sorts of, in some respects, very draconian measures to try and get health care costs under control, and the doctors are the folks who are right in there in the system. They see those kinds of things occurring every day where changes could take place. It could represent real cost containment measures. It could see us do things that are going to have effective and beneficial returns to all of us. But we do not see those kinds of messages coming forward from the medical community. I do not see them; I do not hear them. Maybe you do, Mr Speaker, but I do not.

I think when we take a look at this legislation and its impact, we have to be very concerned, and as I said, I am going to continue to speak on this, unless I am cut off at the knees. I certainly want to ensure that all members of the opposition take a very careful look at the implications of this legislation and perhaps review the comments made by the member for Renfrew North today, who was eloquent as usual and worked up when he talked about the rural community in his riding. He raised the issue of Ontario Hydro costs going up 45% in rural communities, with the option for them to go to gas. He has talked about that and he compared this issue with that.

We have members of the agricultural community, those of us who represent rural communities, and I have a significant rural component, who are struggling to survive and keep their farms operational, and many others, looking at the highest-paid profession in this province receiving a 7% increase, and then the government getting up and boasting about that deal: a 7% increase to the highest-paid profession when we have farmers going under on a daily basis. We see manufacturing jobs either leaving this province or being done away with on a permanent basis, and the doctors, the wealthiest profession in this province, getting a 7% increase. I am not going to get out a crying towel for a doctor in this province today, based on that initiative by the socialist government of Ontario.

Mr Bradley: Brian Harling works for the OMA now, the NDP secretary.

Mr Runciman: What can you say? I am just advised that we now have a former NDP secretary working for the OMA. I guess there are benefits to everyone in this deal except the health care consumers and the taxpayers of this province.

I just had a little bit of a criticism here from my executive assistant, who says, "If you're going to give out the office number, the least you can do is advise your executive assistant." I apologize, but apparently he has been advised by someone. Maybe that is an indication that the phone is ringing and that indeed people are watching this broadcast and people involved in the health care service area are contacting us and making us aware of their concerns and the implications.

Mr Speaker, would you like me to move adjournment of the debate?

The Deputy Speaker: It is not necessary to pass a motion, but in any case you will have the floor when the bill is introduced again to the House.

It being 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until 10 of the clock tomorrow morning.

The House adjourned at 1759.

Table des matières

La table des matières des séances rapportées dans ce numéro se trouve à l'arrière de ce fascicule, ainsi qu'une liste alphabétique de députés de l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario.

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi que celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

ONTARIO WATER RESOURCES AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES RESSOURCES EN EAU DE L'ONTARIO

Mr Hansen moved second reading of Bill 141, An Act to amend the Ontario Water Resources Act.

M. Hansen propose la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 141, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les ressources en eau de l'Ontario.

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 10(1)(c), the honourable member has 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Hansen: I would like to explain the bill. The purpose of the bill is to require persons installing plumbing fixtures in new or existing buildings to use only prescribed fixtures intended to reduce the flow of water and the discharge of sewage. The use of the prescribed fixtures would be enforced by the municipal inspections carried out under the regulations.

Last spring I talked to the mayor of West Lincoln, Ms. Kham. In Smithville, a small town in which the local water supply was contaminated with PCBs, a pipeline had to be installed from Grimsby to Smithville. The line that was installed to Smithville has actually choked the development within the urban boundaries of Smithville.

Discussing introducing private bills for the municipalities for a bylaw, I conferred with other municipal mayors and they thought this would be a great idea, but introducing five bills would be very expensive for the five municipalities.

Fonthill is in the same state, in that it depends on water from the city of Welland. Grimsby is waiting for an environmental assessment for installing another water-pump-station and purification plant. Also, St Catharines is in a position that if it has the water it does not have the sewer capacity, so development in the west part of St Catharines has been slowed down also, within the urban boundaries. The town of Lincoln—Mayor Konkle—has also had a problem with mussels in the intake pipes, and there have been water restrictions in the town for a period of time.

I would like to share this bill with the province of Ontario and not just look after my constituents in Lincoln. I would like the members opposite and the government to get into this plan and be part of this bill to also help their constituents and their towns.

That is just my local experience on this particular bill. The government has already taken the initiative to challenge Ontarians to reduce water consumption. Bill 141 will ensure that new users on the system will automatically use less. Bill 141 will go hand in hand with the long-term plan of the Minister of Natural Resources, who is conducting workshops on water efficiency with various groups in the province. If new homes or buildings are required to have efficient units installed, they will add less pressure to the municipal services.

This will allow municipalities which are being restrained from expanding because of infrastructure being at near capacity to expand, or at least to infill in areas that should be developed, without putting unnecessary strain on a system.

Also—my riding is very rural—in rural areas, efficiency units require less water to be drawn from the ground water supply and will mean less going into the septic beds.

One example is in Boston, the Marriott Hotel. The hotel replaced 430 guest-room toilets that used 3.5 gallons per flush with 1.5-gallon efficiency units. The changeover will reduce the Marriott's water usage by approximately 1.2 million gallons per year. They were also looking at a 38% increase in the next three years in water and sewage charges. As a local example, the Holiday Inn in Kitchener, Ontario, replaced all shower heads in guest rooms with low-flow shower heads. In addition, they installed simple toilet dams, and together the result has been a saving of $14,000 per year in energy, water and sewage charges. Reduction saves money.

Ontarians are big water users. Per capita, they use nearly as much as Americans—300 litres per day versus 426 litres—and twice as much as western Europeans, who use 150 to 200 litres per day. Ontario households use more than one third of all the water provided by municipal treatment plants. The water supplying Ontario households and industries comes primarily from the Great Lakes. This water cannot be used as it is; it must be purified with chemicals. Waste water must be treated, and clean water must be distributed throughout the province. This process uses energy and will likely cost Ontario about $1.7 billion in 1991. It also affects the quality of the environment. In 1980, the processing cost was about $600 million. Since then, this cost has nearly tripled.

Communities not situated near lakes or rivers, as well as most Ontario farms, use ground water supplies such as wells, which can run short. Water shortages in such areas as the regional municipality of Waterloo occur often during prolonged dry weather and, if demand continues to increase, most communities will face the substantial cost of expanding existing water treatment plants or building new ones. In addition, some communities that rely on ground water already face water shortages and may have greater problems in the future.

By adopting efficient practices used elsewhere, Ontarians can achieve zero growth in water use, at least to the year 2011. If we achieve zero growth, we will reduce stress on the environment, lessen the likelihood of water shortages and reduce energy costs.

To take an example in the United States, 14 states, including New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, have mandated or will mandate the use of low-flow devices such as toilets, faucet aerators and shower heads. A bill is before the House of Representatives which will require the use of six-litre toilets and other water-efficient fixtures.

What are the savings to the average household with four people living in it? The answer is dependent on the efficiency measures undertaken and how the family reacts to water efficiency. If the family is charged per litre of water use and is assumed to have the standard shower faucet and toilet which was installed in the past, and if newer water-efficient fixtures, including a low-flow toilet, are installed, then savings of $115 per year are possible. This represents a 33% saving on the average bill of $350 for water and sewer services for a family of four. There are 26,000 households in Lincoln; that would be a $2-million saving in one year.

Who will pay for this? The only source of funding will be water users. It is this group which makes use of the water and pollutes the water, and it is only fair this group should clean it up.

It is possible that some municipalities may choose to offer free retrofit kits to home owners or offer financial incentives. This has been done in Waterloo and in many US cities. However, it is important to understand that the water user will ultimately pay for those through their water bill.

If we use less water, are we going to be able to maintain the same rates? Utilities have fixed costs which must be paid even if less water is used or even none. If everyone suddenly cut back their water use, this could happen. In practice, some people will cut back right away and others will take longer.

During this time, new customers will be hooked up to the system, which will offset any decline in sales. Over time, more customers will be paying less, which will maintain revenues to the utility. The aim will be to hold demand at a constant level thus holding revenues constant.

Do members know that 26% of all municipal water supplies in Ontario are from well water? This services about one million people. In addition, most agricultural water used in households is from ground water sources. Toilet flushing takes 41% of the water used in our homes; washing and bathing, 37%; kitchen and drinking, 11%. As you can see, this bill is needed.

What about the cost of the toilets? They are between $125 to $350, depending on the model. What about the existing sewage lines that we have? They can be adapted to it. There will not be any problem with plug-ups or anything else.

The Ontario plumbing industry has indicated that if we change over to make water-efficient products in Ontario, if there is a sufficient demand, changing the code and launching a water efficiency program should create this demand, therefore preserving or enhancing the number of Ontarians working in the plumbing fixture industry. Only about 12% of plumbing fixtures are currently imported.

Mr McClelland: At the outset, let me say to the member for Lincoln that I appreciate, and I think many of his colleagues appreciate, the initiative he has taken here. I want to congratulate him for having taken this opportunity in private members' hour to introduce a very practical piece of legislation and something that in terms of the spirit, the underlying philosophy and thrust, of what is incorporated within Bill 141, any member of this House would be hard pressed not to support. I say to the member for Lincoln, he is to be congratulated for this job well done.

The bill sets out a requirement for new structures and new buildings to incorporate water-saving devices in their fixtures and plumbing. It is certainly worth while to consider that a number of jurisdictions, as the member for Lincoln has already indicated, have proceeded with similar legislation, particularly jurisdictions in the United States.

We note that some municipalities have shown leadership in this area and they too are to be congratulated. My understanding is that Waterloo and Wellington require low-flow devices in new homes. Niagara Falls has passed—if not already passed it is certainly considering—a bylaw that would require all hotel additions to use low-flow fixtures.

That is the kind of initiative being undertaken from place to place across the province. What the member for Lincoln is doing is, of course, to try and incorporate that in a general scheme across the province.

The member for Lincoln has indicated in his comments the tremendous amount of water that is used by the average household and the average person in Ontario. The very able people in research came out with some statistics that are quite astounding. The numbers are indeed staggering. I had no idea that an average toilet that is three or four years old loses up to 100 gallons of water a day just in seepage through seals and valves that have worn. That is yet another example. I had no idea, quite frankly, that if you have a household of four people and they brush their teeth and leave the water running, presuming they do it two times a day, you are looking at about 24 gallons of water wasted.

I water my lawn probably more than I ought to from time to time and I am not judicious in terms of controlling the time. Watering an average lawn in the summertime uses about 660 gallons of water. When I wash my car, do I leave the hose running? Washing a car uses approximately 125 gallons of water. Those are the kinds of things that sort of put in perspective the principle of the bill that the member for Lincoln has brought forward. It is very worth while. There is a tremendous opportunity for conservation and for using a very important resource that we have more judiciously and wisely.

We often forget as well in Canada, and particularly in Ontario, how very fortunate we are in having ready access to the quantity and quality of water that we have. Some of us have had an opportunity of visiting other parts of the world where it would be criminal to use water the way we do. Indeed, one of the greatest commodities is water and one of the greatest difficulties in terms of health and maintaining in many parts of the world is the availability of water.

Again to pay tribute to the member for Lincoln, it is something that I believe, without sounding too esoteric and lofty, has a really valid moral component, in terms of our responsibility to a world environment and to a world ecology, to show leadership. Having been blessed with an abundance of water in our province, we have a corresponding responsibility to show leadership in how we use that resource and to deal with it appropriately. Again I thank the honourable member for bringing this forward.

There are a couple of questions in terms of the bill myself that I would like to bring forward in a positive and constructive manner and that I ask the member to consider. Certainly I will be urging all of my colleagues on whatever side of the House they sit, for whichever party, to support the bill, because I think the principle is well regarded by each and every member.

In terms of the definition within the amendment, I would like to know, and perhaps the member could comment on, whether the use of the word "building" will refer to all structures. Would that include, for instance, cottages, single homes, industrial buildings, high-rises, etc? What level of change would be considered a renovation? What if it was to do a simple add-on to my home, for example, or some of those practical things? That would probably have to be thought out a bit more.

The other thing that is really key to this is the phase-in period. The manufacturers and the suppliers of the hardware, I think, would want to know very precisely, and appropriately ought to know, what the phase-in period would be. There have been similar initiatives taken in the United States, and the phase-in periods have been anywhere from 90 days to three years. It seems to me, having done some very brief consultation, with able assistance from people on our staff, that a period of a year of phase-in could provide an opportunity for manufacturers to tool-up for the production of domestic hardware that would accommodate the requirements of the act and also provide an opportunity for in-stock materials. That is a consideration. Billings that, there has to be some consideration of what you would do with all the material in stock. We would have to come up with some creative ideas for either re-using those materials or, ultimately of course, they would have to be disposed of. That is a concern I have.

It has been mentioned by my friend that there would have to be some integration with the building codes. That is something that could be done very readily in the building and plumbing codes. The Ministry of Housing has indicated, and I think it is clear, that it would be a relatively simple task legislatively to incorporate the changes through the acts that are under the responsibility of the Minister of Housing to make them consistent and comply with the requirements of Bill 141.

I also have a concern, if members will allow me to draw a little bit of a parallel, in terms of the Landlord and Tenant Act and Bill 121 that we will be dealing with and some of the initiatives that I want to see taken in that particular bill. I think I can draw a parallel with this. In the area of water conservation or conservation of anything, energy for example, one of the concerns I would have is to have some sort of guarantee or indication that a landlord or people involved in owning buildings would not be effectively punished for having shown conservation measures.

One of the difficulties I see with not incorporating it into a more holistic scheme is saying to landlords and people who run buildings: "Go ahead and do it. It's the right thing to do"—which I think we all believe—"and by the way, you're going to be punished for it. We're going to roll back your rents because you have a cost saving." There ought to be some incentive, some practical way those savings can be passed on to the home owner and the landlord in cases where they are commercial buildings, and residential tenancies particularly.

I want to leave some time. My colleague the member for Oriole wants to talk about this. There are some specifics I touched on. There are a few others we will save for another day.

In conclusion, I simply want to say that apart from some of the specific issues I would like to see addressed, there may be some refinements that would be in order. Again I say to the member for Lincoln, this is a job well done. The principle of what he is doing here is to be commended. It is a responsibility I believe we as legislators in Ontario have, not only to the people in this province but indeed to show leadership across this country, and may I say at the risk of overstretching our boundaries too much, a leadership role internationally. Because we are blessed with abundant water resources, I believe we have that responsibility, as the member has so very well taken up in this bill.

Mr Cousens: I would like to applaud the member for Lincoln for bringing forward a motion that has a great deal of thought behind it. He has a genuine concern about the resources we have in this province. Certainly his intention is an honourable one, to see what we can do to preserve our water supplies. Conservation is a term that existed long before we ever entered this House and we have to work towards it.

I want to begin with a compliment, because what follows is not all that complimentary. I happen to believe the member for Lincoln is an honourable man and his intentions are of the highest order, but what follows does not necessarily come under the category of laudatory comments.

If, through this bill, people become more concerned about conservation, if those who are taking in this debate will understand that each of us can contribute to the saving of water supplies through improved shower heads, taps, toilet fixtures and other fixtures in the home, that in itself will mean the debate is not totally a lost cause. But I believe there are matters in the bill that require some alternative point of view and I will try to bring that to the table.

There is another thing in this bill that is of a positive nature. I do not think there is any doubt that people across Ontario and North America who have such resources are now trying to save money and not use them any more than they have to. The power bill itself is an example of where the costs are going higher and higher, and because of the cost of electricity, people are beginning to turn off lights on their own. They can see there are dollars to be saved.

I cannot believe the government has paid $7 million to send out light bulbs to the people of Ontario to try to get them to save electricity. At least it is not coming along with free shower heads for people to try to save water. The government should not do it that way. This bill does not bring up the worst things that are coming from the New Democratic government; that is, sending out free light bulbs so people will save electricity. That $7 million could have been used for the 911 program. It could have been used for many other programs across the province. At least here the government has not tried to give them something for free.

I believe there are a number of issues that should be addressed in the bill before us. The first one has to do with a cost benefit analysis. Some remarks were made by the member's very close and dear friend from the Liberal Party, the member for Brampton North, who is obviously supporting this bill. Like the member for Lincoln, he has not thought through all the elements. It makes it very easy for the Liberals to go along with the New Democrats. Any time they have a chance to go to bed together, it seems they can crawl up under the covers and say, "We at least agree again."

I wish they would come out and have a cost benefit analysis that would allow people to ask, "Why is it in my best interest from an economic point of view to start doing something to help the ecology of our world?" In other words, what are the real numbers that are going to come into it to save people money, for instance, in Metropolitan Toronto and different other areas where they have to pay for their water? How much can a family of four save in a year, and how much extra is it going to cost if they install, when they are making modifications to their home, shower heads and taps and toilets and fixtures? How much extra is it going to cost them? Then how much is it going to save them?

One thing that never comes through from the New Democrats and the Liberals—I do not want to let them off the hook at all—is any kind of cost benefit analysis. They should figure out what it is going to cost people and say, "If you spend this, you are going to get this in return." There are going to be intangible benefits that help the ecology, but there are also going to be tangible savings that are going to help people have something back in their own pocket. What is the return on one's investment? What we really want to know is that there is going to be a return for the money that is spent for these fixtures.

Where there can be, there should begin to be far more explanation of the fact that it is going to cost people and then there is also going to be a saving. One thing socialists do not understand is cost benefit analysis because they happen to think everybody has money and money does not matter. I cannot believe that is the way the people want to operate.

That has to do with this bill, but I am leading up to other points, because to me that kind of information could be available and should be available and should be part of any kind of explanation.

Why is it that when this government comes along with a bill like this, as well intentioned as it is, it does not give any notice of it? My friend the Liberal counterpart from Brampton North has a little bit of concern about it. I have a lot of concern. This bill, if it were passed the way it is, would come into force the day it received royal assent. Ladies and gentlemen of the Legislature, that is exactly the way Bill 4, the rent control act, was done: no notice; in fact it was retroactive.

This government has no understanding that there are huge stocks of inventory that are not moving right now. If you have a plumbing supply business and you happen to have some toilets, shower heads and taps, you have a stock already. The member for Brampton North says, "Let's have an innovative way of getting rid of them." What is he going to do, sell them to the United States, sell them to California? They do not want them in California, because they know what it is to be short of water.

We know how rich we are with our water supply. We know it is an invaluable resource that has no price tag to it. But he is talking about all those investments that are held across this country, especially in Ontario, whereas with this bill we are talking about people who have money tied up now for this equipment. How long is it going to take them to get rid of it? The way this government is driving the economy into the ground, they are never going to be able to install their existing inventory because no one is building houses any more. You can sure tell that when you come through my riding. There is no building going on to speak of.

Those people who already have a significant investment in the products we have been talking about here are going to be stuck with them. The Liberals say, "Give them a year." A year is not enough time for a business to deal with it.

Mr Speaker, could you quiet this rabble down here? The Speaker is not listening either. This is terrible. Here we are in the Legislature. I try to get the Speaker's attention to quiet down my good friends over here. I am listening to myself, but that is probably all that is really happening. It is just terrible in this Legislature. I wish you would quiet those critters down, Mr Speaker. That is all I was trying to get your attention for.

Mr Kormos: Listen, we are on your side.

Mr Cousens: You cannot tell it. Come sit over here. We could use a few more; 20 are not enough.

I am concerned that there is not notice to allow industry and business to really deal with this issue by making this law come into effect right away. I have a feeling, and the New Democrats all have the right words and the Liberals are coming along and supporting it, that I will probably be the only one voting against it. You just never know. I do not like the way the government is saying that this act comes into force the day it receives royal assent. It goes down the hall, the Lieutenant Governor will sign it, and then it is law, and anyone who is in the process of installing fixtures in his home will be breaking the law.

Ontarians do not want to be breaking the law all the time; they are doing it enough now with the GST and the under-the-table things and other things going on. All we are doing now is creating more barriers between the population of Ontario and the government. The government is saying: "We're making this a new law. You have to follow it. It has to be right away. There isn't any notice." What it has ended up doing, then, is forcing people into being lawbreakers. I do not think the people of Ontario want to be known as people who are breaking the law.

The government should give some notice. If there is anything I have learned as the Environment critic for the last year and a half, it is that the industry out there is saying: "Don't make such fast changes in the law or in the regulations that affect us without giving us some chance to react to it. We're not able to do things at the snap of the fingers of the government." The Minister of the Environment does that regularly. She comes along and says, "It's not to be done tomorrow or today, or retroactively."

May there be some sense behind this bill and other bills like it that gives a window of opportunity for people to react to it. The government should not make it come into effect the day it receives royal assent. One year is not enough time for things like this, especially when you have inventories, probably millions of dollars' worth of inventory, and it is just not moving right now. What are they supposed to do with it, throw it out? Is the government going to subsidize them for it? Is the government going to come along and pay down the inventory they cannot use?

To me, that becomes a problem for business. It is hard enough to operate a business today, but when you have stocks of inventory and now you are going to have to throw it out because the government has made a law to make illegal the use of existing toilets and existing shower heads and other fixtures, I say the government should back off a little. It should not just feel it has to legislate something. Instead of having no notice, they should spend more money on education.

If only we could get people who want to do things that are going to help conserve our ecology and conserve our resources and have people buy into it because they believe in it, buy into it because they are going to get something back.

I think those benefits are there to be found. They are there to be found because the cost of water is going up. It has gone up in our community. There is a water surcharge we have to pay now, and the cost of sewers is going up. In fact, the cost of water is going to break through the roof once people really start paying for the infrastructure that is there. There is not any doubt that in our own city here in Toronto and across Ontario in many municipalities, you are talking about billions of dollars in order to repair the infrastructure. The leaks that exist already in water mains that are just seeping away large amounts of water—some of it goes back somewhere, but we have a major problem in that we have had water so cheap that once we start dealing with the real value of water, the cost of it is going to go up and then people will have more and more reason than ever to say, "Hey, I'd better do something about my fixtures and make sure they're coming along."

One of the other concerns I have is, why another law? Just because we are paid to sit down here 26 weeks of the year, does it mean we have to keep passing laws? The people of Ontario are sick of this place because of all the laws we are passing. We do not feel as if we are doing a job unless we are passing another law, and it is just getting worse and worse. All the government is doing is punching them in: "Hey, come on. We've got another one for you." People are so tired of the fact that the government keeps telling them what they have to do. May the government find other ways of getting people involved rather than just passing these laws.

I remember Claude Bennett when he was Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. He said, "Probably the biggest favour we could do for the province right now is let the House have a year's holiday and not pass any laws." The statutes came into my office this week. If you stack them they are this high, and that is in English. If you have the French, they are twice as high. I can only read half of them. Too many laws in the province, and what the government is trying to do right now is add another law. Is there not another way of trying to bring it in?

We have a new area developing in Markham. It is called the Markham East project. I am going to use the member's motion as an idea that I will bring forward. It is a brand-new subdivision of some 600 acres that is going to be expanded by the province of Ontario. I will put together a resolution in the House that we call for the highest environmental and ecological standards to be built into the homes that are constructed in this new subdivision, so that we will require the fixtures and the toilets and the intent behind the member's bill to be there in all these new homes and structures that are built, not just the homes.

I believe in what the member is trying to do, and there are ways in which it can be done. Let that become a model community, as indeed the rest of our community is.

But to come along and have another bill passed into law, not giving the time for people to really understand its ramifications, not having spent the time to educate them even more on the value of conserving our very valuable water supplies—these are elements missing from the bill. They were not missing from my good friend the member for Lincoln's preamble when he began his presentation, but the bill itself will come into force the day it receives royal assent, and I think we have had enough of these fast acts by the province. It is time we slowed down a little bit, had a little more time to work it through within the communities and allow people to buy into the whole purpose we are all interested in, and that is to save our country, save our land, save our water and save money.

Mr Fletcher: It is a pleasure to rise and support my colleague the member for Lincoln and his private member's bill, Bill 141. Before I start what I want to say, I want to respond to what the member for Markham was saying as far as cost-benefit analysis is concerned. That is strange coming from a party that is about $3.5 million in debt, wanting to do a cost-benefit analysis when it cannot keep the cost of its own debt down.

As my colleague mentioned before, the current increases in water consumption can be traced to inefficiency.

All water that is treated, whether it is being purified for use or being treated for discharge, requires chemicals and energy, both of which lead to higher costs. Our society has changed so much over the years to a conserver society, and it started when the Conservatives were in power, the third party, and also when the Liberals were there; their initiatives also helped changed society towards a conserver society. I think in this society people are going to respect the member for Lincoln's bill and the intent of the resolution. It is also bringing to the attention of our society the need to start conserving our most precious resource, and that is our water.

If the current growth in water usage continues, municipalities are going to be forced to expand treatment facilities or build new ones. Of course, all this would cost the taxpayer in the end. We know the taxpayers of today are getting sick and tired of rising costs for the services provided to them.

Also, if we look at the new construction that has been going on in this province, we see that the trend is towards a conserver society. It is also towards using what energies we do have. In new houses the windows are facing more to the south to collect sunlight to help heat the houses. Solar panels are being used to warm water. Our citizens, especially the citizens of Guelph, my riding, are more than anxious to start conserving our energy resources and water resources. The water in Guelph, which was partly tainted last year, is well water, and the people finally began to realize just how precious this resource was.

As far as what this is going to cost the people of Ontario is concerned, I think we have to look farther down the road. If we do not start, what is going to be the eventual cost? We see what has happened in California, where water resources are so low that people are crying for water. That can happen here. If we do not start now—and I think the member for Lincoln has started the ball rolling with this bill—then we could be the people of California tomorrow, saying, "Where is our resource, where is our water?" Right now it is a timely bill and I want to congratulate the member for introducing it, and it has my full support.

Mr Cooper: As the member for Lincoln has introduced this bill and has spoken highly of Waterloo region and the efforts it has put into finding solutions to save our water, and as I represent the riding of Kitchener-Wilmot, the Kitchener part which is basically suburban residential and the industrial basin, which makes them the largest water users in the region, and as I also represent the township of Wilmot, from where the region draws a lot of its water, I feel I should speak on this briefly and support the bill.

What we are talking about here is new homes being built, but in Waterloo region they have taken a new approach, which is basically education. This is part of the education process: By getting new homes built that will be saving water and helping us in the future to reduce the use of water, we can send out an educational package that would get people thinking in the right frame of mind.

Never mind the cost factor; what is the cost of not implementing these things?

What we are talking about in Kitchener right now is pipeline possibly. I am saying that if we get a reduction in water use, we could probably put off the pipeline. And we should use the facilities available in the region, like the Waterloo Centre for Groundwater Research at the University of Waterloo. This facility is second to none in North America, and if we use this facility we could find solutions and maybe avoid putting the vast amounts of money that are necessary for a pipeline and start building up our infrastructure, such as our water treatment plants and maybe distribution system. If all these things are combined, obviously we will have a better solution and it will be cost savings in the future.

That is why I rise in support, and I understand there are several members on this side who would like to speak to this, so I will defer my time to the next member.

Mrs Caplan: I am pleased to have the opportunity today during private members' hour to speak to the member for Lincoln's bill, which is An Act to amend the Ontario Water Resources Act. It is an important issue that is of concern to me as the member for Oriole, whose riding is in the heart of Metropolitan Toronto and is substantially developed. We may be seeing over the course of time some renovations and changes, but there are not huge tracts of vacant land in Oriole and therefore I would suggest that my constituents are like many people in this province who have taken the vast water resources for granted. You turn on your tap. You turn on your shower. We have never really concerned ourselves about the need to conserve our water in this province. Therefore, I will be supporting this bill in principle, although I think there are some serious concerns that would have to be addressed before this bill could be implemented.

I am a little concerned with some of the comments of the member for Markham because I believe it is important that the people of Ontario, such as my own constituents in the riding of Oriole, understand that we have always taken both quantity and quality of water for granted in Ontario just as we have taken for granted the supply of energy and power. Both of those, water and energy, have been the cornerstone of our economic prosperity. These have, because they have been taken for granted, sometimes not been used as efficiently as they can be.

Because we are all concerned about our environment because we are concerned about future economic prosperity, I think it is important for us to look at the issue of water conservation, and at effective and appropriate use of all our natural resources so that we can continue to have economic prosperity at the same time as we have an ample supply of clean water.

If we use water ineffectively, if we do not conserve and protect the resources we have, this puts enormous demands on our sewer system. I think the statistics my colleague the member for Brampton North mentioned, the statistics around waste, are important for the people of this province to know. The waste that comes from using inefficient plumbing, whether it is toilets or water through shower heads, is something that is costing us. It is costing as taxpayers because we have to build new sewers. It is costing us as taxpayers because our environmental concerns are not being addressed and we then have to clean up the effects of this wastefulness of the past.

I have some of the same concerns that were expressed by the member for Brampton North. While I will be supporting this in principle, I would like to suggest to the member for Lincoln, who has brought this bill forward, that it is very important, when bringing in a bill like this that will increase public awareness, that we have a plan which will provide incentives for public education and for municipalities, which are the closest to the people, to bring forth the kinds of initiatives we have seen from the municipalities of Waterloo, Wellington and Niagara Falls.

Niagara Falls has a municipal bylaw now that requires new hotels to install water-efficient shower heads. We know that in Waterloo and Wellington, they have brought forward a bylaw very similar to this, as have municipalities throughout the United States where they have water shortages.

I happen to know at first hand, because I have family that lives in Los Angeles, that they have a very severe water shortage and so they have taken all kinds of initiatives to conserve and save water. We have been very fortunate in this province. We have an opportunity today to bring forth the kinds of initiatives that will be friendly and save our environment for the future, for our children and grandchildren, and that will save taxpayers money today and in the future because we will not have to have the kind of infrastructure that would look after waste. We want the infrastructure to look after what we need, but we do not want to have to build sewers and sewage treatment plants for water that has been wasted unnecessarily.

I want to point out how important good maintenance is. This bill does not provide for a maintenance strategy and a public education strategy. I think that would enhance this bill. We know the Ministry of Housing has a great opportunity as well to raise awareness.

I do not think there is a lot of concern about the principles and the thrust, but there certainly is in the definition of "building." There are concerns around phase-in. We cannot have this bill come into effect on the very day it is proclaimed. We have to allow the public education campaign and the phase-in that would allow for the proper incentives. I think there is an important role and opportunity for the municipalities that this bill does not address.

On behalf of my constituents in the riding of Oriole, who are just beginning to understand the need to be effective and efficient in our use of water, power and those natural resources that we take for granted, I will be supporting this bill in principle. It has allowed for an important debate in this Legislature, but this bill is far from perfect. It needs significant discussion and amendment. I hope the member for Lincoln would seriously consider amendments to this bill so that we could see it enacted in this House.

Mr G. Wilson: I am pleased to rise to join this debate that the member for Lincoln has initiated. I can see that with the debate that has ensued, the constructive criticism he has met, he is indeed becoming flushed with pride over bringing this into the House.

Some hon members: Oh.

Mr G. Wilson: Is that the first time that has been used?

I have to say, as several members have pointed out, that it is a province-wide problem. Certainly the examples we have used show it is a worldwide problem, the conservation of resources that we are dealing with here. In my own riding, we have an issue that highlights this problem in that we have to upgrade our sewage treatment plant at the cost of millions of dollars. As has been pointed out, if we could reduce the inflow into that plant, then we could make a significant saving.

I want to say too that although several people have mentioned that the problem has come to the fore recently, I took the opportunity to go into the library just to see what literature there was on this issue. It is quite easy to come up with some startling statistics.

For instance, a conventional toilet uses 19 litres for flushing. An air-assisted unit would reduce that to two litres, for a saving of 89%. A clothes washer uses 140 litres. Front-loading would reduce that to 80 litres, for a saving of 43%. Shower heads use 19 litres a minute; air-assisted would reduce that to two litres a minute and that is a saving of 89%. For faucets, the conventional litres per minutes are 12. A flow-limiting faucet would reduce that to six litres, for a saving of 50%. Members can see that there are some very significant savings that could be achieved by using the implements that are mentioned in the member's bill.

There are also some more innovative ideas I came across in a recently published book, a term called xeriscape, which is a strategy for changing monocultural lawns, that is, all lawns that are just devoted to grass, to more innovative uses of that kind of space that would free up not only the time it takes to look after a lawn, but also the amount of water we put on it and the amounts of herbicides some people use on their lawns. You have a saving too in the amount of waste that would be removed from the lawn. Studies have shown that approximately 20% of municipal waste consists of grass clippings and other yard trimmings. There is a significant saving, not only in the water that would be used but in the waste that is at the other end.

I think there is a point that has been raised by a number of members: the savings we would have here in the energy that is used to heat water. Certainly the implements that are mentioned in the bill would cut down on the amount of water and cut down on the amount of energy that is needed, but also in the treatment of the waste water that we produce.

These statistics are readily available, as I pointed out. It just requires going to the library or listening to a debate like this and you know that significant savings can be achieved. The question then is, is the political will there?

I think the member for Markham highlighted that difference, that if you take the individual approach you might not realize all the implications. For instance, are people aware of the significant loss in sewer lines or even water lines? It takes, I would suggest, a social approach to this problem. By coming together to debate it, as we are doing here, we can see the problem and then look for solutions that I suggest require a community approach, because it is certainly at the community level where it can be felt. Beyond that it is a global issue.

I want to mention too a recent conference that was held here in Toronto in June, sponsored by the faculties of engineering at Ryerson Polytechnical Institute and the University of Toronto, as well as some professional engineering groups, to show that professional engineers are aware of this problem and are working on it.

An article entitled "Engineers, Scientists Call for Sustainable Society" has this quote: "Technological transformations must go hand and hand with economic, sociocultural and political changes. We're heading for a disaster if we don't take any action."

It is significant that we know there is a problem, but beyond that, as these studies show, I think we will have a lot better society if we meet this crisis. It is not just a question of a disaster that we face but a much better way of living if we live a more ecologically sensitive lifestyle.

Mr Farnan: I appreciate the opportunity to address this private member's bill this morning, An Act to amend the Ontario Water Resources Act, by my colleague and friend the member for Lincoln.

The member for Lincoln and I have shared offices next to each other since he arrived at Queen's Park and we have often had the opportunity to discuss issues together. I can tell members I have been extremely impressed by his enthusiasm, dedication and commitment. I have been around here for four years now and I can say that the member for Lincoln is one of the hardest-working MPPs I have ever had the pleasure to work with.

There are two characteristics that stand out in my view of the member for Lincoln: his determination to serve his constituents in Lincoln and his commonsense approach to issues. He is a very practical politician, I can tell members. In addressing issues, he is a realist. He is more concerned with what is possible than with grandiose ideas that may never materialize. He takes on tough issues, and that is why he has taken on the issue of water conservation. It is an issue that would daunt many people, but he has approached the issue and he does it in his own straightforward, inimitable way. He asks the straightforward question and then he provides practical, commonsense solutions that can be implemented.

We have seen many private members' bills come forward in this House, and all of them, I would hasten to add, have merit in their own right, but often they are lost because, quite frankly, they are not practical. That is the difference with the member for Lincoln. When he brings forward a private member's bill, members can be absolutely sure it is going to be practical. It will hit the tough issues, but it will have a manner of addressing those issues so that you can say, "If we do this, we'll be moving towards a solution."

As I have listened to people around this chamber this morning, even those who attempted to criticize the bill were consistently saying, speaker after speaker, "We agree with the principle of the bill." Of course they agree with the principle of the bill, because the principle of the bill has merit. It is right. It should be done. What is to stop us as parliamentarians, when this bill goes on to committee to come together and take the positive contributions of all members of the House?

That is the kind of politician the member for Lincoln is. He is not stubborn. He does not wear blinkers. He comes forward with an idea, and I can tell members that when this goes to committee, they will find in the member for Lincoln someone who is a conciliator, a mediator, a practical politician who will take the best of all the suggestions and will be prepared to fine-tune his legislation so that it then can receive the unanimous support of all the members of this House.

Not only is he a practical politician, but he is a practical politician who speaks from the heart of the philosophy of the New Democratic Party. Let me say that when the member for Lincoln sits down and asks, "What contribution can I make?" he looks at the importance of conservation within the entire New Democratic agenda, and being the kind of man he is, then goes and brings forward legislation that will support the government's overall policy direction. That is the kind of New Democrat he is, that is the kind of government member he is.

On the local scene, Waterloo region has been a pioneer in this area. We are proud of our industries in their efforts to conserve. We are proud of our region. We are proud of our school board in its education policy. We want this government to lead in conservation. I congratulate the member for Lincoln for taking that leadership role.

Mr Hansen: I would like to thank the member for Brampton North. In the bill I said all structures; it does not matter whether it is a cottage or an industrial site or wherever it may be. All toilets use so much water, so I think we have to take a look right across the whole province.

The other thing he is concerned about is these old toilets and fixtures going to dumps. The metal ones can be recycled and the toilets can be ground up and used in road construction. Those are two areas I did not get into in the very beginning.

It is very important. I think my friends the member for Markham and the member for Brampton North were talking about the phasing in, and that is something my friend had stated, that there has to be some fine-tuning here. I take the criticism quite well and I think it is useful in this particular bill. I think the cost-benefits, the costs that will be saved, also have to be looked at and passed on to the tenants or the householders in the end.

To wind it up, together with conservation education, Bill 141 will lead to a water-efficient Ontario. Examples have shown that efficiency units make an immediate difference to savings that can be easily made by municipalities and eventually the consumer. Bill 141 is a starting block. It will set the standard for the future. We have just recently realized that Ontario's water supply is not endless and that we must start to conserve in order to preserve ean water for our children and grandchildren and the generations ahead.

UNIVERSITY CROWN FOUNDATIONS

Mr Daigeler moved resolution 31:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario should follow the example of British Columbia and establish immediately crown foundations at Ontario universities to increase private sector incentives for making major charitable contributions towards higher education.

Mr Daigeler: It is indeed a pleasure to speak to what I think is an important initiative to help our universities at a time when they are under severe stress in terms of their finances. Let me explain a little bit, first of all, what this particular resolution is all about, as I am sure not many members of the House may be familiar with it. It is a tax measure, and tax measures are always rather intricate, so I am sure the members want to know a little bit of what is behind this resolution.

The members will know that under the federal income tax, individuals can reduce their annual taxable income by 20% if they give that amount to registered charities. Of course, I encourage all members of the House and the people who are watching today to make use of that particular provision because many of our charities very much depend on those kinds of contributions. Our tax system wants to encourage people all across the country to contribute in that way to charities.

However, this 20% limitation does not apply if you make donations to certain government bodies; for example, to government bodies associated with medical research. In fact such gifts, called gifts to agencies of the crown, are fully deductible. In other words, donors can get 100% tax deduction against their net income. Given the tight fiscal situation of our universities, not just in Ontario but across the country, they have argued for some time that provinces should establish crown foundations or agencies that act on behalf of the government and therefore on behalf of all people. These foundations would be wholly owned by and be agents of the provincial government. Therefore, private donors to these university crown foundations could obtain the full tax deduction for their donations to the universities, without the 20% of net income limitation.

As I said, the funds raised would be used to support university programs. In this way, the tax saving for the donor would provide an ongoing benefit to the university community and as such, of course, to all the people of that particular province where the crown foundation is being established.

You may ask, Mr Speaker, and some citizens of the province may ask as well, whether the federal government, which is responsible for the Income Tax Act, will allow a 100% tax deduction for this university purpose. I am pleased to say the answer is yes. In fact, British Columbia has been a trailblazer in this matter. That province got a ruling from the Department of National Revenue and passed the University Foundations Act in 1987. It became effective on December 11, 1987. I have a copy of that act in front of me, and I should acknowledge the help and assistance of the Council of Ontario Universities in that regard. They sent me a copy of this particular act.

Ever since British Columbia passed this particular legislation, this concept of establishing crown foundations and therefore giving incentives to private donors has been widely discussed by the university community. Here in Ontario, Queen's University has been particularly active in this regard, with, I should say, the support of other university presidents. In fact it was at a recent visit to the University of Western Ontario that this issue was first brought to my attention as the Liberal critic for the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, and also to the attention of MPPs who represent the greater London area.

I should acknowledge that the University of Western Ontario has a very excellent practice of twice a year inviting members from the local area and also members of all three parties who are responsible for the university's portfolio to come and hear more about the concerns of the university. I think that is an example that could be followed in other parts of the province.

On April 25 of this year, the principal of Queen's University wrote to the Premier saying the creation of crown foundations has the potential of providing significant benefit to all. I have a copy of that letter in front of me and I would like to quote some paragraphs because I think it explains very well the benefit of this particular initiative to the universities and to the province. Mr David Smith, the principal of Queen's University, writes as follows:

"The concept has very important public policy implications. It provides an incentive to those in our society who are most able to contribute to increase their support for our public universities. Once the decision to make a substantial gift to higher education is taken by a potential donor, the existence of the crown foundations at Ontario universities may significantly increase the size of the gift....

"The fact that some provinces"—and I mentioned British Columbia—"have already provided for the establishment of such crown foundations at their universities places Ontario universities at a distinct disadvantage. Members of our own group have lost significant potential gifts to other provinces because of this fact. Queen's University has one benefactor who had indicated that our gifts would have been fivefold if we had a crown foundation in place."

To the Premier therefore, "We urge that immediate consideration be given to the advancement of the process of creating crown foundations at Ontario universities."

My resolution today has as its objective precisely that, to make sure the Premier and this government move quickly on this request that was put forward by our universities.

We all know that higher education in this province and across the whole country is strapped for money. To increase private donations to universities is obviously one way to help them out. It will not, obviously, be the only way and the only solution, and perhaps not even the major solution to their funding crunch, but it is a solution, and it is a solution that is practical and immediately available, with enough political will. I hope the members will support me. It can be implemented quickly and without much bureaucracy.

There will be some cost to the province and the federal government because they are losing out on some income tax revenue. But of course, since BC already has crown foundations, individual donors could just make their donations to BC—in fact they have—and Ontario would thus lose the tax revenue anyway. Moreover, this initiative could be seen as a way to allow people to pay their tax for a particular purpose—to designate their tax, as it were. I think we are all agreed that higher education is a very worthwhile purpose in this regard.

I note that my time is unfortunately up already. I hope members will support my resolution.

Mrs Cunningham: It is with pleasure that I speak to this resolution in the House this morning, presented by my colleague the member for Nepean. We were very pleased to have him at the meeting at the University of Western Ontario a couple of weeks ago, where he saw how that university was struggling to maintain the programs and the staff and the quality of the education system we have come to enjoy in Ontario. He was also there to see how difficult it is in these times for our students as they face the challenges and the expectations to be able to compete in this global economy in a way that we ourselves never, ever thought would be needed. I have to say I think this is a very forward-thinking resolution. I hope it will receive the support of the government.

There is a precedent in the province of British Columbia for this. I could quote from many letters in the past number of years where donations to our universities have had to be returned because there was no incentive for the estate, in many cases, to make these presentations, based on the amount of money it would be involved with in terms of taxation.

In October of this year, the University of Western Ontario brought to my attention an issue where an estate lawyer in British Columbia working with a graduate of the University of Western Ontario now working in British Columbia suggested that our university may not receive $500,000 from a bequest because the estate would be unable to use more than a small fraction of the $500,000 charitable receipt as long as the 20%-of-income rule applied. So I think the member for Nepean is very timely in this presentation, and the government would be very responsible if it responded in a positive way as quickly as possible.

That particular lawyer is recommending that his client leave that bequest to the appropriate crown foundation in British Columbia, for the use of the University of British Columbia. Although that is a wonderful province to visit, and many of our young people spend time working in that great province in the summer, especially in the forestry industry, I would advise that here in Ontario we ought to have at least the same advantage when it comes to private donations on behalf of our universities.

We know that university students are facing many challenges. Post-secondary institutions are struggling to maintain excellence, there is a shortage of permanent full-time faculty, and buildings are rapidly deteriorating. Students are finding themselves in overcrowded classrooms with outdated facilities and equipment. It is becoming more difficult for students to learn in the environment they are being subjected to.

Without the resources to produce the highly skilled workforce and advanced research facilities, Ontario will be unable to compete in today's global markets, either inside our own country or around the world. We are currently experiencing job losses during these times of economic recession, and it is more important than ever before that we support creativity, competitiveness and commitment to a well-educated workforce.

We must remain in the forefront of scientific and technological development and educational achievement if Ontario is to maintain its competitive position in today's global economy. We know that Ontario's universities in the past have made, and hopefully in the future will continue to make a major contribution to this province's competitiveness, and that they do indeed play a vital role in the development of highly skilled human resources.

On Monday this week we saw a new alliance, the Alliance for Ontario Universities, release a study that demonstrated the vital contribution universities make to the economic stability of the province. The study interestingly showed that each year universities pump some $6.2 billion into the economy, and more than 138,000 jobs are associated with university operations. They receive approximately $1.9 billion from government, which means for every dollar we invest in our universities, our universities generate $3 in the way of real dollars to our economy; for every dollar we spend on universities, they in turn inject into our economy $3, not to mention the number of young people and graduates around the world who make this country a country others want to invest in.

Last year the Council of Ontario Universities released its recovery plan, which suggested ways to improve the quality of educational experience for all students. On Monday of this week, again, the alliance released this impact study. I asked the minister that day where his government's multi-year plan was for universities. We did not get a specific response, which means this government is struggling with the kinds of resources it is going to be able to put into the universities. I feel, as they have said themselves, as they look to the private sector for more support, as they look to students, perhaps, for more support, that today gives us a very specific idea and ultimately plan and ultimately tool to attract that kind of private sector support we need.

In Toronto, York University had to sell its property to provide the kind of new construction and buildings and some of the services the students need in order to attend that university campus in this city, which is very far out and does not have good transportation. We now have much better facilities for the students, but we only gained them because they, in turn, sold property to generate the kind of income that was necessary to support the program they needed, because this government just did not seem to have those resources. I thought it was a responsible thing for them to do on behalf of the students.

We now have a timely opportunity right here, and my colleague the member for Nepean has clearly identified the problem in British Columbia. We too have talked to them. In fact, we were out there for the Commonwealth convention this summer and took the opportunity to meet with a couple of the ministers and certain other representatives of their House to see the kinds of things they were struggling with and some of the responses they were able to make in a responsible way to taxpayers. This is one of them.

I should say that the staff from the Ministry of Colleges and Universities confirmed that this idea is something they had been considering, and I feel the concept is something the government will be speaking in favour of today. If the resolution passes, that will be a good thing.

From the standpoint of the provincial and federal governments, they are both going to lose income taxes if they create such a crown foundation. We know that seems to be the downside for them. But on the other hand, they would provide the needed incentive to greater revenue for Ontario universities by increased donations. If the Ontario government has a solid commitment to higher education, it cannot afford to pass up this resolution today.

Although we know there are legal costs and administrative costs, we do know that the crown foundation in British Columbia is basically a board consisting of five members who are appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Ministry of Advanced Education, Training and Technology. They are voluntary positions and the universities take care of all the accounting and reporting, so the ministry is not involved in an excessive way with regard to time.

It is with honour that I speak to this. I congratulate the member for Nepean for this resolution today. Our party will be supporting the crown foundations, and we hope the government will act quickly.

Mr Lessard: I, too, will be speaking in support of establishing crown foundations at Ontario universities. There are several reasons I am going to support this resolution, one of them being that when bills and resolutions come up on Thursday mornings during private business, many times I ask members of my community what they think about these issues.

On Tuesday night I happened to be at the roast for retiring Mayor John Millson. I spoke to the president of the University of Windsor and asked him what his impressions were of university foundations. He felt that this was an initiative that should be encouraged and pursued by the government.

Of course the University of Windsor, notwithstanding the comments in the ranking of Maclean's magazine, has a reputation as being an excellent university in Ontario. The law school, of which I am a proud graduate, is rated close to the top of law schools in Canada, the business school has a great reputation as well, and graduates of the school of dramatic arts are performing around the world.

The University of Windsor is one of the few growth industries in Windsor. It is a city that has been very hard hit by the free trade agreement and the change in industrial development. However, in order to maintain that position, that reputation of excellence and that growth in our community, it needs financing. Of course, it is difficult for this government to contribute additional financing to the University of Windsor or to other universities.

I want to state that this government is committed to post-secondary education in Ontario. It is a commitment, unfortunately, that is very difficult for us to meet: to increase the financing of universities at this time. Everyone knows the difficult financial position we are in. The only way to increase our commitment to post-secondary education is to look at alternative means of financing, and this is one.

The sad legacy we have been left with is that on a per capita basis funding for universities has actually decreased in the past few years. This is something we are now stuck having to deal with. Not only are universities concerned about that, students are concerned and they are upset as well. I learned how upset they were a couple of weeks ago on the front steps of the Legislature with the Minister of Colleges and Universities, to whom I am the parliamentary assistant, when a group of students protested loudly that they felt that universities were being underfunded, and they were throwing macaroni at me and at the minister.

I want to say to the students of Ontario that I think there are probably better ways for them to express their opinions, and they need to recognize we are all in this boat together and we need to work together to try to address those problems.

I know students are upset by things like GST on textbooks. They are upset by the 3% levy on Canada student loans that was imposed by Brian Mulroney and the Tory government. They are upset because they see their future job prospects being sold out to the United States and other countries as a result of the free trade agreement.

But as I said, notwithstanding all those factors, we still remain a government committed to post-secondary education, and some of the things we have done to support that commitment we did very early on in our term. We committed close to $100 million in anti-recession capital to the post-secondary system. This created jobs, this permitted schools to be able to complete projects that had long been neglected through 13 years of underfunding. It permitted buildings at the University of Windsor to be constructed, like the Odette School of Business. It permitted the faculty of education to finally move on to the campus. There were also many projects to permit access for disabled students.

The government has put forward an agenda to increase access to post-secondary education. We have established a native education strategy. We have contributed $3 million over two years to increase safety for women on campuses. We have made reforms to OSAP to help mature students and part-time students and international students. But we know more needs to be done, because we know that what we need in the future is a well-trained and well-educated labour force. We also know that the post-secondary schools will be a strong component and an essential part of economic renewal here in Ontario.

We are supporting this resolution to establish foundations here in the province because we see this as a positive beginning. It is not the complete solution, but it is something that will encourage those who are able and willing to contribute to the post-secondary education system. We want to encourage that.

It is our information that these types of foundations could be expected to generate up to $10 million in additional revenues to universities in the first year. The foundations would also raise the profile of the post-secondary education system. We need a strong system to survive economically. As I said, we need some innovative ways of funding education here in Ontario. This is just one way we would be able to do that.

Mr Conway: I am pleased to rise in this debate this morning and support my colleague the member for Nepean for his very thoughtful and timely resolution. It appears from what I have heard since 11 o'clock this morning that this will be one of those resolutions which will have either unanimous or near-unanimous support.

I want to make some observations in this connection because I think we are faced as a community and certainly as a Legislature, and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party are faced as a government, with very real budgetary pressures on the university account. I think as a result of not just those budgetary pressures but as a result of changing attitudes in the community, we are going to be forced to look at a series of alternatives we traditionally may not have looked at very carefully.

In this Legislature, and the previous speaker has indicated something of this, there has been a lot of debate over the years about underfunding in the system. He should not feel very badly, though I am sure he might have at the time, about having rice or whatever it was thrown his way. I cannot think of too many people associated with the Ministry of Colleges and Universities who, over the 25 years or whatever, did not have something of that kind, if not worse, hurled at them.

I do not ever remember a time here—and I was here for some of the salad years—when universities were not underfunded. It is an article of faith that they are underfunded. I do not expect any transfer partner ever to come here and tell us it has adequate resources, certainly not adequate resources provided by the government, of whatever partisan stripe.

I had a brief period when I served as minister responsible for this area, and I must say I have a real interest in and support for the university community. It was the one I had planned to spend my life in before I was sidetracked in 1975. In some ways I have a bit of a conflict of interest, because I have maintained a fairly close relationship with some of the Ontario universities since my election here as a graduate student some 16 years ago, and I think the universities have a very good case for our attention and for the levels of support that, in most cases, they have put.

It is not, however, an absolute case, and I have been particularly struck by some of the recent reports that have been produced in this province and in this country. An old colleague and leader of mine, Stuart Smith, has just completed a one-person inquiry into Canadian universities, which report has been talked about in recent weeks. I think my friend the member for Nepean may have said—if he did not say it, he intended to say it in his remarks—that the Smith study is an interesting one to review, because in that year-long or 18-month-long survey, Stuart Smith encountered quite a lot of interest, much of it positive, some of it downright negative in so far as the universities were concerned. He found, for example, a growing worry that universities are not spending as much time focusing on teaching, and in that I would tend to agree. We have an ethic now that seems to place research and the writing of wonderfully arcane treatises as being significantly more important than teaching.

I went as a graduate student to Queen's University and as an undergraduate student to the old Waterloo Lutheran University. When I look back on both of those experiences—

Mrs Cunningham: You are really dating yourself.

Mr Conway: I am dating myself. But one of the things I would say to the member for London North is that I remember most fondly both of those institutions, in different ways, because they both focused a great deal of their energy back in the late 1960s and early 1970s on the teaching aspect of their mandate. I continue to believe that teaching, particularly at the undergraduate level, is an enormously important aspect of the university mandate, and I think all university boards of governors and administrators would do well to reflect upon some of the criticism that Stuart Smith picked up as he did his cross-Canada survey of attitudes to Canadian universities.

The resolution before us asks us to consider that "the government of Ontario follow the example of British Columbia and establish immediately crown foundations at Ontario universities to increase private sector incentives for making major charitable contributions towards higher education." I support that, because I think it is timely and I think it would be helpful. I agree with the previous speaker, the member for Windsor-Walkerville, that we should not imagine that this is going to be any kind of panacea, because it is certainly not going to solve all the budgetary pressures that universities have.

I know from having had some recent discussions with people at Queen's University, for example, that they are very keen to see this kind of public policy enacted, and I am sure the member for Frontenac-Addington has been similarly petitioned in this connection. I would expect, for example, that Queen's University and the University of Western Ontario, both of which, I think, are officially on record as supporting this, would do quite well, whereas perhaps some of the newer universities in the province might have a bit more difficulty. This will be an interesting competition when this policy is decided upon. I would think that not all the institutions would be starting at the same baseline, if you know what I mean, Mr Speaker. But I do think it is a policy we should endorse and, I have some reason to believe, the government may in fact be very favourably disposed towards.

There are some real problems, as I say, in the financing of our post-secondary institutions. I have believed for me time that we should be looking for some additional ways to assist the universities. That is why I have felt, however appealing it might be to some, the idea that there cannot be any student contribution in the form of tuition is just not realistic. I have defended reasonable tuition fee increases over the years and I will continue to do so, not because I want to unfairly single out those people of whatever age category who are participating in post-secondary education but simply because—I think tuition income represents about 17%, 18%, 19% of the total income pie of our universities—I do not think that is unreasonable, particularly when you look at the profile of who traditionally has gone to university.

If there ever was a middle-class commitment, it is the university commitment. We have tried, with varying degrees of success over the years—and the new government has some very interesting initiatives to widen the participation. I certainly would support that, but the fact of the matter is that, by and large, it has been a middle-class commitment, and those people who graduate with that wonderful certificate from Western or Windsor or Wilfrid Laurier or Queen's or Carleton will carry with them, we are told by the analysts, a certificate that will substantially increase their lifetime earnings. So there are those who argue, in the interest of fairness and equity, if Conway is going to spend half his life in university and benefit materially for the rest of his working life, why should he not make some kind of contribution to that not just intellectual stimulus but financial advantage?

I would say as well that government grants have increased, as I think many people have observed over the last few years. University administrators, if they were here, would say, "Yes, but they have not kept pace with real costs." To some extent that is true, because we have seen a very real pressure on the admission side, for whatever reason. When I think back to 10 years ago and the projections of where we would be, I think it was predicted by a lot of people that by about 1986, the total enrolment would peak and then it would start to trend downwards, when in fact that has not happened. That interest in attending university continues to be strong, and in some sectors and in some ways dramatically so. So I want to say that the increases our government provided, and certainly that the new government is providing, are helpful, but they are not solving all the problems.

The Provincial Auditor has been looking at how some of these universities spend the millions and millions of dollars we have provided. There have been audits at the University of Toronto, at Trent and at Guelph, and they have been very interesting audits. I think those audits should be carefully looked at by members of this Legislature, and I want to congratulate the auditor, because he went about his work professionally and has produced reports that are very careful.

The standing committee on public accounts has made some recommendations in its most recent report. Reading from the June 1991 report, our public accounts committee recommends that there be amendments to the Ontario Audit Act to provide the Provincial Auditor with the discretionary authority to perform value-for-money audits of any government agency and all transfer payment recipients. In the case of universities, this audit approach will help to address the management accountability of each university's administration, while at the same time respecting the academic autonomy of these institutions.

I think in the main we are well served by our universities. I think over the years they have behaved quite responsibly, but there are aspects of the university question that bear very careful scrutiny. I have found that the doctrine of institutional autonomy is one that some in the university want to hide behind, to excuse some conduct that in a lot of other public places would not be tolerated.

I want to tell the honourable members that I have, as I say, a number of very good friends who work in the universities, and I hear some very interesting tales about what goes on. We are petitioned here by faculty associations and by administrative staff for more money, more money, more money, and that is perfectly fair and reasonable. But I was stunned while out for dinner one day not too many months ago a very good friend of mine, at a very distinguished, large university found in the city of Waterloo, told me that the average salary a year or two ago at a humanities department at that university was something approaching $75,000. That had nothing to do with income earned outside that salary. In many cases, I know a lot of my good friends in the universities find a lot of very—

Mrs Cunningham: Kindergarten teachers get $65,000.

Mr Conway: Kindergarten teachers, I am told, get $65,000.

My only point was that I remember as minister the data that were quoted to me about salary levels, and to be told that the average salary in that department was $73,000 or $74,000, exclusive of moonlighting opportunities, which are not inconsiderable in the university community, I say to my friend the member for London North, was just a very interesting revelation.

We should, as responsible members of the Legislature, not take hook, line and sinker every petition which is offered by whomsoever comes to ask for more money. I repeat, I think in the main we have been served rather well by the universities. I think they deserve the program and the policy the member for Nepean has put before us in this connection, but there are some very real issues attendant upon the university question—the issue of accountability. How are they spending their money? The audit at Trent University found some dramatic things. The farmers and the retail clerks in my riding, most of whom did not have an opportunity to go to university, looked at some of that with some degree of concern.

I do not know how many members have been following the debate in the United States, but Congress hauled before it the distinguished president of the endlessly distinguished Stanford University, who had to explain multimillion-dollar misappropriations of public money funnelled to Stanford through, I think, one of the defence accounts. I have not seen a congressional cross-examination quite like that in a while.

Of course the universities have important work to perform. Of course they should have the highest level of public support, and they deserve that support. But I am telling members, I am finished with any kind of uncritical acceptance of every petition from that quarter or any other. I know my friends in the university community, whether they are part of the professoriate or the administrative élite, will hear me when I say that this Legislature and its agents like the Provincial Auditor are increasingly serious about the accountability question.

I think we would do well not just to support this resolution standing in the name of my friend the member for Nepean, but also we have to become more vigilant about exacting an accountability from those good men and women who serve us in the university community.

Mrs Witmer: I am pleased to have the opportunity today to speak to the resolution of the member for Nepean. I represent the riding of Waterloo North, and within my riding there are two universities, the University of Waterloo and Wilfrid Laurier University.

Yesterday I had an opportunity to tour the University of Waterloo when I was there on the occasion of the opening of the Guelph-Waterloo audio-visual link. This is a very significant step forward. It was a partnership funded by business, Electrohome, the government and the university. It allows the classes to be taught simultaneously in classrooms both at the University of Waterloo and at the University of Guelph. It is a tremendous saving for the universities. It also permits the students to sit in one city and not have to drive to another. This is what we need to be promoting. We need to promote partnerships among business, the government and the universities.

Yesterday I witnessed the fact that universities are facing many financial challenges. There was certainly a shortage of space in the buildings. I encountered many students in overcrowded classrooms and in portables. There were outdated facilities and there was outdated equipment.

I think we have to remember that universities make a very vital contribution to the economic stability of this province. They pump $6.2 billion into the economy and they receive $1.9 billion from the government, which means that for every $1 the government invests, the universities generate $3. If we invest in our universities, we are investing in our future and in the young people of this country.

I support the establishment of these crown foundations, which would encourage more private donations. This is going to go a considerable length in alleviating the very severe underfunding problem at our Ontario universities. This is going to help that very critical financial situation. At the present time we see that our universities are jeopardized. Their ability to effectively teach and conduct research is in jeopardy. What we need is additional funding and we need a long-range recovery plan from this government.

As has been mentioned before, we already have these crown foundations established in BC, Alberta and Nova Scotia, and what this would do, of course, is to increase the incentive of the private sector to make very unique and outstanding charitable contributions to the universities in this province. This would provide an incentive to those people in our society who are most able to contribute to increase their support for our public universities.

Unfortunately, because there is a situation in the three other provinces, especially BC, where they have already provided for the establishment of crown foundations at their universities, Ontario universities at the present time are at a very distinct disadvantage in their ability to attract major bequests and gifts. Many universities in this province have indicated to me that they have lost significant potential gifts to other provinces because of this fact, especially in BC.

The University of Waterloo in my own city is aware of at least a $1-million gift that is pending. If this legislation were to be passed, that is $1 million this university would not have to receive from the government, which is already stretched to the limit.

This type of philanthropy is vital to our ability to offer nationally and internationally acclaimed programs for the students of Ontario. At the University of Waterloo we have some of these programs that are world renowned.

We need to promote this concept. It is a concept that has been widely discussed and widely supported by the university community, and there is tremendous benefit for this government at this time, especially when it finds itself in a very constrained financial position. I would urge all the members today to support the motion to create the crown foundations for Ontario so that the young people in this province can be provided with the facilities, the staff and the equipment so that they can in the future make a contribution to this province.

As I indicated before, we need to look to our young people. We need to look at stimulating our economy. If we are going to fund those social programs, we need to create the wealth and universities help us in the creation of wealth.

At my own university, we have the Centre for Groundwater Research. This is a centre of excellence. It is supported by the Ontario technology fund. This centre is a world leader. People from Libya, Ukraine and China come to this centre in their demand for ground water technology, and this is one area where Ontario can compete globally and contribute to economic growth, because what has happened at this centre of excellence is that there have been spinoff industries created for people in this province.

I urge members to seriously consider supporting this motion, which would allow the private sector to make major charitable donations towards higher education. That is very needed at this time in this province when we are facing so many financial constraints.

Mr Frankford: As a member with a university in his riding, Scarborough college, part of the University of Toronto, I certainly take a great interest in this. I also happen to have a daughter who makes the almost impossible trek to York University. So I acknowledge the need for more funding of the universities. I would also point out, as people have before, that the universities' share of provincial budgetary expenditure has been going down progressively er many years. The per capita funding has not kept up with the inflationary growth of expenditures. I welcome the chance to debate this.

I would have some reservations, however, in contrast to most of the other speakers. I think the member for Nepean did not have sufficient time to go into some of the questions and perhaps I could bring up a few questions.

As he said, in British Columbia the Social Credit government brought in a crown corporation. My understanding is that it has not been all that successful. I think one has to look at this particular way of bringing in the possibility of targeting funds by donors, which may be good but may not be so good. It may produce distortions, from what those particular donors want. It may produce an excessive business bias. It may produce an ideology that universities are just to further the economy, which I am sure the member for Nepean does not fully support.

Universities have to cover the full range of disciplines and I think we need to spend in the humanities, in the social sciences. These also have spinoffs. I think there is something of an implication coming across that universities are part of an industrial strategy. I am sure people do not really fully feel that, but I think there is a possibility this is what comes across.

I really should close because I want to let my colleague finish, but I think one should look at whether this is the only way of doing it or whether we would be better off with a fair tax policy, and we do have a Fair Tax Commission sitting. I would like to elaborate more but I will defer to my colleague.

Mr Sutherland: It is a pleasure for me to participate in the debate this morning on the resolution put forward by the member for Nepean. As members know, before I came here I had extensive involvement in the university setting at the University of Western Ontario, being president of the student council. I remember quite vividly coming to Queen's Park and actually lobbying the former Minister of Colleges and Universities, the member for Renfrew North, and I always found it quite challenging then, as we all have come to find it challenging debating him on whatever issue.

I want to say that I give my support to this resolution and I compliment the member for Nepean for bringing it forward. We have a great challenge in this country and within this province, and that is to try to find the adequate resources necessary to sustain our post-secondary education system. Whatever we can do as legislators and as elected officials to enhance that, we should be trying to do that, and I think that is the purpose of establishing crown foundations.

We know that in many of the American universities, not so much the major ones, the Harvards and Princetons, but in some of the state universities, in some cases they are receiving more per-student grant from their state governments than we are able to give at this time as a province. We also know, though, that many of the universities in the United States have large endowment funds, and a great deal of those large endowment funds come from the fact that they have more generous rules and regulations allowing people to donate to universities and to set them up.

I know from my experience at Western that it is just in the process of completing a very successful fund-raising campaign, the Renaissance Campaign, where it has been able to raise about $95 million. But that has been a very targeted campaign.

What we have to look at in the context of this resolution is, over the longer term, how are they going to continue to raise those funds and to build up endowment funds and to build up research chairs and better opportunities, and hopefully scholarships, because I want to say to members today that I do not think I would be here today if it were not for my being fortunate enough to be able to attend university, and particularly to attend Western, and the many opportunities it gave me to grow and develop, not only in intellectual terms but growing and developing as an individual with a chance to develop my ideas and thoughts.

Universities are doing many good things in our communities. We know the recent report put out by Stuart Smith, and there was some criticism that universities are not representative. I would say that in my years at the university, I saw a significant change in the makeup and in the direction. When I first went, there were not such things as employment equity committees. They are dealing with the issue of pay equity and are just starting to deal with the issue of race relations. I compliment the universities, and particularly Western, for the progress they are making.

That is not to imply that there is not a lot more to be done. There is no doubt that there is a great deal more to be done, but I think from the institutional standpoint of recognizing that and putting some formal procedures in place to make our universities more accessible, they are doing a very good job in this province.

To conclude, I support the resolution. I certainly hope we can see some legislation at some point. I know there are concerns about tax breaks for corporations, but my sense has always been that we never evaluate what type of tax breaks we allow. I think this, an investment in our future, in our education system and allowing other people to share in the same opportunity I was fortunate enough to share in, is a good tax break to allow and is a good investment for the province as a whole.

Mr Daigeler: Let me say first of all that I appreciate the contributions made by the various members of the House, and certainly their support for my resolution.

It seems to me—perhaps I am being a little bit immodest—that the resolution I have put forward is the type of initiative that is particularly appropriate for private members' hour. I think it is a resolution the government can do something about. I think it is something important for the community out there, and in fact can be done quickly.

To the member for Scarborough East, I would like to say that the reservations he put forward are thoughtful ones and I appreciate that he has put them on the record, because I think I share them and any reasonable university member would share them as well. We do not want the academic sector to be tied into the particular interests of any community, be that the business community or labour or whatever it is. I certainly agree with him that we will have to be very careful that increasing private donations will not increase the ties—perhaps “ties” is the wrong word—the obligations of the universities towards the private sector, because I think independence, academic freedom, is a very important objective and I do not want to deny that. I think he is right in his concern.

At the same time, I do not want to wait for the results of the Fair Tax Commission to put forward an initiative that can provide some support for the universities right now. So while I appreciate the concerns that were expressed, I also appreciate the support that was indicated by this House.

ONTARIO WATER RESOURCES
AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

DIABETES CELEBRITY CHALLENGE

Ms Poole: In Tuesday's Toronto Star it was reported that doctors are at a loss to determine why people suffering from diabetes, which is an acute disease that affects more than 1.2 million Canadians every year, are being diagnosed at the rate of 60,000 cases per year.

The most disturbing reality of this disease is that half the Canadians who have diabetes do not even know they have it. The symptoms of diabetes can be so subtle that they can be easily mistaken for everyday aches and pains. Only people realized that diabetes-related complications are the third leading cause of death by disease in Ontario today. Even the belief that insulin is the ultimate cure is grossly inaccurate. A daily injection of insulin can only help diabetics manage the disease, not cure it.

My colleague the Deputy Speaker and I have joined eight other MPPs in this House in participating in the Canadian Diabetic Association's celebrity challenge. As a participant in this challenge, I am required to live the life of a diabetic for one week. This includes activities such as injecting insulin into this teddy bear twice a day, taking a blood test by pricking my finger three times a day to test the glucose level, exercising regularly and following a strict diet.

I ask all members to join me in promoting the health of people across Ontario and Canada and recognizing the Canadian Diabetic Association's great job.

IVOR MCMULLIN

Mr Tilson: I would like to bring to the attention of members of the Legislature the passing away of Mr Ivor McMullin, former chairman of the Niagara Escarpment Commission and former politician for the town of Caledon.

Mr McMullin first became involved in politics in 1945 when he was the secretary-treasurer for the Albion township school board. In 1962 he was successful in obtaining a seat on the Albion council. One of the first jobs facing him as a council member was finding a new landfill site for Albion-Bolton. As a result of this experience, he was able to sympathize with the problem Peel is having with its landfill site.

In 1966 Mr McMullin was elected as reeve of Albion and in 1974 he became the first mayor of the town of Caledon. Following that, he served two terms as warden for the county of Peel. Mr McMullin was involved in the original formation of regional government in the area. He felt strongly that there were both advantages and disadvantages to the system, but was convinced that each area had to try to work hard at making it work. He considered that the Peel region had achieved the best results.

In 1975 Mr McMullin became chair of the Niagara Escarpment Commission and held the position for 11 years. During his term as chairman, he saw many changes.

Mr McMullin made a valuable contribution to the town of Caledon and the surrounding area and will be greatly missed by all the residents. I would ask members of this Legislature to join me in extending our sincere condolences to his wife and family.

DIABETES CELEBRITY CHALLENGE

Mr Mills: I thought I was bumped off my statement, but I am told I am on it, so I am going to talk freely without notes.

I am going to take on the Canadian Diabetic Association celebrity challenge. Like my colleague the member for Eglinton and other members in this Legislature, I am a participant in this challenge. I personally find it very interesting. It gives me an insight into what it is really like to be a diabetic sufferer. Those people who have that disease indeed have my sympathy.

I have injected myself, taken my blood levels all through the week, and it has given me quite a lesson in what to eat and what not to eat. I really thank the association for giving me the opportunity.

On a humorous note, when I left my riding of Durham East to come back to Toronto on Sunday night, as I do, I was going out to my car and my wife came running out. Luckily no neighbours heard her. She said, "Have you got your teddy bear with you?" I thank the fact that it was dark and everybody had gone to bed by that time.

CANADIAN FORCES RESCUE TEAM

Mr H. O'Neil: I rise today to recognize the courage and bravery of the heroic men and women involved in the rescue of survivors from the Canadian armed forces C-130 Hercules aircraft which crashed in the Canadian Arctic last week. I trust that all members of the assembly will join me in paying tribute to the five people who sadly lost their lives in the crash and in offering our best wishes to the 13 survivors who were so heroically rescued.

Help was dispatched when crews from 424 Transport Squadron Trenton ferried a helicopter to Ellesmere Island. Prior to the helicopter's arrival, rescuers dropped flares from circling aircraft to shed light for the parachutists. The aircraft dove beneath the light of the flares and the parachutists dropped through howling winds in the pitch black of an Arctic night to open their chutes at an altitude of only 700 feet. They descended within seconds from the dangerous jump to reach the survivors below.

The loss of one of the victims is being felt at CFB Trenton, where Master Warrant Officer John Jardine was stationed. Among the three survivors from CFB Trenton is Captain Wilma DeGroot, a doctor who overlooked her own injuries to provide medical care to other members of the crew and passengers. Two of the other injured from Trenton were Bob Thomson and Susan Hillier.

I want to salute the men and women of the armed forces involved in the rescue, especially those from CFB Trenton. We also extend our sincere sympathy to the families who lost their loved ones in the crash and we wish a speedy recovery to those injured.

POLICE SERVICES

Mr J. Wilson: For several months the current Solicitor General and his predecessors sat silently while portions of my Simcoe West riding went without 24-hour police coverage. On October 8, I am pleased to inform the Legislature, in response to the identified need for 24-hour policing in the areas of Stayner, Wasaga Beach, Creemore and Elmvalle, the OPP district 7 command unilaterally and without government help put in place limited 24-hour policing.

The 24-hour police coverage provided by the OPP in this area is very limited, however. In fact, one OPP officer described the new coverage as a stopgap, Band-Aid solution. The officer went so far as to categorize the situation as ludicrous.

Two weeks ago the OPP presented the Solicitor General with a proposal for new staff and the redeployment of existing staff to the hot spots of criminal activity. To date, neither the OPP nor members of this Legislature are aware of the government's response to this crisis.

I demand that the Solicitor General tell this House today what steps he is taking to help the people in my riding and in other areas who are hurting and who are at risk because of the shortage of OPP officers and staff. This government must act now to provide safety for these communities and to restore the beleaguered morale of police officers in Simcoe County and across Ontario.

WAYLAND DREW

Mr Waters: I rise in the House today to pay tribute to one of my constituents, Mr Wayland Drew of Bracebridge. Mr Drew, an English teacher at Bracebridge and Muskoka Lakes Secondary School, is a renowned writer, essayist and environmentalist who has contributed much to the Muskoka community and was rightly honoured for his dedication in the month of October.

On October 15, Mr Drew was presented with the Conservation Council of Ontario's annual Lieutenant Governor's award for his support of environmental issues. Well known in Muskoka for his outstanding achievements in conserving and protecting the natural environment, Wayland Drew was central in the organization of the Signs of Hope conference last April. The Signs of Hope conference brought together environmentalists from across Canada and provided Muskoka educators with a forum to discuss methods of communicating the importance of global environmental issues to their students.

On October 26, Mr Drew was presented with an honorary doctor of letters degree from Trent University for his literary contribution as an essayist and author. With 12 books to his credit, including three travel books, several radio dramas and numerous essays, he is best known for his Earth-ring science fiction series.

I thank Mr Drew for his commitment to Muskoka and I ask members of this Legislature to join with me in paying tribute to this dedicated environmentalist.

GOVERNMENT STRATEGY

Mr Phillips: Seven weeks ago we began this session. In those seven weeks we have seen very clearly the style of operation the government is going to pursue in the future.

It is clear that in their first year they suffered greatly in their public image. Now we see their plan to correct that.

The first part of the plan is that we have seen very few ministers' statements in the House, and when a statement is made it is the flimsiest of statements with the barest of details. Obviously this is designed to minimize the opposition's effectiveness and allow them to craft the message.

Second, we have seen the Premier in this House, by my calculations, less than twice a week, and when he is here we see him for about half an hour; again, clearly designed to minimize this House and its role and to maximize the Premier's central control.

When the Premier's own caucus members get slightly out of line and try to speak their own minds, what happens? They fire the Chairman of the committee. The member for Lincoln has now gone off the committee and lost his chairmanship role.

They manage the committees. The standing committee on finance and economic affairs travelled across the province hoping to get an unbiased opinion. The public presentations were stacked.

It may seem effective in the short term, this sort of cynical, manipulative approach to the House, but I assure members, the public in this province is too wise to fall for it. They are seeing through it now and it must change.

EDUCATION LEGISLATION

Mrs Cunningham: Bill 125, An Act to amend the Education Act and certain other Acts relating to Education, was introduced on June 13 by the former Minister of Education. This bill deals with 18 separate and unrelated changes to the Education Act, with implications for school boundaries, testing, employment equity, suspensions and pooling, to name just a few of the many issues that school boards and teachers need opportunities for public discussion about.

It will also remove existing provisions relating to religious education where "as his parent or guardian desires" has been a key phrase in the present legislation. Parents are very concerned that if Bill 125 is passed in its present form, the only clause which recognizes the principle of parental rights in the Education Act will disappear. They are trusting that the NDP government will consider their amendments in response to their interests.

When the bill receives second reading, I will be requesting on behalf of my Progressive Conservative colleagues that the entire bill be referred to committee for public hearings. I urge the new Minister of Education to seriously consider the concerns of so many Ontario citizens and to give sufficient time for public input so that we can clearly talk about the many issues that will affect the quality of education and the lives of students and parents in this province.

DIABETES CELEBRITY CHALLENGE

Mr Sutherland: I would like to join with my colleagues in talking about the celebrity challenge. As members know, to increase public awareness of the seriousness of the disease, which affects more than 600,000 Canadians, myself and nine other MPPs from all three parties are participating in the diabetes celebrity challenge.

For the past week we have lived the lifestyle of a person with diabetes. We have taken our blood sugar readings several times a day, injected an insulin substitute into a volunteer teddy bear, and followed a strict diet and exercise program.

At a press conference announcing the celebrity challenge, Dr Gerald Wong, an expert on diabetes, discussed its impact on health care. He said many diabetics also suffer other health problems, including a significant increase in the risk of blindness, kidney failure and heart disease. The most striking comment made by Dr Wong was that diabetics must take responsibility for their own health. They must regulate their diet and exercise and be more careful about their lifestyle.

However, this piece of advice rings true not just for diabetics but for all of us. Health care in Ontario today consumes $17 billion, one third of the provincial budget. All of us value our medicare system and want to preserve it, but to afford our health care system and meet the many other challenges, all of us must examine our own habits to make our lifestyles healthier. Eating a balanced diet, consuming less processed food, and broiling food rather than frying it are simple things that each of us can do to stay healthy and help control health care costs.

Mr Mills: I believe there is unanimous consent to spend a few moments speaking to Armistice Day.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement?
Agreed to.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Mr Mills: This coming weekend, many of us will gather to honour the men and women of our country who gave their lives for us and freedom in two world wars. Many of our young people today have no comprehension of the magnitude of death and suffering these wars caused. We shudder in horror lest they ever be repeated.

Over the weekend many of us will honour our family members and friends who were involved in the campaigns in the North Atlantic, in northwest Europe, in Italy, in North Africa and in the Pacific. We honour those who served in the Dieppe raid and in the defence of Hong Kong, in the battle of Ortona and in the invasion of Normandy.

We also honour the 2,383 women of the Canadian Women's Army Corps who were employed in theatres of operation overseas. Many of these women who served in the United Kingdom were wounded by buzz-bombs. Twenty-five were killed on duty; 65 were decorated for bravery.

We also honour those who gave their lives in the First World War and in the Korean conflict, and also those who have given their lives for peace while serving with the United Nations forces.

Time has taken its toll and the number of veterans each year grows fewer, but we are still proud, and if with the passing years there is a small lack of precision among the marchers, we do not notice, for this, above all, is a personal parade. None of us can go back in time, and that itself is a grace bestowed.

On this weekend, as the memories are exchanged at public ceremonies and in the legion halls, we will remember with affection all those who answered the call to serve their country. Their contribution to the betterment of humanity can never be measured.

Mr Morin: Next Monday is Remembrance Day and, on behalf of the official opposition, I pay tribute to the brave Canadians who served that we might live in freedom and peace.

On November 11, we commemorate the 100,000 men and women in the Canadian Forces who were killed while defending our nation in the Great War, the Second World War and the Korean War.

I served in Korea with the 3rd Battalion of the Royal 22nd Regiment. I witnessed first hand the results of war.

At this moment, citizens in hundreds of countries around the world live in war zones.

Until our most recent experience in the Persian Gulf, an entire generation of Canadians had thought of war as something remote. We were isolated from its reality. The Persian Gulf War forced us to confront the reality and the ugliness of war once again. The results of that war are still unfolding before our very eyes. Our brave Canadian service personnel served with distinction in that conflict.

Through the organization of the Royal Canadian Legion, on November 11 we will pause to remember those who died for our democracy and the veterans who still feel the scars of those wars. On this occasion let us also pray for those countries less fortunate than Canada.

Mrs Cunningham: I am truly honoured today on behalf of our party to be able to speak on this important subject. All of us in this House and the people who expect us to represent them in this great democracy that some of us have come to take for granted are most interested in the leadership I think we show in this assembly today in remembering those who went before us and gave up their lives so that some of us are able to be here to represent our constituents and so that this great democracy could survive and this great province and country that we live in could move forward.

All of us have special memories. Mine were in the city growing up as a young child, when this special day meant, I think, much more than it seems to now, when we took part in our own Remembrance Day ceremonies, usually within our own neighbourhoods, and walked down to our parks and had our assemblies in our schools and remembered not just people who went before us but usually parents and grandparents and uncles and sometimes aunts. It was much more meaningful because it hit so close to home. So I think today in these times we have to work much harder to make sure that we do not forget those who gave up their lives for us during the great wars.

I just hope the young people across our province will take a moment in their schools on Monday to remember. Fortunately, in these days schools are still in session and there are times to remember. Probably each and every one of us will remember the times we had to at least say, sometimes by memory, the poem In Flanders Fields. I hope they are doing it on Monday.

The war came to an end at 11 am, November 11, 1918, some 70 years ago or more, and it was supposed to be the war that ended all wars. November 11 has since become an international day of remembrance in all the countries involved in that terrible war to commemorate those who made the supreme sacrifice.

Here in Canada we pay tribute to the more than 100,000 individuals who lost their lives not just in that war but in the Second World War and the Korean conflict. We also honour those who have served in our armed forces.

Fortunately our younger generation has not had to experience the horrors and tragedy of war themselves, but we all realize that with our modern weapons of total destruction, it is impossible for any country to win a war. We witnessed that just within the last year. That Great War that was supposed to be the end of all wars simply was not, and we continue to fight on behalf of families and parents and the world for peace.

Each year there are fewer and fewer veterans to march to the cenotaphs and deposit their poppies on the wreaths. Each year the memories of those wars become more distant and remote to many who were not there or who were not born at that time. Each year we must continue to remember and to make sure that our young people and those who come after us will never forget. Thus we wear our poppies.

The Speaker: In recognition of Remembrance Day I invite all members and visitors seated in the galleries to stand for a moment and bow our heads in silent prayer.

LABOUR RELATIONS

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I am very pleased at this time to announce the release of the discussion paper on reform of the Labour Relations Act. Distribution of this document today marks the beginning of a full province-wide consultation which my ministry will conduct with business, labour and other interested groups. The goal of this government is to achieve greater fairness and equality in the workplace. We seek to modernize an important piece of legislation, to respond to Ontario's new economic and workplace realities and to include employees who are currently prevented from organizing by the law.

It has been 15 years since the Labour Relations Act was significantly amended. The collective bargaining process itself has withstood the test of time, but the government believes the act is in need of renewal. In our view, the act fails to deal with changes in the province's workplace and workforce. The Labour Relations Act was designed to serve an economy characterized by a stable, mostly male workforce employed in large factories and plants.

But times have changed, and the workplace and the workers themselves have also changed. Smaller companies in the service and retail sectors are taking over a larger role in our country's economic life. Workplaces are moving from traditional factories to small industrial parks and plazas. We have also seen the rapid growth of part-time and casual positions, particularly in the burgeoning service sector. These less secure and less-well-paid jobs are often filled by women, recent immigrants and visible minorities.

We believe the act should be revised to respond to this change in workplace and workforce. In particular, it must meet the needs of women, minorities and lower-paid workers. This government also believes that strong employee participation, made possible by independent representation and collective bargaining, can play a positive role in making the workplace more innovative and more productive.

Any reform of the act must seek to reduce the level of confrontation and antagonism that often characterizes labour-management relations. There are currently a number of elements in the existing legislation that prevent rather than encourage the kind of co-operative relationships that are needed to respond to rapid economic change in our country.

Beyond this, when labour-management disagreements do happen, as they will, we believe there are a number of ways to improve the bargaining process so that the parties can reach their own workable solution.

The government believes that giving a meaningful voice to employees through an improved collective bargaining process will make for greater industrial peace and improved efficiency. Such a result can play a major role in Ontario's economic renewal.

The government's commitment to reform of the Labour Relations Act fits hand in hand with the government's overall economic and social agenda. This agenda includes the newly introduced worker investment and ownership legislation, the upgrading and refocusing of worker training systems, continued investment in the province's physical infrastructure, employment equity and reform of the social assistance system to provide recipients with better access to training and employment.

Ontario's future prosperity will be based on successful efforts to maximize the ability of its workers to participate and be fairly treated.

This government believes that Ontario can move a long way towards achieving that goal by making it easier for workers to participate in collective bargaining.

Through the consultation process we want to hear from all sides on our reform ideas. The discussion paper makes proposals and focuses discussion on five key areas: (1) increasing co-operation between labour and management when a workplace is undergoing major change; (2) streamlining and improving the grievance arbitration process and the work of the Ontario Labour Relations Board; (3) improving the process by which first contracts are finalized; (4) removing some of the obstacles which hamper employees' ability to organize and giving the right to form unions to some employees currently barred from organizing, and (5) limiting the use of replacement workers during a strike or lockout to existing on-site management.

I invite all to take part in these discussions.

Some business groups and individuals have expressed opposition to what they believed this discussion document would contain. I challenge them to deal with our proposals and ideas as they stand today.

I also ask all Ontarians to view this consultation process as a real opportunity for them to contribute to the reform of the Labour Relations Act.

We will not make any final decisions on the content of the reform legislation until we have heard from and considered the views of all interested parties.

Beginning today, there will be a period of more than three months in which interested individuals and groups can submit a written response. In order to allow ministry officials time to review these submissions and prepare draft legislation, I am asking people to submit their response by February 14, 1992. Before that date, senior ministry staff and I will meet directly with key business, labour and other groups in 10 locations around the province to discuss the ideas and proposals contained in the consultation paper.

We plan to introduce legislation in the spring and I expect that there will be an extensive and spirited debate in this House.

There will be further opportunities for public participation in the process when the legislation reaches the committee stage, including the likelihood of province-wide public hearings on our specific legislative proposals.

In effect, we are embarking today on a process of ongoing consultation which will last many months.

I look forward to hearing all points of view on a subject so crucial to the economic and social wellbeing of Ontario. By working together, I know we can forge new and better labour laws for the 1990s and beyond. I believe this is our opportunity to develop a much more co-operative partnership between business and labour. I am pleased to bring this forward and I thank you, Mr Speaker.

RESPONSES

LABOUR RELATIONS

Mr Offer: I have three areas of concern over the statement made by the Minister of Labour today. I want to address them in the time allotted to me.

The first is, why has the government not provided us with any evidence as to the impact these legislative changes will have? Has the minister prepared an economic study? If not, then to press ahead with changes and proposals for change without knowing what the impact of those changes will be in terms of jobs, the creation and maintenance of jobs, is, I say, totally irresponsible.

If the Minister of Labour has that information, then he should stand up and provide it to the opposition so that we will be able to address those concerns that have been given to us from across the province. When we talk about the impact on jobs, we want to hear from the minister what the impact on jobs will be for people who are outside affected workplaces when unions will be permitted to organize and picket in shopping malls.

What does that mean in terms of job creation and job maintenance? How will other people conduct their businesses? What effect will be caused by permitting security guards to join the same union as the people they are watching over? How will the organization of front-line supervisors affect the ability of businesses to carry on, especially during strike situations? What we want to know from the minister is, has he looked at what the impact of those proposals means in terms of job creation and the maintenance of jobs in this province?

The second area of concern I have is that his paper fails to address the single greatest concern that business has voiced in this province: the necessity for change. His paper fails to talk about whether he will discuss that particular aspect, whether change is in fact necessary. The minister has shut the door on that type of consultative process and business has been calling for him to open the door to consultation. They have challenged him to say he is ready to listen as to whether change is or is not needed. That is what business has been asking the minister to do. His statement here today has clearly been to shut the door in the face of that process of consultation.

A third area of concern I have deals with the whole credibility of the process. The minister's cabinet submission spoke about the need to neutralize opposition to these reforms. He has spoken about consultation, yet his Premier has said at a United Steelworkers of America conference in Ontario that he vows to press ahead with the controversial overhaul of the Ontario Labour Relations Act. He speaks about consultation and the Premier has already vowed that these things are in fact going to happen.

The minister, in his previous cabinet submission, has said he is going to neutralize the opposition. I can tell the minister that we are going to continue to voice concerns about these changes and about the direction. We are going to be talking about the impact of those changes. We are going to be doing it in this Legislature and outside this Legislature until the message has been given to him about what impact these changes will have, what they mean to job creation and the maintenance of jobs in this province, and to the economy and the creation of wealth.

Mr Phillips: Just to follow up on my colleague's comments, we certainly will be looking at this in detail. The other day I raised the issue that the timing may be more than coincidence. With the Ontario Federation of Labour biannual meeting coming up in two and a half weeks, it looks suspiciously like this is a plan designed for the triumphant entry of the Minister of Labour.

The reason I raise this is that it clouds the perception of this plan, and these are some of the questions we will be asking. When we looked at the document the minister had prepared before, the fundamental objective was not a harmonious workplace; the fundamental objective was to increase union membership in Ontario. We are very interested in improving the workplace in Ontario. We are very interested in mechanisms that will help to do that. We are very interested in making certain the workers of this province are treated fairly and equitably. But an objective surely is not to increase union membership.

Our party will be doing the very best it can to look at what is going to be the impact of this. If we cannot get from the government the impact analysis, we will try, to the best of our ability, to do our own impact analysis. I also will say to members that we will be consulting broadly as well. I think a hallmark of this government is a very restrictive consultative process. Our party will be consulting broadly and attempting to be helpful in terms of improving this legislation.

Mrs Witmer: I disagree totally with the newspaper editorials today. Business will not be happy with this discussion paper. The minister has confirmed our worst fears. He has not backed away from any of his controversial proposals and he has totally ignored the economic reality. His new proposals will tighten the noose around the neck of all unemployed workers in this province and businesses is struggling to survive in this uncertain economic climate.

I have received hundreds of letters from business people and workers throughout this province and they tell me that this is going to result in a serious loss of investment opportunity in this province. The minister is creating a hostile business environment and is driving people south of this border, which will lead to a further loss of jobs. He is contributing to a loss of our industrial base. This document does not protect and promote individual freedom of expression and protection of privacy in the workplace. It is detrimental to the prospects for economic growth and renewal in Ontario and it is going to give our unions a new set of rights without any accompanying responsibilities.

I am very concerned that there was no consultation with business or any of the non-unionized workers. We have here a proposal that is the agenda of the labour unions. We have here a proposal for which no economic impact study was done. I cannot believe that is not going to happen.

The only areas that have been deleted by this government are areas where it had a fundamental problem with the implementation. Originally they proposed to restrict employer free speech, but that is gone because free speech is an integral component of a free and democratic society. They do not have a specific proposal for access to employee lists because it would have been a violation of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. They do not have a specific proposal for access to an employer's property because it would be a violation of private property rights.

Their consultation paper today still contains the majority of the original 30-point agenda that they drafted for the Burkett committee. This government is making it easier to certify, but more difficult to conduct business in this province. There is not one single new proposal from the business community.

Today I will be introducing a private member's bill to amend the Labour Relations Act. It is going to require a mandatory secret ballot vote for certification-ratification and the decision to go on strike.

This bill today serves only the interests of organized labour. It forgets the other 66% of the workers in this province. It fails to recognize the legitimate concerns of business.

The minister has completely mismanaged this issue from the beginning. He allowed the Burkett report and the leaked cabinet document to circulate. This raised considerable fear and uncertainty within the business community without any formal response until today. That fear and that uncertainty that have been raised have already cost this province much needed investment, jobs and economic growth. If he proceeds with this plan without hearing the real concerns of business and individual workers in this province, I can assure him that more jobs will be lost and that the noose will be tightened for the unemployed workers and the struggling business people.

Mr Carr: As critic for the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Technology, I have had a chance to consult with business, and they are telling me that this will be the single biggest factor in the history of this province in driving jobs out. In speaking with them, some of the comments have been, "These proposals are shocking, highly discriminatory, economy-wrecking." This is what the businesses are saying: 80 replies from businesses in Oakville saying it will be the single biggest factor in destroying jobs here.

I say to this minister, the fight is on and the gloves are off. I want him to wake up at night dreaming about the job losses that are going to come as a result of this legislation. I guarantee him the fight is on now. I am not going to give up and I guarantee him I can beat the member for Welland-Thorold's record because I will stand and fight this thing longer than any other piece of legislation ever going through this Legislature.

ORAL QUESTIONS

The Speaker: It is time for oral questions: the member for St Catharines.

Mr Bradley: I have a question for the Premier but he is not here, so I will let my leader ask a question.

JOB CREATION

Mr Elston: I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Today the government has announced its communication strategy to neutralize opposition to its changes in the Labour Relations Act. I want to know how this minister is going to respond to Ontario's new economic and workplace realities, when that reality is that some 240,000 jobs have been lost in the last year. Can he tell us how many jobs are going to be created by this legislation?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I think the leader of the official opposition will know the jobs that have been lost that he is talking about have been lost without these kinds of changes that want to involve workers. We intend to increase jobs, not lose them, as a result of the legislation.

Mr Elston: While we have lost over 240,000 jobs and while the Minister of Health celebrates the firing of several hundred nurses in this province, can the Minister of Labour tell us how many jobs are going to be created by the effort being placed in these labour relations amendments?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I would not even try to respond to such a simplistic question, but what I can tell the Leader of the Opposition is that when you take a look at free trade, when you take a look at the high dollar and GST, you can see where the jobs have gone.

Mr Elston: I would ask the minister to tell us how these labour relations amendments respond to the high interest, high taxes or any of the other issues he related to us costing us jobs. How are these amendments responding to reduce the loss of jobs, and how many jobs are being created by this legislation?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I think it is obvious that if we have in this province a little more co-operative approach rather than a confrontational approach, and if we involve workers in the decisions, we can have a much more productive society than we currently have in Ontario.

Mr Elston: We give up with that guy.

POLICE SERVICES

Mr Elston: I would like to talk to the Solicitor General about public safety. We had a quote given to us yesterday from the Lindsay Daily Post that said, "But the safety of these communities in Victoria county is being threatened by these cutbacks." The minister responded by saying he was assured that there would be no threat to the public safety.

Again, we read in a Windsor Star of September of this year that the folks in Essex are also facing cutbacks that are taking community patrols off the road and may result in highway patrols being cancelled, which in fact does affect the public safety. Why will the Solicitor General not respond to the need to ensure public safety and why is he continuing to tell us a story about the effect of his fiscal cutbacks?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I want to say first of all that Commissioner O'Grady of the OPP has assured me that there will be no deterioration in service.

The Leader of the Opposition asked me if I would tell him a story. Am I ever pleased to tell him a story, because if he looks to his immediate left, his honourable member asked me yesterday a question on concerns about cutbacks in his particular area and riding. I note in today's newspaper an article which quotes from a Sergeant Peter Hamilton of that very detachment in which he suggests that the measures will not mean a reduction in service to the public:

"The number one thing is that we do not reduce our calls for service. That's the bottom line. In other words, if a member of the public calls, we will respond." He goes on to talk about the 108-kilometre limit that was suggested to be a concern. He says, "I haven't driven any more than 50 per shift, so there's a surplus." He goes on to indicate that if there are those officers driving more than 300 kilometres, he would like to know, and he is going to ask them what they are doing and where they have been.

I want to assure the member, with quotes from the officers themselves, that the problem that is allegedly being created is not a fact at all.

Mr Elston: I can tell the honourable member that the people of the various areas around Ontario have been hearing perhaps not the official line that is required of some people to straighten the record, to make the minister feel better, but hearing that in fact there are going to be more cuts. The fact is that a report out of Essex says there are already slower response times, less crime prevention and fewer community patrols in effect in Essex county as the OPP tries to cut spending.

They have indicated under the heading "OPP Cuts Branded Disaster" that they are concerned about the public safety because they are being restricted as to how much gasoline they can consume, along with other costs they are incurring.

While I am quite free to read my own copies of newspaper articles, I would ask the minister to come forward and tell us exactly how he is going to maintain the current level of service in all the communities and prevent the types of increases in crime statistics that have been indicated as being present in some communities around our province.

Hon Mr Pilkey: I was simply trying to indicate that I believe oppositions are wont to try to explode situations and, of course, that was attempted here yesterday and it is being attempted again today.

I do want to say, however, that there are concerns and I do take them seriously. I have met with Commissioner O'Grady. I will be continuing to meet with him and with other senior staff people of my ministry to ensure that the kind of quality service the OPP has provided to the people of this province in the past will continue into the future, and well into the future.

Mr Conway: I am not at all surprised that someone whose primary function is as a desk police officer would not be travelling around and about the countryside. That is no surprise at all. I have been talking to constables at that Killaloe detachment, and they tell me they are very concerned about what these budgetary cuts are doing to the quality and the range of policing they can provide in that part of rural Ontario. I quoted directly from a staff sergeant at Lindsay who was quoted in the Lindsay Daily Post as saying that policing is being threatened in those Victoria county towns of Bobcaygeon, Woodville and Dunsford.

Surely the top cop, the Solicitor General, would have to agree that when he limits police cruiser mileage to 108 kilometres per eight-hour shift in a large rural detachment, that cannot have any effect but that which the cops on the beat are telling me it is having, which is a reduction in the quality and extent of policing in rural Ontario. Would he not agree, and what is he as top cop going to do about the problems that the cops on the beat in Killaloe are complaining about?

Hon Mr Pilkey: Unless the newspaper reports and quotes are in error, I recommend to the member that he speak to people in his own riding, because if they are factual, the situation he paints is absolutely the reverse.

Mr Harris: I have a question for the Premier. I wonder if anybody can tell us where the Premier is.

The Speaker: The Premier is not in the chamber. Would the member place his question, please.

Mr Harris: I do want it on the record that the Premier is very rarely in the chamber. Whenever these silly, ridiculous proposals come forward, he is out somewhere else.

LABOUR RELATIONS

Mr Harris: I will then direct my question to the Minister of Labour. I believe, as many union members believe, in addition to a lot of people, that this is a sad day for Ontario. I also believe that our worst fears—business's worst fears, investors' worst fears, and in fact workers' worst fears—have come to fruition today with his statement in the House.

Despite the minister's best efforts to spin the story, this is not a balanced white paper. It is not a balanced consultation process. It is a process that will kill jobs and drive investment out of this province.

I would ask the minister to table today or share with us any evidence he has—any study, any proposal, any independent analysis—that what he has presented to us today will, as he states, play a major role in Ontario's economic renewal. In fact, if he has any independent evidence or study that says it will play even a minimal role in Ontario's economic renewal, could he share that information with us?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: Surely the leader of the third party would understand that if we are going to turn around what is a very difficult situation in our province, we are going to have to have both business and labour working together. That is one of the essential parts of this document and the consultative process that we will go through.

Mr Harris: Everybody understands that. I just do not see a shred of evidence that what the minister has presented today is going to do that. In fact, I have umpteen pieces of evidence that it will do the opposite of that.

Let me ask the minister this, by way of supplementary: In his statement he says, "This government also believes that strong employee participation...and collective bargaining can play a positive role in making the workplace more innovative and productive." He says that. I agree that strong employee participation can make the workplace more innovative and productive, but the minister says it can only be done if those employees will devolve that responsibility from themselves, from their fellow co-workers, to some independent representation.

Can the minister show me one example in the history of the world where devolving that responsibility to some independent outsider has increased employee participation in making a positive role, in making the workplace more innovative and productive? Does he have that in any of his studies?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: Surely the leader of the third party understands that when workers organize, they organize so they can act collectively, and that is exactly what they do. If they are acting collectively, they also have some input into decisions that affect their lives.

Mr Harris: The whole premise of the minister's statement, the whole premise of his white paper, is based on somebody else knowing better than the employees in that plant how to deal with that plant and how to make it more productive. That is the false premise he is operating from.

By way of final supplementary, I would ask the minister, and I have asked him over and over before, to do an impact study. Businesses ask for that. Working men and women, union memberships are asking, when I talk to them: "Do they have any impact study on what their proposals are going to do? Can you tell us how many jobs we would gain or lose because of your proposals?" The minister has refused. Well, I have seen one done by Ernst and Young. They are the only ones who have done your homework for you. They found that up to half a million jobs and millions of dollars of investment would be at risk if the leaked document was what the minister was going to bring out as discussion, and it is exactly what he has brought out in his discussion paper.

I would ask the minister again, has he done any impact study other than the one that we have now, done by Ernst and Young? How many Ontario jobs is he willing to risk for the sake of making sure that the few that are left are unionized?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I thought the leader of the third party had read the leaked document, but I am presuming he either has not read that or he has not read the discussion paper that is out today.

Mr Harris: I, like the Liberal Party, give up on the Minister of Labour.

My second question is of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology. We have heard from his co-minister, the Minister of Labour. We have heard him talk about consultation and co-operation, yet the document that was released today will impact greatly on both business and labour and, I suggest, on our economy and jobs.

I am having difficulty identifying anything in this document that will be good for business in the province. I wonder if the minister of Industry, Trade and Technology could tell us, as the minister for business and industry, as their advocate, how many of the proposals in this white paper were brought to the table by labour and how many of the proposals in this white paper were brought to the table by business.

Hon Mr Philip: There are a number of issues that have been brought to the table by business. If members look at the original consultation that has taken place over the last few months, they will see that in the press today business leaders are in fact complimenting this government on the way in which it has listened.

I refer members to the Globe and Mail article that says, "Among other business groups, however, the government has won compliments" on issues ranging from the environment to cross-border shopping, and also on the way in which it has listened about the Labour Relations Act.

We will have a year of consultation, in all, before the legislation is passed, three months initially on the paper and then on the legislation. I can say to the member that not only will the Minister of Labour and myself be listening to business but the whole cabinet and the caucus of this party will be listening to business.

Mr Harris: What I got from the minister were quotes of what was spun out by the NDP political machine as to what would be in the document. Now that business has seen the document and seen that it is virtually the same—in fact in many ways worse than what was leaked out before—it is a completely different story.

I asked the minister if there was one proposal out of these by business. He has not given me one. It confirms my fears and my suspicions and those of business that the consultation is on all the proposals that have been brought forth by labour.

I received from Project Economic Growth a letter to the Premier dated November 1. This group, representing over 250,000 jobs in the province, proposed a co-operative task force on the Ontario workplace. They offered to come to the table and said, "We want to discuss our concerns too, not just our reaction to 60, 80, 100, 30 or 20 labour concerns." They offered to do that in a consultative way. Why did this minister, the Minister of Labour and the Premier reject them out of hand?

Hon Mr Philip: Nothing has been rejected out of hand by anybody except the leader of the third party. He has rejected everything out of hand. The particular proposal he talks about was introduced only a few days ago. We are willing to consider that and any other proposal, including proposals the member may have, but I have not heard anything coming out of his mouth except doom and gloom over this province. By his doom and gloom, he is the one trying to decrease the jobs being created. That is all he has to offer.

Mr Harris: In this House or outside this House, I relay nothing that I have not heard from various people in Ontario. If they are leaving the province, if they are not investing, if they are losing their jobs, it is what they are telling me. It is not anything I am saying, I can tell the minister that.

I suggest to the minister that calling this document a discussion paper is a farce. He is asking business to discuss his proposals, his demands, his labour wish list. That is all he is asking them for input on. It is a document that will make the Premier, the Minister of Labour and Bob White very happy campers. There is nothing to be discussed that business would like to have discussed. They offered and the minister rejected them. I do not know how he has the nerve to ask for input from business now when he ignored it completely.

The minister is asking for suggestions. He is asking what I have to offer. Why is there no mention in his proposal and why is there going to be no discussion, no input on what over 86% of union members want, what business wants, what industry wants; that is, a secret ballot for certification, for strike and for ratification? Why is that not in the proposal?

Hon Mr Philip: The leader of the third party says there is nothing there that business wants. In fact, there is.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Philip: He does not want me to answer, obviously, because he does not like to hear the answer. He would rather spread misinformation about what is in the paper.

Interjections.

Mr Speaker: Would the minister take his seat.

Interjections.

Mr Speaker: I ask the House to come to order.

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for York Mills is asked to come to order quickly. Has the minister concluded his response?

Hon Mr Philip: I was trying to start my response. I resent the fact that the leader of the third party has called my colleague the Minister of Labour stupid. The people in Moose Jaw did not call him stupid; they threw out both the leader and the Conservative Party in Saskatchewan.

He asks, what is in it for business? What is in it for business is a full discussion of work flexibility.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. This House stands recessed for 10 minutes.

The House recessed at 1436.

The Speaker: Have you finished your response?

Hon Mr Philip: Mr Speaker, I am waiting for the leader of the third party, but he has disappeared.

Mrs Cunningham: He has asked his question.

The Speaker: Has the minister concluded his response?

Hon Mr Philip: No, Mr Speaker.

The Speaker: Briefly.

Hon Mr Philip: I thought, out of deference to the leader of the third party, he should be here when I completed the response, but he has disappeared on the House. I am willing, with the permission of the member for London North, who no doubt is a leader in the Conservative Party, and a very good one at that—

The Speaker: Would the minister try to make it brief, please.

Hon Mr Philip: This is the first time in 15 years that any labour legislation has been reformed to any extent in this province, and this gives a unique opportunity for the business community—we have invited the business community—to come forward and talk about flexibility in the workplace and competitiveness. We have extended this opportunity to the business community and we hope it will have an opportunity to participate. In the same way that business cannot compete by using obsolete technology, so it cannot compete by using obsolete labour laws and that is why we have introduced this labour legislation.

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Philip: The leader of the third party says that businesses are leaving the province. Nothing could be farther from the truth. If you look at the figures, Statistics Canada has indicated that from March 1990 to March 1991, 76% of all investments by overseas companies or by foreign companies has been in Ontario, not in any other province, not provinces—

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude his remarks, please.

Hon Mr Philip: Between February and September of this year, 60% of all jobs that have been created in Canada have been created in this province.

The Speaker: Would the minister take his seat, please.

HAZARDOUS WASTE

Mr McClelland: My question is for the Minister of Energy. As he is the minister responsible for energy, I would assume he is aware that PCBs were used by the electricity generating and handling industry for a substantial period of time before being banned in response to concerns about human and wildlife health effects. In fact, the Guide to Eating Ontario Sport Fish, a copy of which I have here, published by his government, contains a discussion paper on the dangers of PCBs.

Does the minister agree that releasing PCBs into the environment as a byproduct of the electricity generating and handling industry is something to be avoided and would be considered unhealthy and quite frankly a bad thing to do? Since the ministers of Natural Resources and the Environment are absent today and this minister has relevant jurisdiction, I want to know if he is prepared to assure this House that his government will do absolutely everything it possibly can to control the spread of PCBs into the waterways of Ontario.

Hon Mr Ferguson: This government recognizes the significant health hazards that PCBs present to the province, and not only to this province but in fact to the entire country, and I would agree with the member that we will do what we can.

Mr McClelland: That is good, because I am going to ask the minister to go to his cabinet colleagues, in particular to the Minister of the Environment and the Premier, and find out what they are going to do about the following situation. Under certificate A840278 issued by the Ministry of the Environment, eight barrels of PCB-contaminated soil were picked up from a transformer manufacturing site last Saturday. They were transported through the streets of Toronto and dumped in the Keele Valley landfill site. Two of those barrels exceeded the allowable limits. They pose a hazard. They would be deemed by the Ministry of the Environment to be hazardous material. Those barrels of PCB-contaminated soil are now under four and a half days worth of garbage.

Keele Valley, as the minister should know, is located at the source of the Don River. The waste water from the Keele Valley site flows into municipal sewers. The system is unable to control PCBs. It does not deal with it. The water ends up in Lake Ontario.

What is the minister going to do to ensure the safety of the public and concerns for wildlife and fish and birds in this province? What is he going to do, in other words, to clean up the problem that has been unveiled, a difficulty that arose within the last week, PCBs in Keele Valley? Are they prepared to bear the responsibility as a government?

It was a certificate issued under the Ministry of the Environment. What is he going to do, as spokesperson for his cabinet colleagues, to remedy this very dangerous situation for the people in and around Keele Valley, the residents of the area, and more important, people all across the province who are now at risk in terms of the quality of water and the safety factor that is involved here? What is the minister going to do? What commitment is he prepared to make in light of his statement just a moment ago that he sees this as a very serious issue?

Hon Mr Ferguson: If what the honourable member describes is factually correct and all the facts check out, I will be conferring with my cabinet colleagues on the matter and we will be taking appropriate action. Situations like that will not be tolerated in Ontario if in fact that is the case.

LABOUR RELATIONS

Mrs Witmer: I have a question for the Minister of Labour. His consultation document suggests that during a strike, management personnel would not be allowed to bring in other employees from offsite locations to the strike-bound plant. This measure is not contained in the replacement worker section of the Quebec Labour Code. In fact, there is no other jurisdiction in North America with this model. I ask the Minister of Labour, since he is always citing Quebec as his model, can he tell this House why he has gone beyond the province of Quebec's statute?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I do not think we are always using Quebec as the example. It is the one province that has some legislation in terms of strike situations. I think it is also obvious that what we have here is a consultation document that is out so that we can go through the recommendations that are there. Some of them, as the member will know, are specific, our idea of a direction; some of them raise a number of options, and some of them raise no direction whatsoever in areas that have been raised with us. I am not prepared to get into a discussion on the individual items in that consultative document until we have it out and deal with the people in the community.

Mrs Witmer: I would like to bring to the minister's attention that there are some plants in this province that need to be in continuous operation because of the cost of a shutdown or the threat to public safety. If the employees at Ontario Hydro went on strike, our nuclear plants would have to keep running. Hydro would need to bring in employees from another plant for public safety. Obviously the minister sees the problem with his proposal, and I would ask him, is he prepared to make the appropriate changes?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I think that when we see the legislation, that would be dealt with, but I want to point out to the member, if she has any awareness of what goes on in the labour movement right now in plants, whether it is a Hydro plant, an industrial plant—Stelco in my own community is a clear example—that there are already arrangements made with the workers involved to shut down the furnaces. Where you have that kind of public concern, I think that is what the avenue is going to be in almost any contract that is signed.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Mr Fletcher: My question is for the Minister of Citizenship and human rights. On Tuesday the honourable minister released this government's—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. The member for Etobicoke West.

Mr Fletcher: On Tuesday the honourable minister released this government's employment—

The Speaker: The member for Guelph, this question is to whom?

Mr Fletcher: The Minister of Citizenship and human rights. On Tuesday, the honourable minister released this government's employment equity discussion paper and announced that public hearings would be held across Ontario.

We know that employment equity aims to remove barriers for fair hiring, training and also promotion for all workers, but we also know that there is a fear and misunderstanding about employment equity and that can be a major barrier in itself. If unaddressed, the fear and misunderstanding can turn into a backlash. Already constituents have written to me asking such questions as: "Does employment equity mean unqualified people will be hired because they belong to a designated group? Isn't employment equity just tokenism and reverse discrimination?"

How does this government plan to get its message out about this policy and what this policy will do for Ontario, especially when it is so needed?

Hon Ms Ziemba: My honourable colleague is absolutely right; there are always fears, misconceptions and myths that have arisen out of employment equity. What employment equity means is that we want to make sure we have a workplace that is reflective of all our society. Statistics and studies have shown us that people from those designated groups have often been discriminated against, do not have the opportunity for full employment and do not have the opportunity even to compete in employment or to be promoted.

What we are saying is that during our time of economic renewal, we must have the opportunity to use all our abilities, all the capabilities of our workforce, and this is the extreme importance of this particular type of legislation.

We will be doing educational outreach—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Ms Ziemba: Mr Speaker, this is very disconcerting. I am really pleased that the children who were present earlier today have left, because it has been very embarrassing for all of us to hear this type of outpouring every time somebody wants to answer a question.

Mr Fletcher: By coincidence, on the day the minister announced the discussion paper, the member for York East visited my riding of Guelph to speak at a lecture series designed to promote discussion of educational and also employment equity issues. The member made the point that equality and equity do not mean treating everybody the same, simply because everyone has different needs. He also pointed out that the people who advocate for the disabled and for women, aboriginal peoples and racial minorities are tired of rhetoric and lipservice. Can the minister tell us how soon public consultation will be complete and whether the legislation will have any teeth?

Hon Ms Ziemba: The member has brought up some very good points. Yes, this has been a long time coming, and we certainly need to have employment equity now, and we are moving towards that legislation. Our consultation process will take the form of going into two cities in December. We hope to wind up in the very beginning of February, and then we will have a mammoth consultation process for people who have been involved in the previous consultation. That will certainly help make sure that education takes place and that people understand what employment equity means so that we dispel the myths that the honourable member previously mentioned.

What we are going to do is bring in legislation in the spring of 1992. It will be good legislation. It will be fair. It will be practical. But most important, it will be effective. It will have an implementation process, and we will make sure we use all the abilities and all the capabilities of our people in this province.

ONTARIO HYDRO RATES

Mr McGuinty: Two days ago in this House, under rigorous cross-examination by a member from his own party, the Minister of Energy, in response to a particularly devastating question—maybe I should repeat that question so we will see just how devastating it was in its impact.

The question was, "I wonder whether the minister has some comment." Obviously the minister was reduced to a quivering mass at that point in time, and he offered the following. He said, "The fact of the matter is that Hydro rates will not be increasing 44% over the next three years." He went on to add, "The increases, in fact, will be much lower than that."

The minister will know that the people of Ontario, home owners, tenants, owners of businesses, are very concerned about our hydro rates. Businesses are already planning their hydro budgets. But we are confused about what is going to happen, because the minister's well-paid Hydro chair has indicated that rates are in fact going up 44%. To relieve this confusion, I am going to ask the minister to confirm, first of all, that his chairman is incorrect and that the minister himself is correct and he can assure us absolutely that rates will not go up by 44% during the next three years.

Hon Mr Ferguson: What I tried to clarify is that the 44% figure—

Mr Elston: Slow down, Will.

Hon Mr Ferguson: If the honourable members will hold on for a minute. I listened to the question. I expect the honourable members to listen to the answer. That is the way we do it in here.

The 44% figure that was dropped is pure speculation. That is all it is.

Mr McGuinty: Just to remove any doubt from the minister's mind, I have here a copy of a very reputable source of news, the Kitchener-Waterloo Record—I am going to ask a page to take it over to the minister—which clearly attributes the 44% rate increase to the chairman.

That is dated July 17, 1991. I note that is now four months ago, and during that period of time Mr Eliesen has not once attempted to correct the record. The minister also, during that four months, has done nothing to correct the record. That headline has appeared in newspapers, we have heard about it on TV, we have listened to it on the radio, and we have debated it in this House for quite some time.

Perhaps the minister and the chairman could get together and talk energy policy at some point. But let's assume the minister is correct and the chairman is wrong. I ask the minister specifically how he can guarantee an increase of less than 44% and what specific actions he will take to guarantee this promise to the ratepayers of Ontario.

Hon Mr Ferguson: In the article the member has sent over, this is the quote attributed to Mr Eliesen: "From what I have been able to assess, Ontario Hydro is looking at the possibility of a double-digit rate increase for the next two to three years." That is all he said. It does not attribute a 44% figure to Mr Eliesen at all.

We are going to do everything we possibly can to ensure that rates do not escalate any more than necessary over the next two to three years, over the short term or over the long term, because quite frankly Ontario's economy cannot afford it.

I point out to the honourable member that the reason we are in the mess we are in today is because people forgot to plan for the future when they spent $13.5 billion on a nuclear plant that operates at only 60% efficiency. That is why we are in the situation we are in today.

Mr McGuinty: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The minister is being very irresponsible in selectively quoting from this article. He should go on to read—

The Speaker: Would the member take his seat. The member does not have a point of order.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

Mr Jordan: My question is for the Minister of Energy. The vice-president of Ontario Hydro feels it is his duty to persuade me that two lightbulbs per customer at a cost of $7 million is a good deal. Due to the fact the minister is directing Ontario Hydro, not the vice-president, my question is, would the minister please leave his lights on bright and tell this House the formula he is using to establish the number of kilowatt-hours saved by a resident each day for three to five hours' use of that bulb?

Hon Mr Ferguson: Probably not surprising to the member, I do not have that information at my fingertips, but I would be more than happy to provide it to him.

What has become abundantly clear here in Ontario is that residents of this province are not aware of the number of energy-saving devices that are on the market. We are trying to make them aware.

The member for Lanark-Renfrew has continually been critical of this particular program. If he does not want the residents of his constituency to participate in the program, there are 129 other constituencies that gladly would take up the allotment that is supposed to go to his residents. Would he please tell me?

Mr Jordan: Mr Speaker, 16 days ago the minister in this House informed me that he was not a computer when I asked what conservation programs were available, the costs and the kilowatt-hours saved. I think it is time for the minister to stop functioning at 52 watts and provide this House with some details of this plan. An eight-watt saving for one hour is equal to 0.008 kilowatt-hours, or six cents a month or 75 cents a year, and the bulb costs 85 cents.

Hon Mr Ferguson: When I have had time to figure out what the question was, I will be able to give a response.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Mr Frankford: As the Minister of Health is no doubt aware, this week has been designated Pharmacy Awareness Week in Ontario. With this year's theme, "Before you take it, talk about it," pharmacists across the province wish to generate some awareness among health consumers for the need to be informed about the proper use of prescribed medications.

I am sure the minister will agree that it is to everyone's benefit to balance the benefits of effective pharmacological agents against the potential hazards, especially among more vulnerable groups such as seniors. Inappropriate mixing of drugs, often obtained from multiple sources, is one real concern. Can the minister tell this House how her ministry can assist pharmacists and other health practitioners in promoting more rational use of drugs in this province?

Hon Ms Lankin: I am glad the member raises this question, particularly because it gives me an opportunity to highlight Pharmacy Awareness Week. I have had the occasion to meet with the Ontario Pharmacists' Association this week and to endorse the work it is trying to do to bring good information to the consumer about the need to think about drug utilization.

The theme of the week, "Before you take it, talk about it," underlines the role pharmacists can play in our system. Next to doctors, the pharmacist certainly is the person to whom we can speak to find out about medication, the side-effects of medication and about the effectiveness of it. It is an incredibly important role, and I am glad they are willing to take up that role and play it, particularly because we know there is a lot of evidence from the Lowy commission and others that there is inappropriate drug utilization, both in terms of physicians' prescription patterns and in terms of consumers' use. We know it is particularly a problem among our seniors, and I am endorsing the pharmacists in the work they are doing. I hope to be able to work with them in setting up a process to do a more effective drug utilization review.

Mr Daigeler: Mr Speaker, I am sure you would want to know what the Minister of Energy left out in his earlier answer to the member for Ottawa South. "Mr Eliesen"—I am quoting from the newspaper—"suggested increases could be 13% each year, adding up to 44% when compounded over three years."

Interjections.

The Speaker: Would you stop the clock for a minute, please. Would the member take his seat. Order, please. I have stopped the clock.

The member for Nepean should know that when a member rises to place a question, he immediately identifies to whom he wishes to place the question and then he goes ahead with the background information. I was under the assumption that you were asking a question of the Minister of Energy.

I will allow the member to place a question. I will remind the member that he has already utilized some time, so I ask him to make his question succinct.

Mr Daigeler: Mr Speaker, you know my questions are always very succinct, because they are to the point.

My question is to the Treasurer. Two weeks ago I asked the Minister of Colleges and Universities whether he was aware that the Treasurer's ministry was studying ways to turn—

The Speaker: Order. The Minister of Energy, a point of order.

Hon Mr Ferguson: Very clearly, Mr Eliesen said "could," and that is what I have said in this House from day one: "could." That is the operative word, my friend.

The Speaker: The minister does not have a point of order. The member for Nepean.

ONTARIO STUDENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr Daigeler: I will try again with the Treasurer. I was flabbergasted when I noted that the Minister of Colleges and Universities refused to dissociate himself from the Treasurer's plans to turn the OSAP program into a loans-only program.

I have now further confirmation that this government is abandoning the students, even though many of them put their faith in the NDP last year in the election. I am told that today his ministry is recommending to the cabinet committee on social policy that OSAP become a loans-only program. Why is the Treasurer out to destroy the OSAP program?

Hon Mr Laughren: The question is inappropriately directed to me and should be to the Minister of Colleges and Universities.

Hon Mr Allen: It is obvious the member for Nepean has a mole somewhere, but he will know, if his mole is quite effective and telling him the whole story, that in government at the moment, as in past governments of his own party and the third party, there are periodic wholesale program reviews that take place where all the options of government are laid out and looked at systematically and, in time, some decision is made. Some things are proposed, many things are rejected, and this is precisely the order of events he has managed to tap into.

Mr Daigeler: First of all, I can assure the minister that the mole he is talking about may be his own communications assistant, because his own communications assistant said in an interview with the Varsity, "Yes, we are studying the prospect of going to a loans-only system." If the minister does not know what is going on in the Treasury, perhaps he should check with what is going on in that ministry.

In the spring he announced with much fanfare that there is a consultation on about changing OSAP. Now, however, we are finding out that he has completely undercut the work of this committee.

Here is what one of the committee members, Deanne Fisher, said when she heard of his plans: "I feel completely betrayed. This summer I was on a committee that was studying OSAP reform, and we never once discussed going to a loans-only system. I feel like I've wasted my whole summer." This is what one of the minister's own committee members said. Is that the minister's idea of consultation: Let the people discuss cosmetic changes to OSAP but keep them in the dark on his real plans to dismantle the OSAP program?

Hon Mr Allen: The member of course has read an article that I have read in the Varsity student newspaper, which has also heard something somewhere. I am not going to exercise thought control in my ministry so that people cannot think out options, but I am also not announcing in advance anything of any decision which will come down the road.

As far as the OSAP process is concerned, that consultation went through to the middle of the summer. We collected all the results of the consultation, put them in a document, circulated them throughout the university system, received comments back the middle of last month, two weeks ago. We are working vigorously on all the proposals to see what we can do to improve access through OSAP or any other means for the students of Ontario to all our universities and colleges.

EDUCATION SYMPOSIUM

Mrs Cunningham: My question is to the Minister of Education. We have been made aware—and I am sure the minister knows all about it—of a provincial symposium on the restructuring of education to be held December 16 and 17, 1991, at the Metro Toronto Convention Centre. Approximately 1,300 participants representing teachers, principals, administrators, school board trustees, professional associations, parents, students, visible minorities, labour, industry and business will attend the event.

As far as I am concerned, and the minister may agree with me on this, being a former school board trustee and chairperson as I was, I do not remember anything like this being held to announce a restructuring of education, certainly in my time. I am going to have to ask the minister what he is planning to spend on this event.

Hon Mr Silipo: The question is actually very timely because later this afternoon I will be discussing this matter with my officials. The symposium is part of the process of discussion that is going on with respect to the restructuring years. As the member has indicated, the attempt is to bring together on those days a number of people from the various school boards and the various sectors that are involved in this to get a report on the kinds of things that have been discussed to date and to hopefully set some further directions in the discussion process.

Mrs Cunningham: I am timely then, and I do not have a mole. I want the minister to know that when he talks about concurrent sessions on restructuring topics, it is on the agenda twice. Other than that, it is representatives of the ministry and the minister speaking.

With regard to the minister's midyear adjustment, there was $50 million for the education transfer payment allocation to school boards which will affect programs. The minister remembers the money that was set aside as a saving because boards were not taking advantage of it. He must be pretty desperate when he starts looking at that, and I am sure he is.

We are setting a tone in this province right now and I think we have to be setting an example. My view is that in the past we may have asked every board to send a representative. I am not certain, but I would ask the minister to take that into consideration. I would also ask him right now to advise this House that he will look at the cost-effectiveness of a symposium where local boards have to spend money, like for a two-hour session the night before, just to come down for one evening. He may want to take a look at that. I think all of us are thinking of austerity in education right now.

Hon Mr Silipo: I certainly do not believe the member opposite has a mole, but I do believe that, as usual, she is on top of the job she does as an effective critic. I can tell her that the kinds of issues she has raised are exactly the kinds of issues I am discussing with my officials this afternoon.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr Wiseman: My question is to the Minister of Colleges and Universities. I come from Durham region and in our region we have Durham College, which has some 40,000 to 45,000 full- and part-time students. We are receiving inquiries as to reforms that are necessary in the college system—

Interjections.

Mr Wiseman: Mr Speaker, my constituents are just as interested in what this question deals with as the members' constituents are in the questions they deliver in this House, and they consistently ignore the questions from the backbenchers over here. My constituents have a right to have these questions heard and answered just as much as their constituents do.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Would the member place his question, please.

Mr Wiseman: My question is to the Minister of Colleges and Universities about the state of reform that is necessary in the college system. I would like to ask him, at what stage are these reforms and can he give me some further information?

Hon Mr Allen: I thank the member for Durham West for his question. He has frequently come to me with advocacy for that college and he is very active on its behalf.

The three principal problems that exist in an otherwise extremely effective delivery mechanism for training in this province are:

First, that in their response to local communities, they have often developed programs which are not exactly transferable or which are not equivalent to others. Therefore it has been important to put in place a mechanism which will develop some degree of standardization to enhance mobility back and forth in the system for students.

Second, there are many students who try to get access to programs who have prior learning that they have acquired in one experience, in a workplace or in another place of learning or even in another country. They cannot get that recognized in order to get access to student programs, so we have put in place an initiative around prior learning to try to credit it, again to enhance the accessibility of the system.

Third, there is an increasing number of programs in which one needs advanced training, and we are undertaking a new initiative to facilitate the relationship between colleges and universities to provide advanced training programs for students.

Mr Wiseman: The colleges of Ontario are very diverse. They come from many different regions and they have many different concerns. The other part of this question is: How have these announcements been received by all of the colleges across the province? How are they coming along in terms of getting a consensus?

Hon Mr Allen: The reforms are well in hand. The cabinet has allocated $2 million to developing them. There is an active implementation team in the first project, there is a group working on the terms of reference for the second, and there has been a commission put in place, headed by Walter Pitman, that will be looking at what is called An Institute Without Walls: Special Relationships Between Colleges and Universities. The entire system is very enthusiastic, having proposed these reforms in the first place through the major study of the system called Vision 2000, which members, I think, participated in.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mrs Sullivan: I have with me a copy of the Minister of Health's announcement of October 4 relating to long-term care funding and I have a question to her relating to that announcement. The announcement indicates that there will be $12.1 million in additional dollars in this fiscal year for nursing homes and charitable homes for the aged. Discussions with representatives of those bodies lead us to believe that this amount will translate into an increase of about $1.30 per resident per day in a nursing home. To date the money, which the minister indicated in this release would flow on September 1, has not been seen. But the new money still leaves a gap of $35 a day between the two systems, a gap that continues to ensure inequities in the quality of care delivered in homes for the aged and nursing homes.

I am asking the minister if she can explain her disregard for the 30,000 residents who are seniors in nursing homes and who the minister has already admitted require the same level of care, no matter where they are housed?

Hon Ms Lankin: I find the question interesting because the member who asks it was a member of the government that for a number of years took no action to resolve this problem of the difference in per diems between the rates of nursing homes and homes for the aged. I agree with her there is a problem and there is a disparity between the rates. I agree with her that it is a pressing problem that needs to be addressed. Where I disagree with her is that somehow I have abandoned these people. I, in fact, am the first minister who has taken steps to try to address the problem.

We have done three things. We have provided some money for this year that will be, we hope, a bridge to the future to try to stabilize the industry, acknowledging that there are serious problems. We are in discussions this very week again with the association trying to flow that money. We have provided a guarantee of an increase in it for next year, which is a bridge to level-of-care requirement funding which we have guaranteed will be in place by January 1993.

Mrs Sullivan: Just on those points, if members look at the long-term care document the minister presented, what we see is that the New Democratic Party is looking at committing $207 million to the system, $150 million of which will come out of the residents' own pockets. Members can see that on page 33 of that report.

I also understand the minister will require nursing homes, under the new funding arrangement, to provide 2.5 hours of personal and nursing care per resident per day. This translates, members should know, for the average nursing home to about four or five additional minutes of care every 24 hours.

In the October 4 announcement, the minister said that nursing homes and homes for the aged "must be better equipped to deal with the increasingly complex service requirements of their residents." The minister has built expectations in this area. Will she explain to those residents how those four or five minutes of extra care will mean that nursing home residents "have their quality of life significantly improved by these enhanced levels of service"? Those enhanced levels of service are four or five minutes every 24 hours.

Hon Ms Lankin: I think the member raises a good question, but it is a bit out of context in that what we are moving to is a level-of-care requirement in which each client-patient within a nursing home will have his or her actual individual needs assessed and the per diems and the money that flows to that home will be based on that level-of-care requirement.

Currently, we have an unfortunate situation where, as a result of years of inaction on behalf of governments, we have nursing home clients receiving very varied levels of hours of care. What we are trying to do is take the first step to standardize that to a higher level than what the provincial average is right now. That standardization is going to take the infusion of money that we have indicated for this year and next, and we will be moving to full level-of-care requirement in January 1993.

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTIONS

Hon Mr Cooke moved that the following substitutions be made:

On the standing committee on finance and economic affairs, Ms Akande for Mr Hansen; on the standing committee on estimates, Mr Hansen for Mr Farnan; on the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly, Mr Farnan for Mr Jamison; on the standing committee on regulations and private bills, Mr Drainville for Mr Fletcher.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

FRENCH-LANGUAGE SERVICES

Mr Jordan: I wish to table a petition which reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas on November 16, 1986, the French Language Services Act of Ontario had been passed in French and implementation procedures were not publicized for the awareness of the general public, and because 70 elected members were absent in the House on the above date, the majority of citizens of Ontario were not represented; and

"Whereas at no time have the people of Ontario chosen to become officially bilingual by giving a mandate to the government or by referendum; and

"Whereas the vast majority of Ontarians speak English fluently; and

"Whereas the implementation of Bill 8 is proceeding with enormous cost to the taxpayer while cutbacks are being made in the funding of health care, education, environment, etc; and

"Whereas one official language is a practical necessity;

"We, the undersigned citizens of Ontario, hereby affirm that we desire English to be the one and only official language and, furthermore, petition the government of Ontario to repeal Bill 8, the French Language Services Act of Ontario, without delay and keep English the only official language in this province.

"We further respectfully request the above-mentioned member of Parliament to stand and read this petition, imploring every member of the House to study this law and demand a copy of its implementation procedures manual and to bravely reveal the contents of both law and implementation to his/her constituents who may then be able to intelligently take a personal stand on this issue as soon as possible."

Mr J. Wilson: I have the pleasure to present a petition to the Legislature of Ontario that reads as follows:

"Whereas the Queen of Canada has long been a symbol of national unity for Canadians from all walks of life and from all ethnic backgrounds;

"Whereas the people of Canada are currently facing a constitutional crisis which could potentially result in the breakup of the federation and are in need of unifying symbols;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to restore the oath to the Queen for Ontario's police officers."

That is signed by a number of good people in my riding of Simcoe West, from the town of Stayner and the town of Collingwood, and I too have affixed my name to this petition.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT DES LOIS EN CE QUI CONCERNE LA RETRAITE DES EMPLOYÉS MUNICIPAUX

Mr Cooke moved first reading of Bill 151, An Act to amend the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System Act and the Municipal Act.

M. Cooke propose la première lecture du projet de loi 151, Loi modifiant la Loi sur le régime de retraite des employés municipaux de l'Ontario et la Loi sur les municipalités.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Hon Mr Cooke: This is the legislation I announced by ministerial statement last week.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES RELATIONS DE TRAVAIL

Mrs Witmer moved first reading of Bill 152, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

M^{me} Witmer propose la première lecture du projet de loi 152, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les relations de travail.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Mrs Witmer: The purposes of this bill are to provide that representation, strike votes and ratification votes of a collective agreement are mandatory in all cases and to require secret ballots in all such votes.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

FIRE MARSHALS AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES COMMISSAIRES DES INCENDIES

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 131, An Act to amend the Fire Marshals Act.

Suite du débat ajourné sur la motion visant la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 131, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les commissaires des incendies.

Mr Runciman: I want to say with respect to Bill 131, An Act to amend the Fire Marshals Act, that our party, the Conservative Party of Ontario, has made an effort to contact the interested groups affected by this legislation and I must say we have had no negative feedback whatsoever, that indeed all the parties involved are very positive about the legislation as introduced and the impact it is going to have in respect of the ability of fire marshals and fire authorities throughout this province to do a much more effective job.

In that respect, I want to say we in the opposition have been criticized from time to time by the government as being too critical and perhaps petty about government legislation. I want to indicate that when we have legislation like Bill 131, which is constructive, progressive and helpful to the community at large, we can be very supportive and co-operative in ensuring quick passage.

Today my remarks are going to be really nothing further than to indicate our support for this legislation, and we are prepared to see it go to third reading today and have royal assent as quickly as possible. I move adjournment of the debate.

On motion by Mr Runciman, the debate was adjourned.

A la suite d'une motion présentée par M. Runciman, le débat est ajourné.

ONTARIO MEDICAL ASSOCIATION DUES ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR LES COTISATIONS DE L'ONTARIO MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 135, An Act to provide for the Payment of Physicians' Dues and Other Amounts to the Ontario Medical Association.

Suite du débat ajourné sur la motion visant la motion de deuxième lecture du projet de loi 135, Loi prévoyant le paiement des cotisations des médecins et d'autres montants à l'Ontario Medical Association.

Mr Runciman: I am going to make my remarks on this bill relatively brief today. Although I had some inclination, as I expressed yesterday during the debate, to filibuster this bill because I think in essence this whole agreement with the government and the OMA is not in the best interests of health care consumers in this province, I have been convinced that perhaps it is not in the best interests of this House and the business of this House that I engage in a filibuster.

I advertised the phone number of my office yesterday during my comments on this and we did get a significant number of calls, some from members of the medical profession. The calls I received from doctors—I have not had an opportunity to get back to all of them—not surprisingly were in disagreement with what I was saying.

One doctor's wife from Sarnia, whom I will not name, felt I was being extremely harsh with respect to doctors and the approach they take to providing health care in this province, and she may be correct. I expressed some reservations last night in terms of tarring all doctors with the same brush, and I acknowledge that there are members of the medical community very much devoted to providing the best possible health care to the people within their community.

At the same time, a lot of my criticisms and concerns are lodged with the Ontario Medical Association, the body representing doctors across this province—now representing all doctors whether they like it or not—and I am not going to backtrack on the things I said related to the OMA and what I describe as a sweetheart deal with the socialist government that in my view is not in the best interests of the health care consumers or taxpayers of this province.

I had a call from a doctor in Toronto who took issue with the fact that I said doctors were the highest-paid profession in the province. I said that if I had made an error on that I would correct it. I was able to get the latest statistics, the 1990 taxation statistics from Revenue Canada, and self-employed medical doctors and surgeons are by far the highest-paid professionals. There is no question about it, so I do not have to apologize. I understand that doctor's concerns. He indicated to me he is working 60 to 70 hours a week—

Mr Miclash: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: We have not seen the Premier here for days on end, and we do not have enough members to make up the quorum. Might I remind the government members that they are responsible for keeping a quorum in this House. I call for a quorum call.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Mr Runciman: I was talking about the doctors being the highest-paid profession and having a doctor call me and be critical of that. Revenue Canada indicates that self-employed medical doctors and surgeons are the highest-paid profession, followed not too closely by self-employed dentists and, at an even farther distance, by self-employed lawyers and notaries, so they are indeed the highest-paid profession. But many of them, there is no question, earn the incomes they are generating and devote a significant amount of time to their patients in the health care system.

But by and large, I have concerns which I expressed last night and I am not going to apologize for the way in which I expressed them, despite the criticism that has been coming over my phone lines for the past 12 hours from doctors and members of doctors' families.

An hon member: Don't get sick, Bob.

Mr Runciman: Absolutely. I will have to stay away from illness for the next few years until memories fade, I guess.

I had a call from a nurse at Toronto Western Hospital who was very supportive of what I was saying last night and she mentioned a specialist, a spinal surgeon, who has developed a number of innovations in medical treatment respecting fusions, who developed a rod for the spinal column of patients with scoliosis. He had patients coming from all over Canada and the United States. He has now moved to Johns Hopkins Hospital in the United States. The other spinal surgeon at that hospital is contemplating a move to the United States. We are seeing specialists moving out of this province at a rate which should concern us all.

This individual suggested that in her 10 years of working in the health care system of Ontario, things are simply changing for the worse year after year. Quality of care is no longer there like it was when she first came to the health care system in Ontario 10 years ago. She talked about the fact that it is difficult for patients even to get time in the operating room. She says that at Toronto General Hospital they have patients frequently coming in two or three days in advance of the operation and then having that operation cancelled. There is simply not enough staff. Surgeons are overbooked. They are limited on time available in operating rooms. They do not even have intensive-care time available for some of the patients and they have to be put into general wards. It is a situation which should concern us all.

I am going to sum up very quickly and talk about the elements of this deal that most concerns me, the fact that the OMA has now become, to all intents and purposes, a union. We are talking about a professional organization which has now turned itself, through agreement with this government, into a union. I do not think that is appropriate and I do not think that is in the best interests of health care consumers.

The OMA has also reached an agreement with the government where, if indeed it cannot reach some sort of settlement in respect of fee for services, we are going to be submitted to binding arbitration. Again, we are talking about a figure in excess of $5 billion—next year probably $6 billion—of taxpayers' money which has a potential, in terms of the decision-making process, of being taken out of the hands of the government, the Treasury and elected officials of this assembly. I do not believe, again, that is in the best interests of Ontario taxpayers.

Finally, on the management team that has been established—I do not have the papers in front of me—with respect to making long-term decisions on how to make the health care system more effective, more efficient in this province, those responsibilities are now being lodged with the medical community through the OMA and the government, excluding all other health care providers in this province. Again, I do not think that is appropriate, because we have not seen the OMA clean up its own act with respect to the operations of surgeons and the waste that occurs within physicians' offices and within hospitals under responsibilities which come within the direct control of physicians in this province.

I do not think it is wise for us to put all our chips on the medical community to be making those kinds of decisions, or to be monitoring the health care system in order to make recommendations that are going to impact on all of us in the years to come. I think this is a bad deal for all of us as taxpayers. We in this assembly should be very much concerned that, for all intents and purposes, we have been excluded from this process and that for years to come we will be totally excluded from having any role to play in a meaningful way.

Mrs Cunningham: I am happy to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 135. I want to speak with a specific issue in mind. The specific issue is one that has been brought to the concern of probably many members of this Legislative Assembly in a letter dated October 3—certainly to myself, and I am aware of the member for London South having the same letter; I am not aware of others. But anyone who has anything to do with the University of Western Ontario in southwest Ontario should know that the faculty association at the university is very concerned about this legislation, and it is just one of a larger organization called OCUFA, the Ontario Confederation of University Faculty Associations.

To put it bluntly, the concerns with regard to this government's agreement with the Ontario Medical Association are more to do with the process, and reflect directly on the professors in the teaching hospitals who are also physicians.

"There are legally constituted faculty bargaining units at the five Ontario universities with medical schools." I am quoting here from a letter dated October 3 from OCUFA. These units represent physicians who would now be defined as OMA members under the current wording of Bill 135. "In some quarters this legislation has been called an illegal raid of faculty bargaining units." In the cases of at least two faculty units there is a possibility of a significant loss of membership.

This has not been treated lightly by the universities, certainly aware of the concerns at Western. I have before me a document noting considerable deliberations by the faculty of medicine at the University of Western Ontario and affiliated teaching hospitals, academic health centres, and it is called A Plan for Staffing and Funding of Clinical Academic Units. It talks about negotiation rights. It also has recommendations, which I plan to give to the Minister of Health, because I think these are the kinds of things that really upset the community, when all aspects of an agreement such as this, and ramifications of such, have not been taken into consideration by a government.

I continue to read:

"The situation on each of the five campuses varies dramatically. These are complex situations which can only be handled on a local basis. Four of five of the bargaining units represent clinicians to some extent. There are a range of physician duties as professors on each campus: those who do only research, those who do research and teach, those who have cross-appointments with hospitals and universities, and those who teach as clinicians on an occasional basis.

"Faculty association bargaining units have traditionally represented faculty on a wide range of issues, including promotion and tenure."

I will not go on. It is quite a lengthy letter. At the very end they say, "OCUFA had discussed this situation with the OMA and has proposed an amendment to section 1 of Bill 135 as follows:

"This act does not apply to individuals represented by faculty bargaining units in Ontario universities."

"In addition, we have suggested that the legislation contain an exception to the above: that where the OMA and the faculty bargaining units have an agreement to negotiate (together or on agreed-upon terms) with the university administration, the act would apply."

Now, we have been asked to ensure that the above amendments are included in Bill 135 at second reading. That is a difficult thing to do when we are not a member of the government, but we give this a go every once in a while. I will advise certainly the government members that it is our intent in the Conservative caucus to have this bill referred to committee of the whole House so that this particular amendment can be deliberated upon fairly.

I want to make it clear that my preference would have been to have this in a standing committee of the Legislative Assembly because, in fairness to the Ontario Medical Association, it did agree that it thought this would be appropriate for a day's hearings. Since OCUFA does not feel it has had fair hearings, the Ontario Medical Association thought if we saved this one amendment and that OCUFA were the sole spokesperson at a committee meeting for one day, it would have been an opportunity for government representatives and representatives of the faculty associations at those hospitals to have a fair exchange, which they feel they have not had.

The government House leader said he would not agree to that. It is very difficult for us to force this into committee this afternoon, so we will have to be satisfied with getting it into the committee of the whole House, which we can deliberate upon in another week.

With those comments, I have certainly spoken to the content of our referral later on this afternoon. I should say that when we are going into these kinds of negotiations in the future, I think the government is at great risk, given what it says it stands for and not taking the time to discuss openly the kinds of amendments that the faculty associations would like to have seen at least some fair consideration for.

Thank you, Mr Speaker, for the opportunity to put my remarks on the record. Hopefully the government will take another look at this next week and perhaps we can come to some conclusions to solve the problems, which I think are very real. I would advise this government to meet in the next week with the OMA and OCUFA, and see if the government and the minister cannot come to some kind of agreement around an amendment to alleviate the concern of so many of the physicians who belong to the teaching hospital faculties, the university faculties, across the province of Ontario. It would be refreshing if that could happen.

Mr Callahan: I got distracted when the member for London North was speaking. Is this a group of people who will be required to pay fees to the Ontario Medical Association even though they are not practising, and did they have an opportunity to appear or to be involved in the negotiations between the minister and the OMA?

Again, I did not have an opportunity to get an explanation of that. It would seem to me that any collective bargaining, which is really what this was—members can call it what they like, but I call it collective bargaining between the minister and the Ontario Medical Association, and I am sure that if we were to suggest collective bargaining should take place without all the parties at the table, the government opposite would go absolutely wrangy. In fact, the member for Hamilton East, the Minister of Labour, who has always been a stalwart of ensuring that labour is properly represented at the bargaining table, would certainly be the most exercised. I find it passing strange that the Minister of Health, in negotiating this agreement with the Ontario Medical Association, would not have made certain that all parties were represented at the table.

I also took a quick look at the bill. It seems to me there is no provision there either for people who perhaps are semi-retired. Are they required? I would ask the minister that question, but she is not here so I cannot get an answer. Perhaps the member for London North can provide me with that answer.

What provision is there in here for doctors who are perhaps in retirement or semi-retirement in terms of their having to continue to pay their fees?

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any further questions or comments?

Mrs Cunningham: This is a comment. It is appropriate.

The Deputy Speaker: You will have an opportunity at the end.

Mr Henderson: I think it bears on some of the comments of the member for Brampton North and the previous commentator that the OMA—I am doing this from impression; I do not have the information in front of me. Most medical associations make provision for different levels of fee and membership for different categories of physicians, including retired physicians, sometimes part-time physicians. I suspect it does not need to be spelled out in the legislation. I suspect it is covered by the OMA schedule of dues that are type-rated according to the position of the physician.

Mrs Cunningham: I certainly agree with the concerns as relayed to me by my colleague the member for Brampton South, and I think he should pursue the responses to his questions with the minister.

I can only tell him what I know, given both the letters I have had from the Ontario Medical Association and from the faculty associations, and they are concerned about the opportunity they had for input, and they are more concerned about the lack of response they have had to their concerns. I spoke to the government House leader about getting this into a committee for a day just on this one issue, because I feel we are not really in a position right now to jeopardize an agreement. That is not why I am standing up here, but to amend one subsequently or to in some way satisfy the concerns of these teaching physicians would, I think, be an appropriate and responsible action on behalf of the government.

I raise this in all seriousness because there is great concern, and what we have really done is pitted the Ontario Medical Association against the faculty associations. Now we have two groups arguing with each other about something one group did not even know was happening, or if they did know it was happening, they thought perhaps they could have been represented in some way at that table. If they were, they are not aware of it.

I think the questions from the member for Brampton South are quite legitimate. I believe we should put this in to the committee so we can take a look at it just for one day. We would appreciate that kind of support from the government.

Mrs Caplan: I am pleased to rise today to debate Bill 135, An Act to Provide for the Payment of Physicians' Dues and Other Amounts to the Ontario Medical Association.

I believe this bill is very much in the interests of the Ontario Medical Association, but it is not in the interests of individual doctors in this province. I support the request from the member for London North, who has suggested that one day of public hearings is appropriate for those members of the profession who wish to come to put on the record their feelings about this piece of legislation.

I point out—and I have had some experience in matters of this kind—that this piece of legislation is part of a broad framework agreement between the Ontario Medical Association and the government of the day, the New Democratic government, in this province.

There are some very significant portions of this particular act which I think are noteworthy. Section 1:

“(1) This act applies to physicians licensed under part III (Medicine) of the Health Disciplines Act who are engaged in the practice of medicine in Ontario or who conduct health research in Ontario.”

What this effectively does is to require all licensed doctors in Ontario to pay dues to the Ontario Medical Association, whether or not they are members of that association.

I remember back in 1986, I think it was, when there was quite a discussion about freedom for doctors in Ontario. I remember how passionately many doctors felt about their rights. I remember as well that we had a lot of discussions at that time about what freedoms doctors had and what freedoms within our medicare system had been somewhat compromised in the public interest.

This is a very significant loss of freedom for individual doctors in this province. Under this piece of legislation, they do not even have checkoff. They do not have the right to say, “We want our dues to go,” or, “We don’t want to pay dues.” Under this legislation, every doctor licensed in Ontario will have the dues deducted automatically from his or her OHIP billings. That is what this legislation does. What this act says very clearly in section 2 is, “Every physician who is a member of the Ontario Medical Association shall pay the association’s dues and assessments.”

Section 3 says:

“(1) Every physician who is not a member of the Ontario Medical Association shall pay the association amounts equal to the dues and assessments that the association would charge if the physician were a member.”

Subsection 3(2) says that the amounts required include an amount for membership fees for the Canadian Medical Association “but do not include amounts for insurance, pensions or other benefits that are available only to members of the Ontario Medical Association.”

What this does is to say to all the doctors of the province, “You’re going to pay the dues whether you are a member or not, but you are not going to get any of the other benefits in the way of pension or insurance or anything else.”

I believe there are many doctors in the province who support this legislation and who support the agreement negotiated between the New Democrats and the Ontario Medical Association, but I believe that many of the doctors in this province do not fully understand the implications of this legislation.

I remember back almost a year and a half ago when the Ontario Medical Association, in its negotiations with the Liberal government of the day, of which I was Minister of Health, made its request for the Rand formula—which this is—which creates a trade union within the Ontario Medical Association that requires every doctor licensed in this province to have fees deducted on his behalf by the government of Ontario from his OHIP billings and submitted directly to the Ontario Medical Association.

I remember when the association made that request of our government, and I personally felt very strongly that the Rand formula was not in the interests of individual physicians. It was not in the interests of the doctors of this province to be seen as labour. It was not in the interests of the doctors of this province, in my opinion, to be part of a trade union. It was my view that doctors should be seen as part of a management team and should not have their freedom taken away to decide whether they wanted their dues paid to the Ontario Medical Association. In a way, it was co-opting all members.

There are almost 20,000 doctors in Ontario. As I said, I know that many of them support this legislation. But I know many of them do not support the legislation requiring a deduction from their OHIP billings to be paid on their behalf directly to the Ontario Medical Association. I resisted very strongly, and the Liberal government resisted, the request for the Rand formula. We told the OMA that we did not believe every doctor should be forced to pay dues to the OMA whether he or she was a member or not. We did not believe that was in the interests of better health. We did not believe it was in the interests of individual doctors.

We believed, further, that it would create a labour model in this province for a profession which did not consider itself to be employees. Time and again, I heard doctors in this province tell me that the OMA did not represent their point of view and they wanted the freedom to express directly to government, both through negotiations of their fees and through discussions on health policy matters, the issues that were of concern to them.

First reading of this piece of legislation took place on June 26, 1991. We know that OHIP payments comprise about 32% of Ontario's spending on health services. We know as well that the total budget of the Ministry of Health now approaches $17 billion, which is almost a full one third of the provincial budget. We know that the total for physicians' fees, the total of the OHIP vote, is more than $4 billion, and we know that the cost of the agreement reached between the New Democratic government and the Ontario Medical Association was in the area of $480 million. That is a very significant amount of money, particularly at this particular time in the province.

As I see this piece of legislation before the House, I think there are some very significant things that should be pointed out as part of this overall agreement, although it is not significantly part of this legislation.

We know that as well as granting the Ontario Medical Association the right not just to collect the dues but to receive the dues directly from the government, the government now recognizes the Ontario Medical Association as the sole representative of all doctors in this province in negotiating amounts payable for insured services or in negotiating facility fees under the Independent Health Facilities Act.

We know there is an automatic Ontario Medical Association representation right that has been extended to doctors, physician-sponsored health service organizations, all government-employed doctors covered by the government psychiatric agreement—the OMA is now the sole representative—the Workers' Compensation Board, as well as doctors working in independent health facilities.

We know that in the overall agreement that has been negotiated, the Ontario Medical Association must earn the right, by a vote, to represent doctors in community health centres and non-doctors who are working in health service organizations, hospitals and universities; that is, non-physician-sponsored health service organizations and those health service organizations which are not physician-sponsored but which are sponsored by hospitals, universities and community groups.

Prior to this agreement, for the purpose of negotiations, the Ontario Medical Association represented only those doctors who were practising fee-for-service medicine. At that point in time it was about 95% of the profession that the association represented as it was negotiating a fee-for-service contract with the government.

In extending representation rights to doctors who work in health service organizations, community health centres and teaching hospitals, the government really has acknowledged the Ontario Medical Association fears that were expressed during negotiations around the loss of influence as alternative payment mechanisms and alternative payment compensation were negotiated with the province, whether it was with faculties in hospitals or faculties of medicine in clinical teaching units, where the universities had very significant influence as well. Certainly more and more were interested in alternative payment because that was a way of protecting physician income as they looked at alternative ways of providing service.

In its agreement the government agreed to both introduce and support legislation before June 30, and it did so. I believe many of the doctors in this province, and many members on the government benches, do not fully understand the implications of the agreement they entered into.

Through the discussion of this piece of legislation, we have an opportunity, for the only time in this Legislature, to really fully explore and discuss some of the features of that which are cause for concern for both doctors and taxpayers in this province. To a large degree, I agree with some of the statements made by editorial boards across the province, and I want to put them on the record.

For example, on May 23, 1991, the Globe and Mail stated, "The Ontario Medical Association has stripped individual doctors of control over their earnings, their right to secret ballot, their right to free association and ultimately their ability to determine how they practise medicine."

Another very significant Globe and Mail quote on May 23 stated, "The Ontario Medical Association executive has assumed powers that no trade union executive should enjoy, and effectively turned the association into a trade union, the Ontario medical workers' union, in which members do not have union membership rights."

Further, a report to the Toronto board of health on the payment of Ontario physicians dated February 6, 1991, said that if the government was really acting the part of the employer, it would raise the payment for services it wanted and reduce payment for those services it felt were being provided too frequently. "With binding arbitration and the Rand formula, the Ontario Medical Association has gained the rights of a trade union without the government gaining the right of the employer to set hours and conditions of work." That was from a report to the Toronto board of health on the payment of Ontario physicians dated February 1991.

I think those quotes raise some of the concerns that both doctors and the people of Ontario should have about this agreement. In many aspects, the Ontario Medical Association will have a veto over further health reform policies in this province. At the same time as the Ontario Medical Association has achieved that kind of health policy veto, the government of Ontario did not gain the opportunity to influence the structural reforms that are so badly needed in this province.

I understand that since this agreement was negotiated, I believe almost 10 months ago now, there have been no alternative payment agreements signed, because it imposes the Ontario Medical Association as the sole bargaining agent for doctors in universities, in clinical teaching units, who do not wish to have the Ontario Medical Association as their sole bargaining agent. It is my understanding—I stand to be corrected—that this agreement has interfered with the process that was well under way in negotiating alternative payment mechanisms with clinical teaching units in this province, in negotiating additional health service organizations.

I understand there has been a complete halt to the negotiation of additional health service organizations in this province. I am aware of a letter that was sent out from the new Deputy Minister of Health to all health service organization physicians saying, "Everything is on hold and we are renegotiating your contract with the Ontario Medical Association."

I think there are many surprises contained in this piece of legislation that the government has said heralds a new time of co-operation. I want to say that I hope there will be that co-operation. Certainly it is my view that it is in the interests of the people of this province for the doctors to be working in co-operation with the government.

I know it might surprise many people in this Legislature when I make the statement that when I was at the Ministry of Health, I believe that on most health policy issues we found the participation and involvement of doctors right across this province a very important and significant contribution to the development of health reform policies. Doctors were involved in virtually every committee within the Ministry of Health while I was there. Doctors, whether they were members of the Ontario Medical Association or not, were involved in the development of reform strategies at the Ministry of Health and served on virtually every advisory committee within the ministry. We had quite a good working relationship with individual doctors in this province. That does not mean we agreed on everything; we certainly did not.

We had a reasonable working relationship with the Ontario Medical Association until it came to the question of powers for the Ontario Medical Association, the powers under the Rand formula. Representation rights were a very significant sticky issue, because on that we simply did not agree. I did not agree that the doctors in this province would want to be part of a trade union. I did not believe and did not agree that the Ontario Medical Association should be interposed and have automatic representation rights for people who were not its members, without their right. I felt that was a freedom the doctors of this province should not have to give up without having a vote and a say. I did not believe that was in the best interests of the development of health policy.

Labour models of negotiation tend to be quite adversarial: the union versus management. Those models are adversarial models. It is my feeling that the doctors of this province do not want to be part of labour, that they do not want to be part or forced to be part of a trade union. It is my feeling that the doctors of this province would prefer to be part of management, rather than be part of labour.

When I see Bill 135 before us in the Legislature, which deals primarily with money and power for the Ontario Medical Association, I feel that perhaps the doctors of this province are not fully aware of the implications of this piece of legislation. I believe that over the medium to long term the doctors of this province and the people of Ontario will not be well served by the labour relations model that has been set in place and by the creation of a trade union for the Ontario Medical Association by this piece of legislation.

It is my belief, as I said earlier, that the leadership of the Ontario Medical Association supports this legislation and that it is in the interests of the Ontario Medical Association, but I do not believe this piece of legislation is in the interests of good health policy. I do not believe it is in the interests of the people of Ontario and I do not believe it is in the interests of individual doctors who are going to have their dues to the Ontario Medical Association automatically deducted from their OHIP billings, regardless of whether they are members of the Ontario Medical Association. They are going to have money deducted from their OHIP billings without their consent.

This legislation is a significant loss of freedom for the doctors in this province. As I rise today to participate in the debate on Bill 135, I feel that those doctors who do not support this should have the opportunity at committee to come forward for a day and speak their minds and say how they feel about this.

While the piece of legislation before us today conforms with the spirit of an agreement that was entered into, I believe the government of the day, the New Democratic Party, before too long will realize this is not in the interests of the people of Ontario and we will see that agreement discussed again in this Legislature in the not-too-distant future, when the agreement stands in the way of health reform and when the doctors of this province realize that the powers that have been given to the Ontario Medical Association are not in the interests of either the rank-and-file members or those who are not members. I do not believe this legislation is in the interests of the doctors who are licensed to practise in Ontario.

Mr Callahan: I think the suggestion made by my colleague the member for Oriole that this matter go to a committee was also briefly echoed by the member for London North, in order to allow these people, who apparently have not been heard in what had to appear to have been a collective agreement negotiated by the Minister of Health with the OMA, to be heard.

It strikes me as strange. There is a principle of natural justice that says all sides should be heard. If the government of the day rejects that and forces it into committee of the whole, that deprives these people of the opportunity to be heard.

It flies in the face of the principle of natural justice that sides should be heard. It reinforces something I find very remarkable. This government would scream if in a collective bargaining scenario all parties were not present at the table, yet that is exactly what I understand to be the case in the comments of the member for Oriole and the member for London North, that there are people who were not at the bargaining table and did not have an opportunity to put their views forward as to whether or not they wished to have this type of legislation take place, whether it be an automatic checkoff of their fees or a pre-deduction from their OHIP payments.

I suggest the government of the day, in espousing and picking up the philosophy it has that in a collective agreement—that is all the minister was having with the OMA; he was negotiating an agreement—all parties should be heard, would have the good grace to refer this matter to a committee. It does not have to be for very long, perhaps for one day or half a day, to allow these people who have not been heard to be heard.

I think that is a matter of justice and fairness. I would expect this government would do that and not require that we go to committee of the whole House where people are not allowed to come into this chamber and address us.

Mrs Caplan: In the last few minutes of this debate, I think it is important to note two quotes. One is from Dr Berger in the May 27 Globe and Mail. It says: "This is a generous arrangement for doctors in these economic times. At this time of recession, why do hospitals, nurses and patients have to suffer because the government has negotiated this agreement with the doctors?" The second quote is from the Globe and Mail of May 13 and states, "While the government says that fiscal management is at the heart of the deal with the doctors, taxpayers remain not convinced."

I believe, because of the generous nature of this agreement, that the doctors have overlooked the implications of Bill 135 and the effect it will have on their individual freedoms in this province. As I said earlier, it is my belief that while Bill 135 is in the interest of the Ontario Medical Association, it is not in the interest of the individual doctors in this province.

Mr Arnott: I am very pleased to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 135, An Act to provide for the Payment of Physicians' Dues and Other Amounts to the Ontario Medical Association.

As explained in the explanatory note: "The purpose of this bill is to make the payment of amounts for the Ontario Medical Association's dues and assessments compulsory for all practising physicians. The amounts are a debt that the association can enforce in court. The bill applies to dues and assessments due on and after the 26th day of June, 1991.

"Sections 5 and 6 provide, in certain circumstances, for the amounts to be deducted at the source of a physician's income and paid directly to the Ontario Medical Association. Section 5 provides for the deduction from a physician's Ontario health insurance plan accounts. Section 6 provides for the deduction from physicians' compensation under an agreement between the Ontario Medical Association and the province or a provincially funded body."

In other words, the legislation makes the payment of amounts for the Ontario Medical Association's dues and assessments compulsory for all practising physicians. Interns and residents are excluded, and the OMA may waive payment for specific physicians if it decides collecting the dues would bring financial hardship to the physician.

The general manager of OHIP, Dr MacMillan, will collect OMA dues from the billings of fee-for-service physicians prior to January 1 each year and will pay the deducted amount to the OMA. Where applicable, other governances that compensate physicians will collect dues for the OMA. The OMA will have the right to use the courts to collect unpaid dues.

This bill is before the Legislature this afternoon for debate, and I must say, when I look at this bill, as I do others when I determine whether I can support the government's initiative on behalf of my constituents, I must look and see how it affects my constituents in Wellington county, as well as people across the province. That must be the litmus test in my mind. I must ask the question, "Does this bill in any way enhance the delivery of health care services which are available to my constituents, as well as the people across the province, or will it in fact detract from the delivery of health care services in our area?"

I fear that it does the latter. I do not see how this bill will in any way enhance the delivery of health care services to the people in my riding. In fact, I am quite sure that services will be lessened as a result of this initiative and other policies that are coming forward from this government at the present time.

I would like to take a few minutes now to very briefly bring to the attention of the House some of the specific concerns that are affecting my constituents, partly as a result of this bill, but partly as a result of some of the other initiatives that are coming forward from the government. In our riding, in Wellington county, we have three hospitals: Louise Marshall Hospital in Mount Forest, Palmerston and District Hospital in Palmerston and Groves Memorial Community Hospital in Fergus. Many of my constituents are also served by the hospitals in Guelph, Guelph General Hospital and St Joseph's Hospital.

We have considerable concerns about the way the government is proceeding in the area of health care. The Louise Marshall Hospital in Mount Forest—I was speaking to the Minister of Health about it this afternoon in requesting an opportunity for the administration and the board of that hospital to meet with the minister, and I certainly hope she will give consent to do that—is facing a very significant and difficult time with its budget. They have a unique circumstance there in that for many years a large Mennonite population in the area was using that hospital and was paying cash for services rendered. Now that has gone by the wayside as a result of some of the initiatives that have been taken recently and the Mennonites are not paying cash for service. It has resulted in a considerable loss of income to this hospital, in the order of over $100,000, I believe, and its result is serious strains on the budget of the hospital.

Palmerston and District Hospital is a very well-run hospital, as they all are in my area. They have had difficulty in recruiting a qualified physiotherapist. There just do not seem to be enough physiotherapists who are qualified. They have recruited across the province, across the world, and they cannot seem to find physiotherapists to look after the needs of that area.

The Groves Memorial Community Hospital in Fergus has been under stress lately because of government lack of funding.

In Guelph—I do not need to remind the member for Oriole; she will remember that situation quite well—there has been an effort for the last 20 years to try and bring forward a solution to the hospital redevelopment problems of Guelph. The former government appointed Mr William Blundell to look into the matter and to discuss the matter with the people of the area and come forward with a recommendation for hospital redevelopment. I understand that is nearing completion. It will be with the minister, I think within the next couple of months, if not sooner, and I certainly hope the minister will look favourably upon the recommendations that are brought forward at that time. We have waited a long time for hospital redevelopment.

We had a very bizarre situation during the election campaign. The Liberal candidate for Guelph had brought forward his own ideas for a solution to the hospital redevelopment issue. There were a number of different flip-flops with respect to the government's position, and we had the very bizarre situation whereby the sitting member for Guelph, who was running for re-election, in the midst of the campaign called for the resignation of his own Minister of Health, presently the member for Oriole. That was quite a considerable surprise to me as I was out on the election trail.

I would also draw attention to the fact that there is a need for a CAT scanner in Guelph. I know many of the other areas around the province are hoping to put together the necessary proposal for a CAT scanner, and I hope the minister will look favourably upon that when it is presented. It was unfortunate—

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): Order. I know the member will relate his remarks to the bill before the House.

Mr Arnott: Yes, Mr Speaker, I am relating my remarks to Bill 135. I just want to talk once again about the significant, considerable needs in my riding that are not being met by this bill and frankly by policies like that.

I think at this point I would like to go into some of the concerns I have with respect to the agreement that was signed with the Ontario Medical Association and the government of Ontario. Of course, this bill is part and parcel of that particular agreement.

If we go back a few months, to last spring, April 12, a tentative deal was reached between the negotiating teams for the OMA and the government. It included a fairly significant fee-for-service rate increase. Of course, the doctors had been very concerned that their fees had not increased for some time under the former government.

As part and parcel of that agreement, I assume there was a commitment made that this government would bring forward this particular bill, and the OMA was, I am sure, absolutely delighted that this bill was going to be coming forward, which would ensure that money would be flowing into its bank account for many years to come.

It is a six-year agreement, running from April 1, 1991, to March 31, 1997, and it also provides for binding arbitration to both parties if there is a dispute that cannot be settled.

The OMA, through this bill, is recognized as the sole representative of physicians in Ontario in negotiating and determining doctors' fees. I guess that gives me my greatest concern, because I do not believe that the OMA represents the interests of all physicians in this province. Indeed it was quite evident and clear when the fact was presented and we saw the vote the physicians took to determine whether they would accept this agreement. I believe 13% of them did not support the agreement that was negotiated because they believe the agreement did not adequately address their concerns.

A great many of those doctors, I would submit, are the highly skilled specialists we have in Ontario, a great many of them feeling that their work is not being adequately rewarded, that there is not enough opportunity in this province presently. That concerns me greatly, because, as I said, getting back specifically to this bill, when you see that doctors are leaving the province, in many cases they are the most highly skilled physicians we have who are leaving this province because of lack of opportunity. They are heading south. There have been a great many of them in the past few years.

The OMA does not negotiate for many doctors in this province, and that is why I think a lot of the physicians feel that the OMA does not necessarily represent their interests. If you are looking at industrial physicians who may work in industry or for insurance companies and collect a salary, the OMA does not negotiate their salary and will not negotiate their salary, in spite of this bill, as far as I know. Lab physicians are also salaried employees who do not work fee-for-service and therefore will not be represented by the OMA in terms of negotiating their salaries or their moneys that are given to them. We know there are a great many doctors employed at the Workers' Compensation Board to assess whether claims are legitimate. Those doctors do not make fees for service. They make a salary, generally speaking. There are a great many doctors employed by the Ministry of Health of Ontario and Canada and their money is not fees for service. They obtain a salary as well. Teaching doctors who are involved in research and teaching at our fine teaching hospitals, tertiary care centres, are not included. They will not be represented through this bill.

I have given this a great deal of research, and I found that in the area of cranial-facial surgery, which is one of the highest subspecialties of plastic surgery, we have lost a great many of our best, most highly skilled surgeons in the st couple of years. I cannot say why they left, because they can indicate that. But my concern is that many of them may have left because they felt there was a lack of opportunity in this province, and they felt that going elsewhere they would have more opportunities to utilize their skills in a better way.

Actually, the father of cranial-facial surgery, Dr. Monroe, left this province about five years ago. Another very well-known doctor in this field, Dr. Uldis Bite, left about one and a half years ago to go to the Mayo Clinic to the south, and Dr. Joe Gruss, who was in Toronto, left recently to go to the University of Washington in Seattle, because he felt there was more there for him, I assume. Dr. Hugh Bailey left for California.

These are some of the most highly skilled surgeons we had in the most highly trained subspecialty, cranial-facial surgery. We have lost them, and we have to give consideration to how we are going to replace these people.

I know that University Hospital in London has been trying for many months to recruit a qualified cranial-facial surgeon of the calibre that these people I mentioned were and are, and they have been unable to do so—the same with the University of Toronto, I understand.

It concerns me greatly that these people have felt they had to move south, for whatever reason, and that we in Ontario are not able to keep these most highly skilled surgeons here, and that comes right back to my own constituents. When my constituents require health care service, if there is something beyond what is offered locally, many of them end up coming to Toronto. My own mother spent many months in hospitals in Toronto. That is a reality we face in rural Ontario, because there is not the same sort of service available locally, so we end up coming to Toronto.

It concerns me greatly when we see that these people have not even stayed in Toronto because they felt it was not here for them. When people go to places like the Mayo Clinic and the University of Washington in Seattle, you know those are some of the best medical institutions in the world and you know that those doctors who have been recruited there are of very high calibre and quality or they could not have been recruited by those institutions.

I also understand that of the total number of plastic surgeons who are presently practising in Toronto, 20% to 25% are contemplating leaving or planning to leave or have left in the past few months.

Teaching surgeons are some of the ones that are most likely to leave because, again, there is not the opportunity here. If we look at that aspect, we can see things are not going to get better in the short term or the long term, when we understand that as many teaching surgeons as we need probably are not going to be staying.

This comes back to the issue of excellence once again. My concern is that this government does not seem to understand adequately the absolute need for pursuing excellence and rewarding excellence. I cannot recall a single initiative that has been taken by this government that is cognizant of that very important reality.

I have probably made all the points I would like to make this afternoon, but I am certainly very disappointed in this bill. I cannot support it. I will not be supporting it. I hope the government will, in fact, respond to the request that was made earlier this afternoon by a number of different members, including my colleague the member for London North, to refer this bill not to the committee of the whole but to a standing committee of this Legislature, so we can have people coming forward who may feel that this bill is not in their best interests either and who may be able to give us some information that will help us as we work to respond to the health care needs of the province.

Mr J. Wilson: I thought the comments from my colleague the member for Wellington were excellent, and I want to take a minute and a half to commend him and to point out that it is surprising that the government is giving this sweetheart deal to the Ontario Medical Association. I said this in my remarks the other day. I will be supporting the bill for a number of other reasons, but many of my colleagues have grave concerns about this, and we are asking that the bill go to a standing committee of the Legislature. It will be interesting to see the OMA come forward and defend this deal it has struck with the government.

Just a few minutes ago, the Minister of Health was given a report by the investigators who were investigating the finances and structure of St Michael's Hospital. The investigators found that St Michael's debt as at March 31, 1991, was $63 million and that St Michael's operating deficit for its fiscal year ended March 31, 1991, was $16.6 million. That is big news, and that will be headline news tonight and tomorrow, I am sure.

It is a staggering amount of money for just one hospital to be in debt. It is a new fact, because yesterday when we were debating that hospitals were in debt some $200 million across the province, we did not know the specifics on St Michael's, so the $200 million figure has just been raised substantially.

This deal takes a great deal of money out of taxpayers' pockets. It is going to be a severe drain on taxpayers. The binding arbitration aspect is one that I know from past experience is going to be very costly. We look forward to the debate in standing committee and we hope the government will support us in our efforts to have the bill sent to the standing committee.

Mr Stockwell: I thought the member for Wellington's comments were both insightful and somewhat provocative. They are well-thought-out, in my opinion.

It is very interesting to see this government reacting to the debts owed from the 1990 election. We have seen systematically this government pay off its IOUs to organizations and to special interest groups and advocates. This and a few other bills appear to be the doctors' payoff for their support.

Today we heard the announcement by the Minister of Labour. Here is the union payoff announced today about how it is going to unionize and organize, and of course we know full well there is a double payoff there as well, because for everybody who organizes and forms a union, money automatically gets funnelled back through the system into the coffers of the NDP itself. The teachers as well have seen their payoff.

These are the kinds of things that I think set a very dangerous precedent. When we have governments being elected by advocates, by special interest groups and so on, they no longer think about the good of the people when they get involved, the good of everyone in the province. They think about their buddies who happen to be the union people. Teachers are paid off, the medical doctors, the medical profession, and it is very discouraging to sit on this side of the House and see it.

It is less than honourable in my opinion. It certainly sacrifices the benefits of many in this province for a select few. What is becoming more and more obvious is that if you happen to endorse this government through participation or financial help at election time, you can expect your payoff to come with legislation in the not too distant future.

Apparently, as the member for Wellington pointed out, this is the payoff to the doctors. It is a sad commentary.

Mrs Caplan: I think it is important for me to clarify one matter, that what has been negotiated is substantially different than what originally had been requested by the Ontario Medical Association of the government some two years ago. The original request of the Ontario Medical Association was that any doctor who refused to pay dues to the Ontario Medical Association would lose his licence to practise in Ontario. That was the original closed-shop Rand formula requested by the Ontario Medical Association.

While I think the doctors of the province might consider this would be an improvement over what had originally been requested, this bill says doctors do not even have the right to challenge in court that the OMA automatically receives a deduction from what doctors are expecting to receive from the OHIP account according to their billing. I felt it should be on the record that what the Ontario Medical Association originally wanted to do, not only to their own members but to all doctors in this province, was to say that if they did not pay dues to the Ontario Medical Association, whether they were members or not, they would lose their licence to practise medicine in Ontario.

I think what was negotiated by this government was an improvement over that. That was totally unacceptable to me, both on behalf of the doctors and the government some two years ago. I believe the process in place which takes the money automatically from the doctors, while it is equally offensive to many doctors in this province, means at least none of them will lose their licence to practise because they refuse to send their dues to the Ontario Medical Association.

Mr Turnbull: I want to compliment my colleague the member for Wellington. I would like to add a few points. We are forcing doctors into unions. For the first time the OMA becomes the official union and they must belong to it. A lot of specialists do not want to belong to a trade union and it is unprecedented that the government should be gathering trade union dues. Is this an indication of what is going to happen in the future, after they have all their legislation to make sure everybody is unionized, that they are going to collect the dues for them? Further, are they going to give a fee to the government for collecting the union dues for them, or is this going to be free of charge?

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. Will the member take his seat. This kind of interjection is unacceptable. It is unacceptable from the Solicitor General. It is unacceptable from other members of the government benches. The member must be given the floor.

Mr Turnbull: It apparently is a sore spot with the government when we talk about forcing people to be members of a union, and that is what our party is against. We have seen it today with the proposed legislation. They want to bring in labour legislation and make it easier to join unions. In fact, it is not just making it easier to join unions; it is forcing people into unions and we are on a slippery slope in this province when we do that.

The idea of collecting union dues on behalf of somebody through the government is absolutely incredible. Is the government going to be reimbursed for that? Is the government going to start collecting union dues for any union it has anything to do with?

The Acting Speaker: The member for Wellington may wish to use up the two minutes to respond to comments and questions.

Mr Arnott: I am disappointed my colleague did not have an opportunity to speak to this, but I want to thank my colleagues in my caucus for their compliments. I appreciate that.

Another issue that has to be reaffirmed at this point is the issue of government accessibility. When we talk about forcing this bill to a standing committee of the Legislature—I should not say forcing it perhaps, but referring it so as to give one day of opportunity for some of the physicians or anyone who is interested, as my colleague the member for Simcoe West indicated. The OMA, I am sure, would be interested in putting its position on this matter. I certainly hope the government will allow that to happen.

Second, on the issue of accessibility, I know the Minister of Health is very busy looking after her responsibilities as best she can, but I also know that I have a hospital in my riding seeking a meeting with the minister. As I indicated earlier, I am advocating on its behalf to get through the door to see the minister and we hope that will come about very soon.

Mr Callahan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: There is not a quorum in the House on this very important issue and I ask that it be checked.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Mr Arnott: I would like to reiterate my hope and my feeling that the government should allow this bill to go to a standing committee of this Legislature so we can put forward our views, the concerns out there that may have remained unaddressed. I certainly hope the government will assent to that this afternoon. I have said about as much on this bill as I intend to this afternoon and I thank members.

Mr Cousens: Just this last week we saw the importance a doctor can play in providing the kind of service at really touches the needs of people. When we saw the dedication of Wilma DeGroot in the accident in Canada's northland, we began to see the kinds of skills that were there. The other evening when I saw her interviewed on CBC, I began to have a great sense of pride not only for the people who serve in Canada's armed forces, but in particular for this young person, 25 or 26 years of age, recently graduated from Queen's University, now doing a three-year stint with the armed forces.

There she was in this Hercules airplane caught in the north. When it was broken up and on the ground, there was a person ready to serve and look after the people who were injured; marvellous dedication, which to me embodies so much of what the medical profession is all about.

So often, when we come into this House to examine one of these dry bills that has been prepared by the ministry, we somehow lose the touch of the humanity that is so very much a part of what it is all about. We are dealing with the people who make the system work.

Wilma DeGroot, as a physician, is there, and seeing her interviewed the other evening, as one dedicated to serving her fellow human beings, at personal risk and doing those right things, first of all, she had the compassion, but beyond that, she had the training. She did not have the equipment. When they were in that situation in the northland, they did not have all that was needed to help the wounds and the burns, and certainly nothing to handle the terrible cold. None the less she was there, committed to serving her fellow passengers in that flight of death.

That illustrates to me something that is not all that uncommon. What is uncommon is that we as a society fail so often to pause and reflect about what she did and what doctors are doing just around the corner right now in the hospital for Sick Children, the Toronto General Hospital, the Women's College Hospital, Mount Sinai Hospital, the St. Elizabeth's Hospital: serving those people who are part and parcel of the community of Ontario. When a person goes through for medicine and becomes someone who is given that special licence to treat people and care for them after many years of service and training, he or she has a chance to go out and participate in society and hopefully help make it a healthier place for people.

In commenting on Bill 135, I want to start by complimenting the medical profession. We start with doctors, and there is not one of us who does not have at least one doctor. As you get older, I suppose you end up having more and more to look after your different needs and problems. We have the great fortune also in Ontario that if we are not satisfied with the kind of treatment and care we receive, we can select another doctor. We are not required to stay in that one physician's care. We have the freedom to choose the kind of medical service we want to have. I believe so much of it begins with the physician and the care he or she is able to give us.

I am concerned about the long-term impact that will affect the care and treatment we receive because of the implications this bill will have on the medical profession. I believe genuinely that there will be more Wilma DeGroots who will go through for medicine. When young people come into the medical profession, they do it out of the idealism of medicine, what it is to put on that gown, take those instruments and learn all the intricacies of their profession in order to become the very best.

It is a profession that has been under attack for quite a number of years, ever since 1986, when the doctors lined up out here on Queen's Park Crescent. It was probably one of the largest turnouts I have ever seen. The profession represented itself very well, saying at that time it was opposed to extra-billing. They formed a tremendous body of people and came out here because they saw their profession under attack.

The extra-billing issue has been put aside for a while and we are now in a position where people in the medical profession are virtually civil servants. The compensation they receive for the job they do, the performance of looking after people, is something where they are reimbursed through OHIP. It is largely that way.

There are some doctors who are probably still extra-billing. I have heard of instances where some doctors at least have extra charges for services that are not so perfectly defined by the province in its billing statements. So doctors will charge for phoned-in prescriptions, for sending a medical examination to another doctor or sending a file to another doctor. There are certain services they will charge for on top of the OHIP schedule. I think that is unfortunate, but they are probably very selective about whom they charge. Some people obviously do not have the funds to pay for some of these extra services. I think the intent of our medical system is that everybody has free health care. My only point here is that there is a small percentage of doctors I have heard of who are going outside that box and charging for services.

That is not the real issue. The real issue comes down to the medical profession having one of the most important responsibilities, as do all the professions, but theirs is to care for our physical, emotional and psychological needs. There are so many ways in which the medical profession can do that.

Having an understanding then of their intention to go into the profession and why they are there, it is rather a hurtful experience to talk to so many doctors over the last five years, since the extra-billing debacle, and find they are still hurt to such a degree that now they do not have the sense of freedom of being independent business people having a sense of total responsibility over the running of their business or their office and seeing their office and the delivery of a health care services as also being a business. There is a sense in which they feel enslaved to the system, to the guidelines of the Ontario Ministry of Health, under which they fall. The billing and that part of their business which was previously an entrepreneurial type of thing now is all defined. Everything is delineated and defined by the government under OHIP.

We are now in a position where we are saying: "Not only are you totally controlled by the Ontario government, now, through the government, we're also going to collect your fees for the Ontario Medical Association. In fact, what it really comes to is that you're becoming more and more like a union member."

I was listening to the member for York Mills, and his comments following up the member for Wellington really touched the heart of that problem: how tragic that physicians and surgeons and doctors are all falling now into that category of being part of the unions in Ontario.

We saw today new legislation that is coming forward. It will come because of the majority of the New Democrats. They are going to be able to force through heinous legislation that will set back Ontario many years. When Europe is going the other way and opening up and moving to democracy, we in this socialist state of Ontario are moving into a totally other kind of restrictive, controlled, legislated, regulated environment where the independent freedom of individuals is being taken away and the government is going to have that master control over it. The problem we have is that the doctors now will fall more and more into that category, and that is part of the tragedy of the new Ontario. The rest of the world seems to be moving into another stream as Ontario moves into the socialist stream.

I know British Columbia is gone, Saskatchewan is gone, Yukon has gone socialist, and who knows what is going to happen in the next federal election. There is a real sense that this country seems to want socialism, but I do not think it wants it as badly as these guys who are running the government of Ontario.

One of my purposes here as a member of the opposition is to try to at least remind the government and the governing party that what it is doing does not have unanimous support. If they come through with some policy that I like, I am going to tell them, and there have been a few; I would have a hard time thinking of them right now. But I want them to know that if they are going to continue to push Ontario back into the Middle Ages and into a socialist regime that others are trying to get out of, then we are going to do everything we can to remind them of another approach.

Mr Mills: You want us to collect tax on commission. That's the Roman days.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Order, please. Interjections are out of order. The honourable member should just address the Chair.

Mr Cousens: I think the member is just saying what the doctors make does not matter a tinker's to him. He wants to see them suffer as much as possible. I would say that is not where we are coming from on this whole issue. That is absolutely the wrong direction.

What I see happening here is that as you look back to it, the cost of health care in Ontario is in excess of $5 billion, just allocated for OHIP payments in this fiscal year 1991-92. That is an awful lot of money. Then we also realize that doctors have not had a fee increase since 1989. So what we are now dealing with is, how do we deal with future negotiations with doctors?

The problem we have is that the doctors' positions are now going to be handled far more as a union-type negotiation. The OMA will become the speaking body for the doctors and the issues as presented by the OMA will be dealt with through a government body. Then if there is a breakdown in negotiations, that breakdown will mean they can go to a third party to have an arbitrated settlement.

When you start thinking about giving that kind of power to a group outside the Legislature, outside the control and power of the elected officials of Ontario, through an act that we will be passing here in this House shortly, it really means that we are giving away our sense of responsibility for how the money is going to be spent.

I went through a number of negotiations in my life when I was on the school board, and I think one of the hardest things for the negotiating sides is to give up their negotiating rights to a third party to resolve it. Third-party arbitration is always one of the most difficult things, because if you cannot work it through yourselves, it just becomes a horrible moment. Negotiations are the best way of having it, but what will happen is that when the doctors have a breakdown in the negotiation procedures between themselves and the province of Ontario, there will be a third-party arbitration board that begins to solve those problems.

That should not be the case. Those problems should be addressed here in the House by all members. When you are dealing with the kinds of dollars I am referring to—you are talking of in excess of $5 billion when dealing with OHIP billings—those kinds of dollars really should not be, and to the Liberals' credit were not allowed to be put off to some other party to decide. This group is going to move in a direction that allows some arbitrary third-party group to pass these things.

We are moving, in a way, towards socialism. If the people of Ontario only knew what they were doing on September 6, 1990, in electing the Premier and the socialist horde to Queen's Park, they might have had second thoughts as to how much they disliked Mr Peterson, or maybe they would have given a second look at the member for Nipissing to see what the Taxfighter would do for Ontario.

But the die was cast, and since that die was cast, we in Ontario, at least in the Legislature, now have to put up with the kind of legislation we are dealing with today: legislation that is not that well thought out, that is giving more and more power to an independent group, that is making one of the most important professional bodies in Ontario just like another union, not by name, but by act, by deed, by appearances, by virtue of saying, "The province will now collect your fees for the OMA."

What about those doctors in Ontario who do not want to be members of that? I have been led to believe there are some 3,000 doctors who are presently not members of the OMA. Are we now going to make it compulsory that they be members of the Ontario Medical Association? Is that what we are requiring, I ask the member for Durham Centre?

Mr White: No.

Mr Cousens: No? Well, what are we doing then? He does not know. That is part of the problem. The government backbenchers do not know what this legislation really means. That is what concerns me.

Mr White: Make them pay their dues.

Mr Cousens: He maybe has an answer now.

The Acting Speaker: Please address your comments to the Chair.

Mr Cousens: It was a test question and they failed, Mr Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member from the government side will have the opportunity, when you have completed your remarks, to participate.

Mr Cousens: I just do not think they understand how serious it is for those doctors who are not members of the AMA to now be required by Bill 135 to have all their fees gathered and collected and submitted through the Ontario government plan. If you have ever seen something that has the earmarks of Big Brother and control over a profession, you are starting to see it. You can make a lot of points on that I am trying to do. In fact, in reading through Hansard, I have seen some of the best speeches by members of our caucus that I have seen in a long time.

In her comments the other day, the member for Mississauga South—her husband is a dentist and I think she has been close to the medical profession for a long time—had some of the most astute statements to make with regard to this bill. The comments yesterday by the member for Leeds-Grenville pointing out the ramifications of the bill also brought up an awful lot of background.

I noticed the Liberals coming out of their shell a little bit through the discussions on this bill, trying to find some rationale for at least disagreeing with the socialists for once. But I commend the members of our caucus for the way in which they have come forward and had very strong points to make with regard to it.

What can we do? I feel extremely frustrated as a member of the Legislature, because the only thing I am able to do is to stand up and argue the case and say—maybe I am taking too long to say it—

Interjections.

Mr Cousens: They all agree that I have taken too long to say it, but we are continuing to put down professions one at a time. For us now to be in the terrible position of boxing in the medical profession—the government is just beginning to put the bow on it with this kind of bill. I feel that is a tragedy that is not deserved by those people who are such an integral part of our health care system.

There are so many other things this government could be doing in dealing with health care, but it has not begun to address them. If only it could begin to make sure the quality was there throughout the system. If only it could begin to make sure that those people who are abusing the system right now could be stopped. If only there were ways in which we could have professional laypeople getting involved in the health care system to see where more economies could be found.

I stand here in this House as one who continues to read about doctors who are moving to other jurisdictions because they have given up on practising here in Canada. I had an article by another doctor who blames the health care system for driving him out. This is just another one who has decided he is not going to stay in Canada; he is going to move on to the United States.

We are developing them here. We bring them through our educational system, train them and help them become the very best professionals they could possibly be, and then we have a system installed under Queen's Park that discourages them and sends them off to the States or Europe or some other place. I do not mind seeing us do our share to help Third World countries, but I do not want to see us drive the profession away from our own country unnecessarily. Let's begin to do something about it.

I am grateful for the attention that has been given to this. I have a number of other points to make, but I understand there are a sufficient number of people who would like to see this bill voted on. I can assure members that I will be voting against it. It sounds innocuous as it is, but it is not. It is a bill that begins a further step of erosion of a profession that I value too highly to see put down the way this is doing. The dippers in Ontario will win this bill, but I hope that through the public dialogue in committee and through other processes, we can at least get the people to understand that we care deeply about our health care profession and the delivery of health care in Ontario, and we are not just going to let them destroy it.

Hon Mr Philip: Listening to the honourable member for Markham—whom I have been, I think I can honestly say, a friend of for a number of years—one has to ask whether or not he has read the bill. Clearly there is nothing in this legislation that requires anyone—any doctor, any physician—to be a member of the Ontario Medical Association.

What it does is what other organizations do that have collective bargaining rights; namely, that you have to pay for a service you are getting. Surely that makes sense. Why should someone get a free ride when others are paying? It does allow for that payment, under what would be a traditional Rand system, under section 3. But under section 4 it also allows the board of directors of the Ontario Medical Association to waive that fee if there is a particular problem with a physician, if there is an illness or an economic problem with the physician. It would allow, for example, a physician who was involved in missionary work or other types of work where he or she was not receiving remuneration to have that fee waived.

Surely it makes sense, when 87% of the physicians in Ontario have voted for a system that they think will work, to listen to the physicians of Ontario. That is what this government has done and that is reflected in this. There may be some people who do not want to be members of the Ontario Medical Association for a variety of reasons. Some are on the left of the Ontario Medical Association and some are on the right, but I think that if you asked a lot of those people, they would still say: "We don't want a free ride. We accept that this is the body that at the present point in time does represent a majority of the doctors in Ontario. It is acting on behalf of a majority of doctors in Ontario, and therefore we should pay for that." They may not want to belong for various reasons, but this bill does not force them to join.

Mr Cousens: I appreciate the remarks of the member for Etobicoke-Rexdale. I do not agree with them. I think what has happened is they are going to pay the bill but they do not have any rights under the OMA. The government now is taking special control over the OMA by collecting fees. It now puts the OMA into a special category. It puts all doctors into a closer relationship with the government than ever before.

Mr Stockwell: Whether they want to be or not; no more freedoms.

Mr Cousens: Whether they want to be or not, they are now forced into a new relationship with their association and with the government. I have to say I do not support that philosophy. I think the honourable Minister of Transportation believes very much what he is saying. I would say that is part of the philosophy where you put everybody into a box and then you have them that way. I go more for freedom of people to believe and do what they want to do. The OMA does negotiate but there may be other groups within the OMA that believe different things and that can fight for them.

Mr Tilson: It is called freedom of choice.

Mr Cousens: Yes, it is called freedom of choice. It is not the kind of forced existence that this government is bringing forward in this country now. There are enough doctors out there who need to have someone to defend them. I think they will all be defended if we come along and take away the controls and regimentation this government is trying to put around them. They should let them have some of the freedoms again and also come back and bring in other factors that are going to make sure we have quality in our hospitals. We have quality in our doctors, but the whole system needs to have a real strong review. Somehow or other it is not working right now. I have more complaints from people than ever before about a carefree attitude.

It starts with the doctors somehow becoming jaundiced. They are losing something of that idealism they started with when they started out in the profession. Let's go back to some of the things that made this province great and made the health care profession great. This is not the kind of thing that adds to strength.

Mr Wessenger: I am very pleased to make what I hope are some concluding remarks with respect to second reading of this legislation. First, I would like to comment with respect to the matter on the compulsory payment of dues. This legislation is not unique in Canada. Already there is the compulsory payment of dues in Nova Scotia, Quebec, Newfoundland and New Brunswick, and formerly Manitoba had legislation to this effect. I do not think this particular legislation is what is so significant for debate. I think it is the whole question of the agreement between the government of Ontario and the Ontario Medical Association.

I would agree with the member for Renfrew North who said this agreement was of great significance. I think it is of great significance because it is the first time in Canada we have ever had the medical profession agreeing to maintain the principles of medicare, including universality and accessibility. I think that is a great advance. It is a great compliment to our medical profession that they have come out in full support of our universal and accessible medicare system.

Second, I think it is also of significance in the whole question of controlling health care costs in this province. I think we all recognize the health care budget has been escalating and taking a greater percentage of the provincial budget. It has now gone up to approximately one third of the total budget. I think all members surely recognize the need to control the extent of the health care budget. We certainly do not want to go the way of the American situation where it has gone to an extent of 12% of the budget and leaves 37 million people unprotected, a very unsatisfactory and highly expensive inefficient system.

What this agreement does with its joint management committee is attempt to address some of the major problems with respect to the cost of health care. It recognizes in this whole question of controlling the cost of health care that the medical profession plays the key role. We have to recognize that the medical profession is the key player in this. They have agreed to co-operate with the government of Ontario in trying to bring the cost of medical care into control in order to have a more efficient system and more value in the system.

The joint management committee is going to look at such things as what areas appropriately should or should not be insured under our system. They are taking action with respect to the whole problem of utilization, that is, the increase in the number of physicians in the province which is putting increased strain on our costs, and also the degree of utilization we have had per physician, which has been increasing dramatically. We brought measures in the agreement to try to cap that increase.

Also, if we look at the role physicians play in health care, our drug benefit program is almost out of control with a 15% to 18% increase in costs over a year. Again the medical profession plays a key role in the question of drug costs.

We should look at the whole question of lab tests running at an increase of 20% a year. Again the medical profession is a key player in keeping these costs under control.

Then we look at the whole question of hospital costs which have been going up and escalating. We have the highest level in Canada with respect to hospital utilization. Who controls hospital admission and who controls the length of stay in hospitals but the medical profession?

If we want to control the costs of medical care in this province, we have to work in co-operation with the medical profession. I am very pleased we are the first government that has signed an agreement to work in co-operation with them. I know we can improve our medicare system because of that.

With respect to the question of arbitration, we believe as a government in collective bargaining. When collective bargaining does not work, you can have an unsatisfactory situation occur in an area of the health field such as the provision of medical services by physicians, such as a strike. I think a strike is unacceptable as a method of determining the matter of compensation for physician arbitration was the model recommended by Mr Justice Gauthier and it is the model we have accepted.

I might add that in the agreement there are guidelines with respect to arbitration. The guidelines include that the compensation has to be in light of prevailing economic conditions in the province and the overall state of the provincial economy. They also include cost changes in the actual cost of practice for the physician, the level of physician payments and methods of payments in other Canadian provinces, the growth or decline in real per capita income and the Ontario cost-of-living increase.

With those restrictions I have confidence the arbitration system will work reasonably, being fair both to the province of Ontario and to the medical profession. I would therefore urge members to support this legislation as being a key part of this agreement.

Mrs Caplan: In his summation, the parliamentary assistant stressed the fiscal levers the government is using. He talked about what they are going to ensure, what they are not going to ensure, and he talked about income caps, all of which are part of this legislation.

I want to say to him at this point in time that I believe we can afford in this province to give the people of Ontario the care they really need. I think we can afford accessible, appropriate care. I do not believe we have a problem that is related only to cost. I do believe we have a problem with the level of inappropriate care and the number of things that are being done in this province which are completely unnecessary or wasteful. That is considered inappropriate care. I have not seen any initiative taken by the government in this agreement or in this piece of legislation which would address that issue.

I am very concerned that the message the government is sending out to people is that the problems within the health care system have to do with affordability. It is my view that we can afford to give people in this province the care that is going to improve their health and that will make them well when they are sick, in an effective and appropriate way.

I want to say to the parliamentary assistant that I find it distressing in the extreme his focus on the fiscal levers, his focus simply on affordability, his focus which removes from health policy the desire to improve appropriate care and to improve the quality and to say to the people of this province that the government is going to commit itself to ensuring that people who are sick and who are in need of care will get the care they need.

I repeat again that we can afford in this province for people to have high-quality, appropriate care when they are sick.

Mrs Marland: The irony in the comments of the parliamentary assistant is the fact that this piece of legislation has nothing to do with guaranteeing any level of health care to the patients in this province. All this legislation does, as I have said on two previous days this week, is to unionize doctors. What will that do either to solve the high cost of health care in this province or to give any assurance that when people are sick, we will have dedicated, committed physicians who are still here with all their qualifications to treat those sick people?

What this bill does is insult the medical profession in this province. This bill that makes doctors union members—no matter what other words you want to use, that is what it does—does nothing to deal with the problems that are associated with major health care deficiencies in this province.

This bill will not bring back one single bed that has been closed in this province in the last five years. It will not do anything to ensure jobs for nurses who are now out of work because this government is cutting back on the funding to hospitals and hospitals are having to close beds. All this bill does is further alienate the professionals on whom we are dependent for the provision of health care. It is a further focus on saying, "Let's blame the doctors for the health care costs in this province," which is not the case.

Mr Callahan: I had not intended to join in this debate again, except that the comments by the member for Mississauga South struck a chord.

The Acting Speaker: I want to remind the honourable member that we are commenting on the member for Simcoe Centre's comments.

Mr Callahan: The member for Mississauga South indicated that the member for Simcoe Centre had indicated this does great things for the health care system, but the thing that really struck me was when she indicated that this was in fact unionizing the doctors.

I guess the question I have to ask is—and I am not going to use the full two minutes—what will be the follow-up on this, recognizing that the Minister of Labour, within his package of proposed amendments, I believe, has a provision whereby if there is a strike, the business cannot carry on? Does this mean that if the doctors struck, if in fact this does create a union, hospitals would not be able to carry on, that they would be left to close? I really do not know the answer to that. I guess maybe the parliamentary assistant is the one who would have to reply to it, but it certainly smacks unfavourably and I think is something that should have been considered.

The final thing is that I understand people do not necessarily have to belong to the association but they have to pay their dues, so they get all of the obligations but none of the benefits. If in fact their dues are taken from them, they do not get the right to the pension benefits that are available through the OMA. What is happening is that they are paying and getting nothing in return for it.

The Acting Speaker: We can accommodate one more participant in questions or comments. Seeing none, the honourable parliamentary assistant, the member for Simcoe Centre.

Mr Wessinger: I have nothing further to say.

The Acting Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Pursuant to standing order 27(g), I request that the vote on the motion by the Honourable Frances Lankin for second reading of Bill 135, An Act to provide for the Payment of Physicians' Dues and Other Amounts to the Ontario Medical Association, be deferred until immediately following routine proceedings on Monday, November 18, 1991.

Mr Cousens: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would think that what has just happened here is that the voice vote could easily carry. If you were to ask for the vote again on that bill, it might just carry this time and a deferral may not be required.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. Do we have unanimous consent that we carry on this vote again?

Agreed to.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay"

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Bill ordered for standing committee on social development.

Le projet de loi est déferé au comité permanent des affaires sociales.

FIRE MARSHALS AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES COMMISSAIRES DES INCENDIES

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 131, An Act to amend the Fire Marshals Act.

Suite du débat ajourné sur la motion visant la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 131, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les commissaires des incendies.

The Acting Speaker: When we last debated this bill, the honourable member for Leeds-Grenville had the floor. I do not see the honourable member present. Are there any other members wishing to participate?

Mr Callahan: I will be relatively brief, and I can hear of a sigh of relief from members, but this is really a piece of legislation that once again was a Liberal government initiative, and once again is in the same vein as the discussions yesterday and probably for days past, when numerous bills have been brought forward by this government that were in fact bills that were instituted by the Liberal government. I guess what they are trying to do is to clear the decks of legislation that was well thought out and was sensitive and was going to address the needs of the people of the province, and for that I commend them. That is showing good judgement.

However, having said that, we recognize that our fire departments are made up, as we all know, of components of those who are full-time, those who are volunteers and those in municipalities where it is part volunteer and part full-time. We figure that we have 34 full-time departments that are staffed entirely by salaried firefighters, 100 composite departments that consist of a contingent of salaried firefighters as well as a number of volunteer firefighters and that we have 522 volunteer departments staffed entirely by volunteer firefighters.

I think it is important that the Solicitor General would have brought forward, or at least revealed to the House in a statement, many of the things that were decided by a consensus body put together by the Liberal government, a group of people from various backgrounds similar to the body that was put together to discuss the question of police reform prior to the police bill being brought in. It was really an innovative way of getting various groups to sit down and try to come up with at least a minimum amount of consensus and report back to the minister.

The former minister, the member for Cambridge, in a speech to the Ontario Association of Fire Chiefs at their 39th annual conference, refers to this report and says he expects that he will be able to do something before the end of the year. We are not seeing anything from the present Solicitor General. In fairness, he did take over sort of in mid-stream, but one would think the importance of fire fighting in this province, the importance of a number of things that were discussed by this consultative body, would have been addressed well before this.

We are approaching the end of this sitting. We are approaching the end of the year. Still we see nothing before this Legislature in terms of some of the very important issues, ie, the question of training of volunteers and ensuring that training takes place as close as possible to home since it was agreed that we did not want to inconvenience these people who serve Ontario so faithfully by requiring them to go to locations that might involve a good deal of travel.

We have heard nothing about that. We have a very excellent report by Justice John Webber, who happens to be the chief judge of the courthouse in my jurisdiction which was rendered in 1981. It was in the matter of high rise fires and it arose out of a very tragic fire just shortly before that. There were some very excellent recommendations made in that report and we have not seen anything brought forward by the Solicitor General who is responsible for this piece of legislation.

As I said at the outset, we will be supporting the amendments per se because they are really relatively minor. In a sense they could be considered to be housekeeping, although there are some, particularly dealing with hazardous waste, that are of some importance. The fact is that there has not been anything else brought forward by this government, other than legislation that was already on the books or was to be brought forward by the previous Liberal government before the election.

I have to wonder, is this indicative of what is happening with the government of the day? Has it no new ideas of its own? Are they not moving ahead on initiatives either of their own or good initiatives that were instituted by the previous government? Are they bankrupt of ideas? Are they simply going to make statements in the House that scare the living daylights out of the residents of Ontario such as the document dealing with the proposed labour atters, or are they moving ahead and are they good managers of this province?

I suggest this is another indication that there is no rudder. There is no rudder. The sails have been taken down and the ship of state is now moving in an erratic fashion hither and yon and there is no one at the helm. We have not seen the captain in here for days. The captain of the Good Ship Lollipop has not been in the Legislature for four or five days, and he is the captain of the ship.

I have grave concern, as do many of the members in opposition and third parties. I think there probably are some people in the government who are sort of scratching their heads and saying: "This is not getting on with what we ran for and what we got elected for." They are not getting on with the agenda we thought they would have, the Agenda for People.

Each time a bill is brought in that was thought out by the previous government, where not one letter or period or comma has been taken out, identical to what was brought forward by the previous Liberal government, one has to wonder what is going on in the minds of people in the government. These good people ran for office anticipating that a lot of good things would be done, that they would be able to get these good things done for the constituents in their ridings. Yet day after day we see this type of legislation brought forward that is not their legislation. What they have done is to reintroduce the same bill—hopefully they have photostated it to save expense to the taxpayers of this province—put the name of a minister of the present government on it and claimed ownership of it.

The other day, the third party critic for the Ministry of the Attorney General was talking about two or three bills that were brought in by the Attorney General which were really bills that had been introduced by the former Attorney General, again hopefully photostated with the new Attorney General's name put on them. I think anyone who is an ardent follower of this Legislature has to take it as déjà vu. If they really followed it closely and saw these bills being introduced by the former Liberal government, they could realize that exactly the same bills are being introduced, albeit 14 months later, by this government that is supposed to be managing and steering the ship of state.

I have to say it does not give me a serious feeling of comfort when I go to bed at night, knowing all we are really getting over there is recycled material. That is interesting, because we have heard nothing from the Minister of the Environment about the plan she is going to use to solve the problem of waste management in this province. We heard her in opposition. She was ferocious. She has not done one thing. The garbage just continues to mount.

What really concerns me is that if they are not photostating these bills that were formerly introduced by the Liberal government and putting the name of the new minister on them, that means they are throwing them away. If they are throwing them away, that means the Minister of the Environment had better get moving very quickly, because the amount of garbage that is now coming to the fore is even greater. That gives me concern.

The question of the fire department is as important as the police department. These are people who risk their lives to protect the citizens of this province, just as our police force does. By reason of a consensus committee that went out and came back with recommendations for the minister, we were able to put together a Police Act which, as I recall, was supported to a large degree by many members of the House. It was a matter that had actually achieved a purpose and brought together people who perhaps had divergent opinions at the outset but were able to come together in a way that allowed the bill to be put forward. I would like to see the same thing with the fire department.

As I said, the former Solicitor General in the Liberal government did in fact put together just that type of consultative body. We have not heard from the present Solicitor General yet as to what the results of that consultative process were. One would think that if they were ones that he was going to implement, he would stand up in the House in a very proud fashion and deliver a ministerial statement telling us that so we could then get on to the next step of putting together a bill similar to the police bill, a comprehensive bill that would ensure that the fire protection in this province is second to none. As the changes take place, particularly in cities such as Toronto with high-rises going up every day, we would be able to combat a fire and have all the tools to do that. But we do not see that.

I urge the Solicitor General to put our bill forward, because that is important and because he considers it to be a good bill, but at the same time, on behalf of my constituents and on behalf of all the constituents of the members of this assembly, to please get moving with the report, or tell us what the results of the consultative committee were. They should please get legislation in place, even if it is only introduced in first reading, so that we can look at it and the citizens of this province will recognize that they put a high priority on the question of fire protection in this province. I urge them to do that.

I understand that one other of my colleagues would like to speak on this and I will yield to her. As I say, we will be supporting this bill, but I felt it was necessary to make those comments. I tried to be evenhanded. I suppose I was a bit pejorative in the first part of it, but I meant it in a very positive way, that it is important to get on with this business and to demonstrate to the people of Ontario that in fact the ship of state is not rudderless. If it is rudderless, we have a problem.

Mrs Marland: In rising to speak to Bill 131, An Act to amend the Fire Marshals Act, I actually want to commend the government for this piece of legislation. I only wish similar legislation had been in place at the time of the Hagersville tire fire, for example, because there was a situation that the community and the local fire departments had been concerned about for a number of years. In fact, there had been court orders to the owner of that tire dump at Hagersville to make his operations safe.

The Ministry of the Environment had been in and the fire departments had been in and the owner had been ordered to establish what they call fire lanes. In other words, instead of having one huge pile of tires, he was to separate them and have lane widths in between these piles of tires that were wide enough for a firefighting vehicle, if necessary, to have access, and if there should be a fire started, there would be at least some space so the fire would not necessarily leap from one pile of tires to another.

In that particular case it was such a tragedy because it was not something the fire departments were not concerned about. As I say, they were so concerned that they required the owner to comply with their direction. They then took him to court to have the order issued. Then the owner simply appealed the court order.

In the meantime, those tires at Hagersville just continued to pile in the way the owner permitted them to be piled. As a result, of course, the next thing that happened we all are aware of and is now history. It was a tremendous risk to the environment, yet with the existing legislation at that time, the government and other agencies were powerless to prevent it.

If you have someone who is irresponsible in the operation of a plant or any facility that may be a fire risk and you know what precautions and what steps need to be taken to remedy that risk and hopefully to eliminate that risk, until this piece of legislation, there has been no power for the Fire Code Commission to authorize any other steps.

With this bill, the Fire Code Commission can authorize the fire marshal or an officer of the fire marshal to take whatever action is required, even if there is a court order that is under appeal and even if the owner of the property or the operation or the factory or whatever the facility is that is involved says: "I don't have any money. I can't afford trucks to come in and, in this case, create fire lanes between the piles of tires."

Fortunately now with this legislation, under subsection 18a(4), "The Fire Code Commission may authorize the fire marshal or an officer to cause to be done any thing required to be done by an order made under" some other subsections. In particular the one we are happy to see in this piece of legislation is clause 18a(4)(b), which says, "in the commission's opinion, failure to do the thing would seriously endanger the health or safety of any person or the quality of the natural environment for any use that can be made of it."

Under subsection 18b(1), "If a justice of the peace is satisfied on evidence under oath that there is reasonable ground to believe that entry on certain land or premises is necessary for the purpose of doing a thing authorized to be done under section 18a,"—the section I just read—"the justice of the peace may issue a warrant authorizing the person named in the warrant to enter and do the thing on the land or premises."

We congratulate the government for this bill and know that the provisions contained herein will eliminate some of the risks and some of the actual fire events that have happened in the past.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Solicitor General have some summation remarks?

Hon Mr Pilkey: No, I believe the vote could be called on second reading.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

La motion de troisième lecture est également adoptée.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon Mr Cooke: Pursuant to standing order 53, I would like to indicate the business of the House for the week following the constituency week.

On Monday, November 18, we will consider second reading of Bill 73, the John Graves Simcoe Memorial Foundation Repeal Act, and third reading of Bill 75, the Law Society Amendment Act, and Bill 76, the Fraudulent Debtors Arrest Repeal Act. We will give committee of the whole consideration of Bill 42, the Arbitration Act; consider second reading of Bill 146, An Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act, Bill 28, the Class Proceedings Act and Bill 29, the Law Society Amendment Act.

On Tuesday, November 19, and Wednesday, November 20, we will give second reading consideration to Bill 143, An Act respecting the Management of Waste in the Greater Toronto Area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act.

On Thursday, November 21, in the morning we will deal with private members' business: ballot item 45 standing in the name of the member for Mississauga South and ballot item 46 standing in the name of the member for Wentworth East. In the afternoon we will deal with third reading of Bill 115, the Retail Business Establishments Statute Law Amendment Act.

The House adjourned at 1801.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Subscription information may be obtained from: Sessional Subscription Service, Publications Ontario, Ministry of Government Services, 5th Floor, 880 Bay Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone (416) 326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1 (800) 668-9938.

Table des matières

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi que celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Monday 18 November 1991

The House met at 1330.

Prayers.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

CONSERVATION AUTHORITIES

Mrs Fawcett: Constituency week is over, and the treasurer has had time to consider the $679-million worth spending cuts to come. I am concerned about the impact these cuts on the often underappreciated conservation authorities, which are so important to protecting the landscape of Ontario.

The Ministry of Natural Resources cut transfer payments by $4.5 million to fund its own constraint targets in the spring of 1991; $1.35 million was cut to meet the 1991 constraint, and an additional $2.5-million cut was expected.

Operational budget cuts have a human cost. In this instance, the foot soldiers of environmental protection are being put out of work. I would remind the House that every $1 of transfer payments to a conservation authority is matched by $2 from other sources.

The 38 conservation authorities are angry that the government ignored a long-standing agreement between them and the Ministry of Natural Resources. This agreement states that provincial transfer payments to conservation authorities will not be altered as a result of any general constraint that is applied to the Ministry of Natural Resources unless the government applies a constraint to all government ministries and all local government transfer payments.

Are the conservation authorities being made the victims of the ministry's own internal problems? Will the treasurer continue to allow the conservation authorities to be treated in this manner—no consultation, and policy changes without notice?

LABOUR LEGISLATION

Mrs Witmer: On Thursday, November 7, the Minister of Labour released his long-awaited, much-feared package of proposed amendments to the Labour Relations Act. I want to tell the minister about the impact of his announcement thus far.

Last week I received many calls and letters from communities which are reconsidering their future in Ontario if these proposals become law. However, I want to mention the impact in my community specifically. One employer called to tell me that he would be moving to the United States and that 100 jobs would be lost within a year. Others called to say that they were downsizing, while others said that all new growth would now occur in the United States, as opposed to Ontario.

Another letter stated:

"The owner has stated unequivocally that he will shut his plant down and put 150 employees out of work if such legislation is adopted.

"The NDP government is obviously shooting itself in the foot. However, the pain of this self-inflicted injury will be borne by the employers of small and medium-sized business. Hundreds of thousands of jobs are in the balance. The NDP government must be made to back off on this most critical issue."

Instead of creating further obstacles to employment and economic growth in Ontario, I would urge the minister to do an economic impact study to determine how many more jobs and how much more investment will be lost if these amendments are passed as he has proposed.

CAT SCANNER

Ms Harrington: When I arrived back in my constituency of Niagara Falls last week I was almost swamped by the volume of mail from my constituents. I have here almost 1,000 letters addressed to the Minister of Health. These letters were addressed by hand and stamped, the majority of them, and sent to me within a one-week period. I will quote:

"Dear Ms Lankin:

"As a resident of the Niagara Falls area and a consumer of health care, I wish to advise you of my deep concern over the lack of CT scan services available in my community. I am of the opinion that the merits of locating a CT scan in Niagara Falls are being overlooked and request that your immediate attention be directed to correcting the situation. Personally, and as a member of this community, I want you to know that I am in support of locating a CT scan at the Greater Niagara General Hospital."

That is the letter I have received. The community demand is absolute. The issue of a CT scan in Niagara is a priority. The Greater Niagara General Hospital has the most emergency outpatient visits of any comparable hospital across Ontario; that is, 70,000 in 1990. Further, there is a five-month waiting period for CT scans across Niagara. This is the longest waiting period in Ontario.

We must stop the cross-border shopping for CT scans. I ask the minister to act.

VICTIMS OF VIOLENCE

Mrs Y. O'Neill: Today, I wish to congratulate the women of the Ontario Association of Interval and Transition Houses who presented their annual lobby here at Queen's Park. This lobby is built upon a tradition of deep respect for those who have suffered and a continued awareness and poignant reminders of all that needs to be done.

I stand in the House today with deep sorrow as I remember Ottawa's latest victim of violence, Patricia Allen, who died on the street on the morning of Wednesday, November 13. Her death has focused again our communities' outrage and disbelief that such violence is in our midst.

This disbelief and outrage, however, will not solve the problem. We must continue to remind the government of the importance of stabilizing the system so that those who work within it can maximize their effectiveness. Salaries for shelter workers and pay equity for shelter workers must be a top priority. We must remind this government that supervised access must be provided in communities right across this province and cutbacks to legal aid must not be made.

I commit myself to support the priorities placed before us by the Ontario Association of Interval and Transition Houses this morning. I urge the government to share my commitment. The answer to their question, "When?" must be, "Now."

ROBERT McCLURE

Mr Jackson: We have all suffered a terrible loss with the passing last week of Dr Robert McClure, a man who was as famous for his opinions on international issues as he was for his singular achievements.

What was truly remarkable about this unlikely missionary was that while he never attained a theological degree, he preached all his life with his actions as a medical physician, taking risks daily in some of the most dangerous areas of the world as he reached out to personally touch the lives of countless thousands with his medical experience and his healing presence. I had the privilege of first meeting him in 1961 as a guest preacher in our church.

As the first lay moderator of the United Church of Canada, Robert McClure brought to his new job a fresh and unsettling perspective. His activism soon earned for him the respect of all, even of those who disagreed with him. As one Canadian church historian has said, "McClure became such an icon in the United Church that it was impossible to publicly criticize him. It would have been like criticizing Mother Teresa." Even during his lifetime, three churches were dedicated to him.

What I found very inspiring about Robert were his self-assured personal convictions and his unswerving dedication to causes he believed in, irrespective of what was maintained by the conventional wisdom of the moment. In his later years, Robert was a highly popular speaker who shared his insights and life experiences with audiences eager for his revitalizing enthusiasm for life.

Vigorous, entertaining, courageous and sometimes outrageous, this is the Robert McClure, the modern Canadian saint, we will always remember. On behalf of all members of the Ontario Legislature, I wish to convey our condolences to Robert's wife, Amy, and to his entire family. May the memory of the person and vision of Dr Robert McClure continue to inspire all of us.

BREAST-FEEDING

Mr Frankford: "Health Activists Win Battle to Ban Bottle Feeding" and "Companies Forbidden to Distribute Infant Milk Formula in World's Hospitals" are the headlines of an article in the Globe and Mail of November 9, 1991.

Breast-feeding of infants is one of the most important health measures. Breast-feeding protects against infectious diseases and is regarded as a keystone of child health. The advantages of breast-feeding regarding environmental impact and other health benefits are well documented. The consequent saving of costs to the health care system is welcome to governments as they struggle against budget pressures.

As the article in the Globe and Mail suggests, this is a worldwide issue, not something that is confined to less-developed countries. In industrialized countries like ours, children need the same protection.

It is now 10 years since Canada joined all other nations, with the exception of the United States, in voting for the World Health Organization's code of marketing of breast milk substitutes, and yet the federal government has still failed to implement it with legislation. I hope that all hospitals in Ontario and other provinces are voluntarily complying with the code and that the federal and provincial governments will take immediate action to make the withdrawal of infant formula sampling by hospitals permanent.

NIAGARA REGION

Mr Bradley: I rise to bring the members of the Legislature up to date on the lack of necessary action on the part of this government for the people of the Niagara region.

First of all, we have already heard from the member for Niagara Falls, who has once again brought to the attention of the members of the Legislature an item I have raised on many occasions, and that is the need for another CAT scanner in the Niagara region to service the health needs of the people who reside in that part of the province.

We know of the long waiting list of five to six months; we know that the scanner is an essential tool for the diagnosis of disease and for other purposes. One has to wonder why, in all these months, the government has not moved on it.

Second, there is a concern—speaking of moves—about the move of the Ministry of Transportation to the city of St Catharines. People in St Catharines are not quite worried that in fact this is not going to happen because of some of the statements they are hearing from members of the government side, particularly the Chairman of the Management Board of Cabinet.

Third, the Hotel Dieu Hospital in St Catharines is the regional dialysis unit for the entire Niagara region. It is overcrowded. The only thing that makes it possible for people to exist is the excellent staff in that unit at that particular hospital. They hope the government will give favourable consideration to its funding.

Farmers in the Niagara region besieged the member for Lincoln, who was deposed last week as Chair of a committee by the Premier, and expressed then their views about the concerns they have about the needs of farmers in the Niagara region being ignored by this government.

I think I was gypped on the amount of time I was supposed to have. It just seems I could not possibly have run out of time like that.

The Speaker: We all need more.

UNITED WAY CAMPAIGN

Mr Turnbull: Last Friday, I participated in a United Way presentation by Suncor/Sunoco. The ceremony rapped up a western theme campaign which produced 87% overall employee participation and 38 Leaders of the Way, a special category for donors who give $1,000 or more.

The total amount raised by the 717 participating employees was an astonishing $151,000. Because the company has a corporate policy of 75% matching donation, the total cheque given to the United Way was an impressive $261,000. These results place Suncor/Sunoco among the top 10 companies in Metro Toronto. Not only did most employees donate their money, but many gave their time and talents to encourage others to donate. Special mention must be made of executive vice-president Doug MacKinnon, the driving force behind the successful campaign.

The generosity of these men and women is an example to us all. They embody the very best of the Canadian spirit—caring for others, sharing what they have in tough economic times and expecting no personal reward. Their generosity means that next year some families, youth and the elderly will all have their lives made a little easier, be offered a helping hand when needed or receive some food, counselling or other comfort.

On behalf of all of the needy in our community, I want to say thank you to Suncor and all its employees who participated in the United Way drive. The results of their tremendous efforts are very impressive. I congratulate them on a job well done.

DRINKING AND DRIVING

Mr Mills: This morning in Oshawa I had the privilege of addressing the unit 7 Ontario Students Against Impaired Driving at their area conference. I must say it was very encouraging to be among so many young people, perhaps 100, who have made such a commitment among students to combat impaired driving and drinking and driving. It was encouraging to see their enthusiasm.

I remember years ago when we got invited anywhere, we were used to be on the bottom of the invitation BYOB, which meant "Bring your own Beer." The students tell me today that is still in effect, but believe it or not, it means "Bring your own banana." That may seem strange, but these young people have taken to drinking milk, bringing a banana and making milkshakes there.

Despite the lack of alcohol, they still enjoy themselves. They still have a good time. They still enjoy wonderful friendship with each other. At this time I would just like to draw the attention of the House to the commitment of our young people in their drive to reduce impaired driving. I think they should be commended for it.

Hon Mr North: Mr Speaker, I understand that I have unanimous consent from the House to make some remarks in honour of Ontario's Corps d'élite award winners.

The Speaker: Do we have unanimous agreement?
Agreed to.

CORPS D'ÉLITE AWARDS

Hon Mr North: We have five distinguished visitors in the House today. All of them are dedicated volunteers and professionals who have made outstanding contributions to recreation in Ontario. In recognition of their achievements, today they will receive the province's highest honour in recreation, a Corps d'élite Ontario Award.

Please join me in welcoming Bob Arnot of Kitchener; Mrs Joyce Cavill of Kitchener, who is here for her late husband Peter Cavill; Dean McCubbin of North Bay, and Jenny Sheps and Joan Woodland, both of Toronto.

All five of the recipients have shown through their commitment to recreation that quality recreation is much more than a hobby, a pastime or a luxury. It is essential to human development and wellbeing at every stage of life. Each one of the Corps d'élite recipients has significantly increased recreational opportunities for Ontarians.

In a few minutes I will escort the five recipients to the Lieutenant Governor's suite, where they will receive the awards in ceremonies presided over by His Honour Lincoln Alexander.

Mr Speaker, I would ask you and the honourable members to join with me now in showing our appreciation of all recreation volunteers and professionals by honouring Bob Arnot, Mrs Joyce Cavill, Dean McCubbin, Jenny Sheps and Joan Woodland.

Mr McClelland: I join my colleague opposite, the Minister of Tourism and Recreation, in extending on behalf of our party our congratulations to the recipients of the Corps d'élite award.

Certainly the recipients today are well honoured, inasmuch as they are chosen by their peers who are engaged professionally in recreation. It is certainly a great honour to be recognized in any event, but when you are selected by your peers I think it adds to that honour.

The contribution made by people involved in recreation, both professionally and on a volunteer basis, is in my view inestimable. Certainly the contribution made to communities large and small right across this province means the quality of life is enhanced and enriched a great deal by the efforts of the people who are represented by the award recipients today. I think in terms of the number of young lives engaged in positive pursuits, and not only young lives but those who have their lives steered in a very positive direction. Indeed, throughout the course of their entire lives, recreation is something that is available for people of all ages and that greatly enriches the quality of life in this province.

To the recipients we offer our congratulations and wish you well in your continued endeavours. I know you receive them in some sense on behalf of your many colleagues who have worked with you both professionally and in a volunteer capacity. We wish you well, and continued success. Our best wishes, and again our heartfelt congratulations for a job well done.

Mr Arnot: I am pleased to rise in the House this afternoon on behalf of the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party to pay tribute to the five Ontarians who will today receive the prestigious Corps d'élite Ontario Award for their outstanding involvement in recreation that has had a significant impact on recreation in Ontario.

The Corps d'élite program was first introduced by the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation in 1985. It is designed to acknowledge those Ontario residents from all sectors of the community whose voluntary efforts have had a major impact on the development of recreation in this province, and to recognize outstanding efforts by those volunteers or recreational professionals who contribute in a volunteer capacity to the development of recreation at either the provincial or regional level.

The recipients of today's awards are Bob Arnot of Kitchener, the late Peter Cavill of Barrie, Dean McCubbin of North Bay in the great riding of Nipissing, and Jennie Sheps and Joan Woodland, both of North York. Each of these individuals has demonstrated an outstanding commitment to recreation in our province and it is fitting that their unselfish contribution will be recognized in this significant way.

I am sure all members of the House will join me in extending congratulations and best wishes to these dedicated citizens of Ontario, and especially to Joyce Cavill who will be accepting the posthumous award to her late husband, Peter Cavill, who beginning in 1966 served as director of recreation for the 33 municipalities in Simcoe county.

Mr Conway: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to seek consent to pay tribute to one of our colleagues, the member for Carleton East.

The Speaker: Do we have unanimous agreement?
Agreed to.

MEMBER FOR CARLETON EAST

Mr Conway: Mr Speaker, very briefly, I would simply like to take this opportunity this afternoon to advise all members who may not be aware of the fact that earlier this morning, in your presence, the Lieutenant Governor conferred on our good friend and colleague the Deputy Speaker and member for Carleton East the Canadian Volunteer Service Medal for Korea.

I simply want to say, as one of Mr Morin's colleagues in the Liberal Party, that I was delighted to be able to join with him, yourself and other members of the Legislature on that occasion, as well as with his good wife, Paula, who is in your gallery this afternoon, and to say that those of us who have known the member for Carleton East over the years have known him to be a man who has a keen interest not just in politics, but as a result of his military past in matters of military activity as well.

I would say in conclusion that this is a very fitting tribute to one of our colleagues. For me, the ceremony this morning had all the hallmarks that Mr Morin has brought to his parliamentary duties, namely, and most especially, the hallmarks of civility and decency, where he shows a very high and good example to the rest of us.

Mr Sterling: Mr Speaker, I add my congratulations to Gilles Morin and his family on the significant achievement he has been able to receive this morning. I have known Gilles for the last five or six years. He represents the riding adjacent to mine in Carleton in eastern Ontario, and he has shown that he has an understanding of the people in that area, who have re-elected him on three occasions. His past service in the armed forces no doubt adds credibility to his long and distinguished career. Our party adds its congratulations to him.

Mr Mills: It gives me a great deal of pleasure, and it is indeed an honour, to stand here this afternoon on behalf of the government and add our congratulations to the member for Carleton East.

I must say that when I came here a little over a year ago, I was not aware of many members here who had served in the military. I quickly made the acquaintance of the member for Carleton East in a very wonderful sort of way. He came up to me and offered all kinds of little tidbits of advice that have stood me in great stead in the short time I have been here, and I thank him for that.

It is regrettable that although I was to be at that ceremony this morning, I had to be in Oshawa for a meeting and could not be there. I apologize that I was not there, but while I was giving my speech in Oshawa, I was at the same time thinking of that ceremony here this morning. I know how important that is to the member and his family.

Gilles served in the Royal 22nd Regiment. Somewhat uniquely as an anglophone, I spent six months with that regiment. I would just like to say that if we could get that spirit in Canada today, it would go a long way to solving the differences between anglophones and francophones, because really where people come together is in the military.

Certainly I recognize the member's service as a machine-gun officer in the Korean War. That was no easy time. He survived that war and is here and is recognized today with a medal at last; it has long been coming and is long overdue, and I offer him our congratulations.

Mr Cousens: Mr Speaker, can I seek unanimous consent from this House to have a moment when we talk about racism and the problems that occurred over this weekend?

The Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent?
Agreed to.

RACE RELATIONS

Mr Cousens: I would like to make a statement on behalf of the Ontario PC caucus with regard to the desecration of the Har Tikvah synagogue in Brampton over this past weekend.

First of all, having been talking with the member for Willowdale, I would like to join with him in the comment he has been able to pass on concerning the commendation we have for the minister for visiting the synagogue and for the sentiments she expressed yesterday with regard to racism and Naziism: that they are not welcomed in our city or in our province or our country. I give her tribute for the concern she showed.

In our country, racism should not be tolerated under any circumstances. I would like to commend our police services right across this province to pull out the stops and find the people who were involved in this incident. May they then be given full rights under the law so that they are quickly brought to justice and dealt with without delay. As to the problems that are created for all Jewish communities across our country and our province, it just sends a terrible udder through all of them when something like this happens. Let's hope we can deal with this incident and deal with it well, efficiently and successfully.

We need only to draw upon examples such as this incident in Brampton, Keegstra in Alberta, David Duke's recent race for governor in Louisiana and the re-emergence of neo-Naziism in Germany to be reminded that racism can affect us all. Within Metropolitan Toronto, multiculturalism is also under attack. We see an increase in acts of violence against minorities stemming from fear and intolerance towards other races. As a society, we cannot move forward until we eradicate racism in all its forms.

Historically racism has resulted from fear, socioeconomic disparities, religious doctrines and philosophical beliefs. By now we should have learned our lessons. Unfortunately some have not learned. Those continuing to advocate racist thinking and actions only stunt our growth and understanding of other cultures.

I believe that overcoming racism begins by confronting this issue, first, on a personal level and, second, by influencing those around us. This message must be expanded to our educational system and all levels of people with whom we have dealings.

As members of this House, may we personally continue to give the best example we can in our homes and our communities and bring leadership to this province, so that when we say Canada and Ontario are places where people are welcome, we are not just lippping the words but mean them from the bottom of our hearts. May we set an example for the rest of the world. We have the chance. May the blight that happened this weekend be one of the last we ever see in this province.

Hon Ms Ziemba: I rise on behalf of the government to express our outrage over the desecration of the Har Tikvah synagogue in Brampton. I went there yesterday to witness at first hand the desecration of the synagogue. I met with members of the community and members of the Toronto Jewish community as well. I was horrified by the hatred that came through those messages on the wall of this very historic building. I am also saddened by the pain that was visibly felt by the Jewish community.

I spoke to some of the members of the congregation who expressed that they had come from many parts of the world, from Chile, from Europe, from Israel and from the United States, and the reason they came to Ontario was they felt they were coming to a place that was harmonious and safe to live in, where they could express their religion and culture.

It is particularly disturbing that this attack came in the midst of the memorial services on Remembrance Day for all the brave men and women who said no to fascism and died fighting for a just and equal society. This racist and anti-Semitic attack is an act of disrespect for our loved ones who died so we could have a better tomorrow.

Unfortunately the attack also coincided with the Holocaust remembrance events which began in early November with the event called Kristallnacht, the night of broken glass. This act of desecration is a chilling reminder that racism exists so close to home.

This government will not tolerate such despicable acts of racism. We share the pain and anguish felt by the Jewish community and all of us who believe in social justice. An injury to one is an injury to all. To eradicate racism is a top priority of this government. I thank the member from the opposition who shares this concern with us. The establishment of an anti-racism secretariat with new direction and funding resources is part of that commitment.

I will continue to monitor the situation and work very closely with the Jewish community and other communities which share our feeling that we must combat racism. All members of the House must work together to eradicate racism and anti-Semitism. All of us must work towards that ideal society we want to share and have for our children.

Mr Offer: The actions taken last Saturday night against the Har Tikvah synagogue in Brampton are shocking. Anti-Semitic slogans and the swastika on the walls of the synagogue bring back a terror and a horror beyond words. These are actions which rip at the very fabric of the Jewish community. They bring back haunting memories of six million Jewish men, women and children whose lives were brutally taken from them.

I believe the condemnation of the actions of last Saturday is not just voiced by the Jewish community but indeed by society at large. When we see and read the media reports, we all ask why. What is it that moves a few to act this way? What is it that prompts one to act so frighteningly and with such hatred? We know these are the actions of a few. We know society abhors such actions and recoils in horror. Nevertheless it goes on.

The actions last Saturday at Har Tikvah synagogue were specific in nature, but we know they connote a much broader problem. This is an issue of racism in its most hideous form. As a society we must collectively work to combat racism. It is not unique to one group or another. It is a disease which, when afflicted on one, affects all. Examples abound and the hurt continues, but the resolve to combat racism grows. Men, women and children living together, understanding and respecting each other must continue to flourish. Above all, there must be a willingness to speak out and raise one's voice when a wrong has been committed. Last Saturday's actions were monstrous in their scope and intent. They force us to look at ourselves, where we are and where we want to go.

Together we will remain strong and continue the struggle against racism. Together we stand with the congregation at Har Tikvah, Rabbi Lander and all of those who have been specifically impacted. Their horror and sadness are shared by all of us. Their horror and sadness are our horror and sadness.

ORAL QUESTIONS ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr Sorbara: My question is to the Treasurer. His announcement last week struck another very serious blow to the economic confidence we so desperately need in Ontario. The Treasurer announced that the budget he presented last spring was in error yet again with a shortfall in revenue of more than $2 billion. I want to put this in some sort of context.

Members will recall that the budget had about a $10-billion deficit. On October 2 the Treasurer announced in this House that the budget was wrong and that we had to find $460 million in order to make it right again. At that time he said there were "enormous pressures on the expenditures, but our revenues were almost spot on." "Spot on" has become famous.

On October 3 the Treasurer said the numbers indicated that "our revenues are as we forecast in the spring budget." Now we find, with a finger pointed to the federal government, there is a shortfall of $2.1 billion. In consideration of this outrage to the taxpayers of this province, what does the Treasurer have to say to them? How does he explain the fact that his budget has suffered yet another fatal blow? And could he tell us where this money is going to be made up?

Hon Mr Laughren: It is a good question, as someone on the other side commented, except that it is not terribly accurate in all the implications that are built into it.

When I made my statements in the Legislature earlier, I forewarned that income taxes in Ontario collected by the federal government had historically been very volatile and that we did not know what those numbers would be. I said that our own source revenues that we forecast and collect ourselves appeared to be virtually spot on. The member opposite should be clear about that. What were inaccurate in the forecasting were the federal government numbers on what our provincial income taxes in this year are likely to be and would likely be for 1990, not the numbers that we forecast ourselves in the budget. Our numbers are derived from the federal forecasts.

Mr Sorbara: For the Treasurer to make light of what he said and simply suggest it was a $2-billion error and after all "these things are rather volatile," in the serious economic times we are confronting right now is an insult to this House and to the people of this province.

There are really only three ways in which the Treasurer can deal with a budget that has now crumbled. He can do what he did on October 2 and say he is going to transfer some $500 million to next year—that is really doing a lot, I say to the Treasurer—he can reduce expenditures or he can increase taxes.

We have seen the strategy to reduce expenditures. The Attorney General has put off the child and family support program. The Minister of Health has transformed herself into a latter-day Frank Miller. We have to close hospitals all over the province. We are about to have cutbacks in education. We are about to have cutbacks in social service support in this province.

Could the Treasurer come clean with the people of the province and tell us what he is going to do to recover the $460 million he needs in order to stay within the $10-billion deficit he created last spring?

Hon Mr Laughren: It is my intention to announce in the House—tomorrow, I hope, but certainly this week—the ways in which we intend to cope with this latest news on what our income tax revenues will be for 1990 and 1991. It is a two-year problem, not a one-year problem, might add. It is my intention to announce in the House tomorrow exactly what actions will be taken.

Mr Sorbara: The Treasurer said it is a two-year problem. It is not a two-year problem; it is a four-year problem. It is a fact that this province is now in the grip of an NDP government that does not have a clue how to stimulate this economy.

The Treasurer said he is going to tell us where he is going to make the next cuts in programs tomorrow. We anticipate it is going to be in Health. We anticipate it is going to be in Education. We anticipate it is going to be in Colleges and Universities. As with every other cut this government has put into place, we anticipate it is going to hurt the poor and the most vulnerable most of all. It is certainly not going to help the civil servants.

We learn as well that the Treasurer, notwithstanding the economic problems, spent about $250 million on consultants. In view of the fact that the people of this province, if they agree on one thing and one thing alone, agree that there cannot be an addition to the tax burden, will the Treasurer simply assure this House now and the people of Ontario that when he reports this week on how he is going to make up this $2 billion, he will not inflict another tax on the people of this province?

Hon Mr Laughren: It is amazing. The member opposite is insisting of course that we not impose any new taxes. He has insisted in the past that we not allow the deficit to go beyond what it is now. I am not sure whether the member opposite is going to leave for me.

I would like to put in perspective the forecast number that the member opposite refers to. When his government was in office in 1988-89, the federal government's variance with its forecast was $1.490 billion. His government's variance was over $1 billion out in 1988-89. When his government was in office in 1989-90, it was $882 million out on what it thought the income tax revenues would be for Ontario. For the member opposite to try to kid the people of this province that our budget is in disarray because of federal government forecasting on income tax revenues is simply unfair and untrue.

Mr Sorbara: The Treasurer's budget is in disarray because this economy is falling apart, and while it is falling apart, he is sitting there pointing the finger at the federal government and the previous government. I want to remind him of one fact. We were out in our forecast some what, but we were out on the positive side. We got $1 billion more out of the economy than we had forecasted because we had unprecedented economic growth.

The Speaker: Is this your second question? Would you please indicate to whom you are addressing your question?

Mr Sorbara: I want to put it to the Treasurer as simply as I can. The only way to solve his budgetary problem and the only way to solve the economic problems is for the government to bring forward programs that stimulate economic growth in this province. We now have 10% of our people who are languishing, looking for opportunities to work. We are casting our eyes aside from 10% of our people who are anxious to participate. In every other province in Canada there is a growth in the employment statistics. It is only in Ontario where the employment figures simply get worse and worse.

Can I ask the Treasurer what plans he has? What is he going to bring forward? What is he going to do to re-establish confidence in the Ontario economy so that investors will invest and create jobs and he can recover the $2 billion in income tax losses because of people not working? What is why he lost the money; what is he going to do to correct it? How is he going to get this economy rolling again?

Hon Mr Laughren: The member opposite makes it appear as though it is just a simple case of the government moving in and doing everything to resolve the problem. He knows, or at least he should know, that the economy of the United States is having a very difficult time as well, and when it has a difficult time, we have a difficult time. I do not think it is unfair finger-pointing to say there is no question that the free trade agreement, the value of the Canadian dollar and high interest rates have had a major impact on the manufacturing and construction sectors in this province.

I remind the member as well that in the last 18 months or so, of all the layoffs in this country, about 80% have occurred in Ontario, and we have about 38% of the workforce. If anyone thinks government can simply move in and put in place programs that will employ those 260,000 people, I wish he would come forward and show me how he can do that, at the same time keeping in mind the admonition from the member opposite that we must not increase taxes and we must not increase the deficit in the province.

Mr Scott: This is a Mike Harris government but Harris doesn't get the salary. This is unfair.

The Speaker: While I am not encouraging interjections, one normally makes them from one's rightful place in the House. It would also be very helpful if the member for St George-St David could assist us in establishing a better atmosphere.

Mr Sorbara: There you have it. The Treasurer, who is also the Minister of Economics in this province, I remind him in case he did not realize it, and the person chiefly responsible for setting economic policy—the Premier should participate, but he is never here any more. God knows where he is. He certainly does not come to this House to answer questions.

I say to the Treasurer, who is also the Minister of Economics, that he simply cannot say: "Our hands are tied. There's nothing we can do. After all, we had 80% of the job losses during this recession and we didn't anticipate that and, my God, we didn't even anticipate getting elected, so why turn to us?" He cannot say that. He is responsible for taking measures, even powerful, direct interventionist measures, to create employment.

The Speaker: And your supplementary?

Mr Sorbara: The Treasurer fully knows his revenues are going to go down and down and down so long as he takes the view that there is nothing we can do. I ask the Treasurer what he says to the people of Windsor—some of us were in Windsor this weekend—where there is 14% unemployment, where auto workers, where truckers, where retail shopkeepers, where workers from just about every segment of the economy are looking for an opportunity to get back into the economy and start paying income tax again.

The Speaker: Would the member conclude his supplementary, please.

Mr Sorbara: What does the Treasurer say to the people of Windsor, other than, "Our hands are tied; there is very little we can do; we suffered all these layoffs"? What does he say to them?

Hon Mr Laughren: I will respond to the member, but I would ask people who follow these debates in the Legislature or watch them on television or read them in Hansard to keep in mind what the member opposite is telling us in this place. Number one, he is telling us, "Don't you dare raise taxes one little bit." Then he says, "You must intervene directly in the creation of jobs in this province." He is saying, "On the other hand, you can't raise the deficit at all either, and you cannot increase taxes, but somehow you've got to rebuild the Ontario economy." There is no free lunch, my friend.

Let me tell the member opposite about Windsor and southwestern Ontario. I do not know whether he has bothered to read a recent report by Peat Marwick Thorne based on southwestern Ontario or not. This is part of the summary of its report:

"Southwestern Ontario is a major location for foreign investment. Traditionally, southwestern Ontario is recognized as a diverse centre, with emphasis on manufacturing. Our survey indicates foreign investors also see the area's business environment as most suitable for manufacturing. Southwestern Ontario's strategic location, labour force and quality of life make it appealing to foreign executives looking for a place to locate a new company."

Rather than stand in his place day after day and pretend that the sky is falling, the member opposite should understand that Ontario remains the best place anywhere in which to live, invest and work.

Mr Sorbara: I guess the message to the people in Windsor is that they ought to write Peat Marwick Thorne and perhaps Peat Marwick Thorne has a job for them. I do not know how the Treasurer, when I ask him simply to send some sort of message of hope that maybe things will get on, maybe things will change, can read to me and this House and to the people of Windsor who are looking for work, something from Peat Marwick Thorne about foreign investment and about how wonderful it is there.

What does he say to the people of Thunder Bay, who are saying to us and saying to him, if he would listen, that the forest products industry is fragile, that Abitibi-Price is thinking of closing down a paper plant because it has a difficult time being competitive? What does he say to those industries? What is he prepared to do? What is he bringing forward to make this Ontario economy more competitive? What is he prepared to do for the 10% of the people of Thunder Bay who are also looking for work?

Finally, would he simply answer the question I asked three questions ago: Is there going to be a tax increase or is there not going to be a tax increase as a result of this latest budget fiasco?

Hon Mr Laughren: I wish the member opposite would not point his finger at Ottawa so often in this place. He accuses me of finger-pointing when he stands up and says there is a budget fiasco, clearly knowing that it is because of provincial income tax revenues forecast by the federal government and collected by the federal government. My friend should make his message consistent, because that is not what he has been doing.

I do not know of any government that would have done what we have already done in a year under very difficult circumstances. What government would have done what we did in Sault Ste Marie? What government would have done what we did in Elliot Lake or in Kapuskasing, or worked as hard to resolve the problems at UTDC or de Havilland? There is not a government anywhere in this country that has done as much as we have to try and ease the problems because of a very difficult recession in this province.

Mr Harris: I too have a question for the Treasurer. Let me at least congratulate him for one thing: for not adopting the Liberal strategy of spending even more money as a way to get us out of this situation. It is indeed years of that, including the Treasurer's first budget, that has got us into this mess.

We now know that despite the Treasurer's rhetoric with his budget over the past few months, he is facing a $1-billion shortfall. This means, I believe, he has three options: He can increase the deficit, he can hike taxes or he can cut government spending.

He told reporters, I believe, going into last weekend, that making up this billion dollars will require a great deal of blood and sweat and tears. He has been through this weekend; he tells us that tomorrow he is going to tell us about the blood, sweat and tears produced in the way of spending cuts. I wonder if he could tell us today how much more bleeding, sweating and crying the taxpayers of this province are going to be burdened with as a result of his discussions and his look this past weekend.

Hon Mr Laughren: Rather than deal with the statement for tomorrow in a piecemeal way today, I would prefer to wait until all the pieces are in place. I will make a full statement tomorrow in this House, which is where it should be made.

Mr Harris: I think the Treasurer would understand perhaps why we have great difficulty with his government's ability to control spending or in fact to cut spending. We heard his previous announcement, which essentially cut nothing other than transfer payments to somebody else.

Let me get a little more specific. He shelled out $240 million in consulting fees this year alone, yet he intends to cut only 5% from this next year. That means taxpayers will only have to pay out $228 million for consultants, according to the Treasurer's figures in his announcement. With 92,000 civil servants who were given an extra $512 million this year, or a 14% hike in pay alone, how can he justify, with all of that in this past year, $228 million, let alone one cent for consultants over the next year?

Hon Mr Laughren: When I saw the numbers on the consulting fees earlier, I was concerned too. Certainly one of the areas of ministry expenditures we will be looking at very closely—and that is already under way—is the whole question of consulting fees, because I do not disagree with the member opposite that too much is being spent on them. However, having said that, I think it would not be wise to rule out any expenditures on consultants whatsoever, because very often it is the most efficient way to get some expertise brought to focus on a problem.

On the second point of the member's question, dealing with the public sector compensation, I think he would do himself a favour if he would stop using the term 14%. We negotiated an increase of about 5.8% for the public sector last year, and then we told each of the ministries that only 5% would be funded out of the contingency fund and the other 0.8% would have to be found internally. In other words, it would be savings realized from within the ministries.

Mr Harris: It was $512 million, payroll to payroll 6% negotiations, merit pay—that is where you get 3% if you show up. Then you have new civil servants, then you have that. The total cost went up 14%; with benefits, 16%. That is the figure, and on top of that you get all the consultants. Let's not confuse the facts.

I am concerned about the Treasurer's ability to cut anywhere he is going to cut, because he has not had a very good record on it. I suggest that putting this government in charge of cutting its own spending is kind of like putting the arsonist in charge of putting out the fire. We have not seen from them any ability to cut in the right areas.

I would like to ask the Treasurer about another experiment. We saw the $240 million on consultants. I would like to ask him about this one. Here is a little plastic tape measure. This was given out as a gift by the government, I understand, to all the Ministry of Transportation employees in North Bay. I do not think the Treasurer would single them out as a special favour; I assume it was given out to them all. It has an Ontario logo on it. The box, though, says that it was made in Shanghai, China. I suggest to the Treasurer—this is what the employees tell me—that this is 100 centimetres of waste from the government.

If the Treasurer is serious about cutting his spending will he investigate how many of these little gadgets were given out to civil servants in the province, how much they cost the government of Ontario and why we had to cross the border shop all the way to Shanghai, China, to buy them to give out as little gifts? When are we going to stop this kind of nonsense in government spending?

Hon Mr Laughren: I will do as the member has requested and see how many of those were distributed and whether they were distributed across the province or just in the riding of Nipissing. I am not sure of that. I am not drawing any conclusions on that. I can tell the member that I do not doubt there are areas such as this where money could be saved. When I was thinking over the weekend about this whole problem of where we can save money, having followed so closely the final negotiations on the sale of the SkyDome, I became increasingly agitated. My finger became white heat when I thought of the Tories having negotiated that deal in the first place. They helped put us in this position and now they are criticizing us for being there. Those are the facts.

Mr Harris: My party takes no credit for Chuck Magwood and the overruns on the Dome and for the mess I admit this government inherited.

Mr Sterling: Or Don Smith.

Mr Harris: We take no credit for Don Smith, Chuck Magwood and the construction of the Dome. Let's be very clear on that.

My second question is also to the Treasurer. When the Treasurer brought out his budget, the nine other provinces brought in restraint programs. The Treasurer said: "No, we know better than all the other treasurers. We're going on a spending spree."

Today we find out that the nine other provinces are having a reduction in their unemployment levels. The nine other provinces that bit the bullet a year ago and started to restrain government expenditures—in fact, many of them reduced their deficits—are seeing a return on that investment. But what are we seeing as a result of the Treasurer's budget here in Ontario? We are seeing rising unemployment, loss of investor confidence and more people hungry and out of work.

There is obviously, it appears to me and most observers in this province, a hole in the bottom of the Treasurer's bucket. He tried to patch it last month with a reallocation. That has not worked, so now he is going to try again, tomorrow, to patch it. Instead of continuing with his patchwork approach, will the Treasurer not agree that his budget last spring was inappropriate, was out of step, was heading in the wrong direction and was part of the problem creating the disaster, and will he sit down and bring in a whole new budget for this province?

Hon Mr Laughren: I remain convinced today as much as I was in the spring that at a time when Ontario was slipping into a very serious recession what was needed was exactly what we did. We put into place an anti-recession package that created 14,000 jobs, and when we add the local component, it is probably up to 20,000 jobs. I know the member opposite would have liked to have seen us add another 20,000 or some such number to the unemployment rolls by laying off civil servants. I do not know; he has never given us a number. I think for us to have simply made the recession worse with a severe restraint budget last spring would have been exactly the opposite of what this province needed at that time.

Mr Harris: It was the exact opposite of the nine other treasurers in the nine other provinces. They are all doing better than we are, but the Treasurer is convinced he is right. He is the only one in the province who is convinced of that. The Treasurer talks about creating 14,000 jobs with a $10-billion deficit. We have lost 260,000 private sector jobs in this province and we have 1.3 million people now on social assistance. What is he doing and what is he talking about? His big feature seems to be new labour legislation. This is what he is bringing labour and business together to discuss. Will the Treasurer tell us how many new jobs he thinks will be created by the new labour legislation he is working on with his government?

Hon Mr Laughren: In his preamble the member opposite talked about other provinces versus this province. I ask the member opposite if he talked to Grant Devine when he was talking about his deficit for this year, or whether he talked to his good friend Bill Vander Zalm in British Columbia about the size of his deficit. For the member opposite to imply that this is the only province in Canada that has had fiscal problems is not true. Every province in this country has had fiscal problems.

What we have done consistently from day one is that we have not cooked the books. We have brought out the information as clearly and as openly as we can to share the problem with all the people in this province. That is not what the member's friends in other jurisdictions have done.

Mr Harris: If ever there is any government close to Bill Vander Zalm and Fantasyland, it is the Treasurer and this government. The question was, how many jobs is the Treasurer going to create with his new labour legislation? Studies suggest he is putting an additional 500,000 jobs at risk by proceeding with the labour plans the way he is. I think it is time he admitted the truth. It is not labour legislation; it is job destruction legislation and payback time to Bob White and the big unions.

Will the Treasurer, who should be concerned about jobs in this province and getting tax revenues back up again, fight in cabinet for the Minister of Labour to shelve his labour discussion paper before one more job is lost, and as my document New Directions suggests, bring labour, government and business together for meaningful discussions on competitiveness and why we cannot compete, and together work towards how we can work for more jobs, not arguing about whether they are union jobs or not?

Hon Mr Laughren: I have a very fundamental disagreement with the leader of the third party and his party. We do not believe the answer to the future prosperity of this province lies in driving down both the quality and the price of labour in Ontario. We have never believed that. The leader of the third party seems to think that if we cater to the lowest common denominator out there, our future will be secure. Nothing could be further from the truth. We are determined to engage in a process of economic renewal that will put emphasis on high value added, high-quality employment. That is exactly the direction we said we would go in when we brought down the budget and we are not deviating from that course of action, because I believe therein lies the future prosperity of this province.

ST MICHAEL'S HOSPITAL

Mrs Sullivan: My question is to the Treasurer, partly in his role as Treasurer and partly in his role as Deputy Premier. On November 7, as he knows, the report of the investigators on the quality of management and administration at St Michael's Hospital was released. That report put forward a number of recommendations to prevent a recurrence of the $63-million debt which developed at that hospital.

The recommendations clearly said that if St Michael's was to continue, substantially all of its debt must be eliminated and that to continue its debt would result in insolvency. The report also said that the ministry, the Sisters of St Joseph, the board and management must participate in eliminating that debt and recommended that the province participate, through an apportioned debt, and that the Ministry of Health accept responsibility for some $24 million.

The Minister of Health and the Premier have said the government will not accept responsibility for the $24 million over the five-year period recommended. That decision could indeed lead to the insolvency of the hospital. We are facing not only a financial crisis but a crisis of availability of and access to services.

The Speaker: Could the honourable member place her question.

Mrs Sullivan: What protection will the Treasurer put in place to ensure that the services provided by St Michael's and its 129 outreach clinics are available—if not at St Michael's, then elsewhere—for those who need them, and what arrangements is he prepared to make to fund those services?

Hon Mr Laughren: The problem at St Michael's is a serious one and the $63-million deficit is serious indeed. The Ministry of Health is prepared and has already started, I believe, to work with St Michael's in an attempt to manage that $63-million deficit. I think the member for Halton Centre would agree—certainly if not with me, then with her colleague the member for York Centre—that we simply cannot go across the province bailing out every hospital that has a deficit. To be fair, the St Michael's deficit is substantially more than any other hospital's and is a very serious problem indeed. We are concerned about it and the Ministry of Health is working with the hospital to try to resolve it.

Mrs Sullivan: The question of the deficit is clearly an issue. The question of the services at the hospital and their availability to people in this community is very much an issue.

The other question raised in the report is that of governance and the appropriate role of the board of directors in bearing responsibility for the management of what is a publicly funded private hospital. That issue received extensive attention in the investigators' report. As a result of this crisis, the Sisters of St Joseph may seek to divest their ownership of St Michael's Hospital in a controlled and orderly way.

The option of moving from private ownership to a public hospital status has been exercised on other occasions. We know that option of moving was done at St Joseph's in London and St Francis in Smiths Falls with the help of the Ontario government, help not only from an encouragement point of view but with capital infusions as well. If the government is considering this option, this alternative for St Michael's Hospital, since it clearly is not going to go the "bailout route" even for the $24 million that was asked for and recommended in the report, what initiatives is the government going to take, including what capital commitments over the longer term, in the option of turning a private hospital over to the public sector?

Hon Mr Laughren: I think it is a serious question and a good question but I do not want to pre-empt any of the negotiations or the work that is going on between the Ministry of Health and St Michael's other than to say—I believe the member opposite would support this; I know the former Liberal Minister of Health used to say it when the Liberals were in government—that the hospital boards must be held accountable for their spending and that the government simply cannot bail them out when they have a deficit.

The last I saw, the cumulative deficits were in the neighbourhood of $200 million. This government simply is not prepared to engage in a bailout process for all the hospitals that have deficits. We are simply not going to do it.

SKYDOME

Mr Stockwell: My question is to the Treasurer. This past week he announced the deal for SkyDome in Metropolitan Toronto and exactly how much the taxpayers are going to be fleeced for and the amount of money they will have to put up over the next 22 years in this debenture he announced. I understand the government received some $110 million in cash from the partners who came forward.

I have been involved in this issue for some eight or nine years in Metropolitan Toronto. In my opinion, this is absolutely the worst deal the public has ever seen. I opposed it in the beginning, I opposed it in the middle and I oppose it at the end.

Can the Treasurer buy a little freedom with $110 million? Is he going to apply it to the deficit that the Dome has incurred to date, some $380 million, or is he going to take that $110 million and put it in the general revenue account to try to maintain his $9.7-billion debt?

Hon Mr Laughren: I am not sure I understand the difference in what the member for Etobicoke West is putting to me. I do not disagree with one of his sentiments that the whole arrangement with SkyDome and the province was outrageous from day one. The member is quoted as saying this is robbery without a gun. If there is no gun, I suggest it is because somebody destroyed the evidence when the original deal was signed by the Tories some years ago.

I know the member for Etobicoke West agrees with me that it was the wrong deal to sign in the first place. I believe the member also believes that when the official opposition was in government, it approved the additions to SkyDome that drove up the cost from the original estimate of $184 million to well over $500 million.

So in some aspects I agree with the member for Etobicoke West: It was a bad deal when it was signed, the Liberals made it worse and we are simply trying to stop the haemorrhaging on behalf of the taxpayers of this province.

Mr Stockwell: First, the question was, what is the Treasurer going to do with the $110 million? If he cannot tell the difference between retiring the SkyDome debt and he $9.7 billion he has already incurred, then it is very clear he should not be Treasurer.

Second, since I have got to this place, I have written to the Treasurer, his staff and the Premier asking for the documentation so it may be reviewed. If they are not forthcoming, why is he hiding the deals and why will he not let the public see what they are paying for? This is the question that needs to be asked.

Why, when the minister was in opposition, was he calling for a full public inquiry into the cost of SkyDome? When he has been asked that question now that he is in government, he says it is not necessary.

The taxpayers have been fleeced. The costs having been covered up for so many years in the past by the Liberals, why is it that the Treasurer will not have a full public inquiry to ensure at least one thing, that this kind of debacle never happens again to the taxpayers of Ontario? Why not an inquiry?

Hon Mr Laughren: First of all, the calls for an inquiry came at a time when there were negotiations going on between the consortium and the province in attempting to find a way to sell the Dome. That would have been an appropriate time to have the inquiry.

I have not seen any indication, nor have I heard anybody accuse anyone of criminal wrongdoing in the arrangements. Once the deal has been completed, I do not think there is any reason why people would not want to show the books to people, assuming confidentiality is maintained for corporate competitive purposes.

The sale proceeds, the $110 million cash and the roughly $40 million to $50 million net present value of the future debentures, which will total $150 million or $160 million, will be applied to reduction of the deficit, not to SkyDome itself. There has been some what I thought was very shabby reporting in one of the tabloids which indicated there was still debt and we would be making interest payments on SkyDome. That is simply not the case. Once this deal has been completed, we will not be continuing to make payments or pay interest on the debt.

LANDFILL SITES

Mr Wiseman: My question is to the Minister of the Environment.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. The member for Durham West will place his question.

Mr Wiseman: Every time I stand up the chorus enters into the fray.

The minister has said on numerous occasions in the House that we are in a waste crisis in the GTA and that in developing a total waste management strategy it would be irresponsible not to plan for a gap between when long-term sites are available and the closure of Britannia and Keele Valley.

In August she issued minister's orders requiring that municipalities conduct technical studies for lifts on Keele and Britannia and the construction of one or more transfer stations in Durham. Residents in my community have a right to be consulted. We were elected because we promised to be open and honest. Could the minister tell us what kind of consultations have been done on these lifts and on transfer stations? When is she going to meet with the residents affected?

Hon Mrs Grier: I appreciate the interest of the member for Durham West. I know that his interest in trying to resolve the waste management crisis within the greater Toronto area preceded by some years his election to this place, and his interest has continued.

I am happy to be able to tell the House that officials of my ministry and I are in continuous dialogue with the municipalities and the officials in Durham, Peel and north Metro and that, for example, when the region of Durham asked that, instead of having to implement my order to construct a transfer station, it be given some more time to consider alternatives, we of course agreed to allow the region to do that. This makes the point that minister's orders can be amended as circumstances change. It appears that perhaps some of the estimates and some of the time frames are changing, which is precisely what we are addressing on a regular basis.

My orders to all of the municipalities require that they initiate a public involvement program. I understand that Metro is beginning to do that with the municipality of Vaughan and the region of York, and people in those areas will be involved, will be consulted and will have an opportunity to give us their opinions about how we can prevent a very real crisis of garbage piling up in the streets of the greater Toronto area. That we cannot allow to happen.

NORTHERN HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Brown: I have a question for the Deputy Premier. I am concerned, as northerners are, with northern health care issues. We are concerned with what is going on with the oncology program at Laurentian. We are concerned about the loss of health care workers at Manitoulin Health Centre and Manitoulin Lodge, for example. We are concerned about many health care issues.

I know the Deputy Premier was in the Sudbury area last Friday meeting with a number of physicians and health care workers in the Sudbury area. They are concerned that one of their number, a specialist, Dr J. P. Donohue, announced that he is moving south. The Sudbury Medical Society tells us that this brain drain is to continue. We in the north are very concerned that we have appropriate specialists and enough specialists in the north. What is the Treasurer going to do not only to keep Dr Donohue in the Sudbury area, but to attract specialists to the area?

Hon Mr Laughren: The second part of the member's question is the most important part, because quite frankly it is not just one doctor. If one doctor decides that he or she is determined to leave northern Ontario, there is not much the government can do about that.

But I take very seriously the question of the provision of medical services in northern Ontario, in particular some specialties. The problem came about when we brought in the $400,000 threshold. It says that once a doctor bills more than $400,000, he or she can only get reimbursed to the tune of two thirds between there and $450,000 and one third beyond $450,000. It seemed to us that those were substantial billings and that they were not inappropriate. I still believe that.

To be very specific about the first part of the member for Algoma-Manitoulin's question, what has happened is that there is already a process being set up in which we are trying to arrange meetings soon with the Ontario Medical Association and the Sudbury Medical Society. I remind the member as well that since the threshold seems to be the problem, it is that same threshold that the Ontario Medical Association agreed to and signed with this province back in June of this year, so we have to involve not just the northern medical community but also the OMA.

Mr Brown: I appreciate the response. My problem is that I think the agreement that the OMA came to with the government of Ontario discriminates against northern doctors for a number of reasons that I think the Treasurer knows and that I am not going to get into right here and now.

The real issue is that the NDP, in its document that it brought before this House in 1990, called for a medical school in northern Ontario. They wanted a school to train and attract doctors. They specifically asked the Treasurer what he was going to do to attract physicians.

We want to know what happened to the medical school. We want to know what happened to the school of pharmacy. We want to know what happened to the other health professions that we are trying to attract to northern Ontario. These questions are not being addressed, and we are finding that the agreement that was struck between the province and the OMA has caused physicians to think about leaving northern Ontario.

We think that is the wrong direction. We think it is schizophrenic. I ask the Treasurer: What happened to the medical school? What happened to the school of pharmacy? What happened to attracting doctors to northern Ontario?

Hon Mr Laughren: I believe the member for Algoma-Manitoulin understands the pressures under which we find ourselves in funding these kinds of major new programs. I know he appreciates as well the massive infusion of money that went into Elliot Lake, despite our very major fiscal problems in the province.

I say to the member opposite that if the threshold of $450,000 is causing a problem because of unique expenses by northern doctors, then that should be looked at as part of the agreement with the OMA. However, if we are going to contain the costs of medicare in this province in order to save medicare, we simply have to be very tough-minded when it comes to examining all the actions we take which will go some way to containing the costs of medicare. I can tell members that every single action we take to contain the cost of health care in this province will be met with resistance somewhere in the province. I think that is simply a given.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Mr Jackson: My question is for the Minister of Community and Social Services. At 5:30 this morning in the city of Burlington Mrs Kiveli Chadjiioannou was murdered. She died of multiple stab wounds at the hands of her husband. She was 65 years of age.

The community of Burlington, like many communities in this province, is aware that over 11,000 women who are trying to escape domestic violence will be turned away from shelters in this province and will continue to be at risk because there is no room in these shelters for them.

The minister will be aware that every time a woman and her family are turned away they are at continuing risk. Some, like Kiveli Chadjiioannou this morning, will not make it as they try to flee those abusive situations. The minister would be aware, as the former director of the London Battered Women's Advocacy Clinic, how much at risk these women are and how much they are counting on her, as representative of her government, to speak up on their behalf.

Why is it that with that background and with that knowledge and that risk, the minister is not able to convince her government to expand the number of beds and shelters for abused women in this province?

Hon Mrs Boyd: I certainly am aware of the problem, as is our government, and deeply concerned. We increased the funding for programs against violence against women by 33% last year and made that funding permanent, not just a year-to-year initiative funding, which was the practice of the previous two governments.

We are very well aware that we need to be providing not only shelter services but the kind of preventive services, interventive counselling services and support services within the community that women need. There is no question in our minds that it is extremely difficult, not only for the women and children involved but for our communities, when we find it difficult to provide the full services that are required. We have certainly given our commitment this morning to the Ontario Association of Interval and Transition Houses, indeed to all our partners in community service in the area of wife assault, that we will continue our efforts to do this.

One of the really serious points that we have in this whole program is that it needs to be multifaceted. We cannot continue to simply concentrate on the shelter aspect. We need to have an integrated community approach that deals with all aspects of the problem. Even then, the unfortunate thing is that we may not be able to guarantee safety to every person however hard we try, although it is our commitment to continue those efforts.

Mr Jackson: The question was not about the $20 million the government pledged in May which it has still not released to the shelters in this province. My point is that my constituent who died this morning did not have access to a shelter. I am asking the question on behalf of the 11,000 women and children who are routinely turned away at shelters.

Again, I ask the minister about Halton Women's Place in Burlington. Both the member for Oakville South and I have been on the floor of the Legislature raising this issue for over a year with the government. What do we have to now for it? The government gave an election promise. It was mentioned in the throne speech.

To the former Minister of Housing, we have a letter from Halton Women's Place which says they felt they had been misled by the government because they now know they are not eligible for funding.

To the former Minister of Community and Social Services, we have documented three letters from Halton Women's Place which her office lost. They could not find these letters.

Now the member for London Centre is the minister. Today at the Ontario Association of Interval and Transition Houses lobby session, the minister told them she was distressed with how long the process of getting money out of the government has become. Women and children are counting on the minister. Why can Bob White convince the cabinet to sell the Dome off for a song to Trevor Eyton, yet the minister cannot convince her cabinet to build a shelter for abused women and children in Burlington when such clear and tragic demand is being demonstrated?

Hon Mrs Boyd: The two situations are totally different. The situation in Halton is one where the community consultation agreed to on request by the shelter movement when the announcement of shelter funding was made in May has not yet taken place. I did indeed indicate that I was unhappy with the delays in that consultation, some of which are the responsibility of the Ministry of Community and Social Services, but some of which are also the responsibility of the community. It is hard for a community to make an integrated approach in some cases, and some communities have found it harder than others.

We made a commitment that we would not simply dole out money but would do that according to principles set within the community. The consultation in Halton has taken a long time to get going. My understanding is that it is under way now. I can be quite frank with the member; I do not think the process of allocating these funds has been as speedy as I would like to see. My ministry is on notice about that and knows we need to improve in terms of the distribution of funds when they are available.

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr Sutherland: The issue of having adequate, skilled tradespeople in this province is an important one and is part of any government's agenda for economic renewal. My question is to the Minister of Skills Development and relates to the issue of apprenticeship. As many people are aware, there has been some indication that the minister will be announcing details of the consultation around the Ontario Training and Adjustment Board. Related to that, I would like to ask the minister if he can assure this House that the much-needed reforms in the area of apprenticeship will not be put on hold while the consultation process on the Ontario Training and Adjustment Board takes place.

Hon Mr Allen: Many people have asked me just this question, so it is a very current one. As we move towards the Ontario Training and Adjustment Board, it is true that those new structures and arrangements for training will take over responsibilities in the apprenticeship area, but I want to assure the member and all who are listening and will hear this report that there will be no delay in the reform of apprenticeship in the interval.

In the course of the last year, I have had the director of the apprenticeship and client services branch busily working on laying the basis for new advances and reforms, and those are largely in place. The new director appointed within the last six months has been specifically mandated to carry forward a program of significant reform under a number of heads with respect to apprenticeship and he will be doing that.

Mr Sutherland: I am sure many people waiting to get into apprenticeship programs will be pleased to hear that. As members know, the minister in this House outlined details of the new Canada-Ontario labour force development agreement a few weeks ago. I wonder if the minister could please elaborate for us what specific benefits are in that agreement for the apprentices in this province.

Hon Mr Allen: I think the member knows, and perhaps other members of the House will know, that the agreement was to regulate the level and nature of the spending by the federal government on training in Ontario. Two particular problems in that agreement related to the issue of apprenticeship. The first had to do with the question of the cap that has existed on the funding provided by the federal government for apprenticeship. That had stayed at $40 million for several years. We have been successful in the negotiations in securing the removal of that cap for apprenticeship training in Ontario.

Second, there had been a problem in providing dollars through the federal government to support the education part of the apprenticeship program. Those dollars will now be given in a more timely way and in a more effective fashion so that it will be possible for the program to provide the dollars to support those apprenticeship students appropriately.

INVESTIGATION INTO POLICE SHOOTING

Mr Curling: My question is to the Solicitor General, now that he is awake, who will be aware that approximately a week ago a youth was shot by a Metropolitan Toronto police officer. As a result of this shooting, the youth suffered serious injury and today remains in critical condition in a Toronto hospital. The Solicitor General will also be aware that this is a case where the Ontario special investigations unit is legally required to make an independent investigation of the circumstances around the shooting.

I do not know if members have been following it. In a media report it has come to our attention that the SIU is not conducting an independent investigation. In fact the director, John Osler, has admitted that the Metro Toronto police are carrying out a police investigation, in direct contravention of the Police Services Act.

I want to remind the Solicitor General, while he is responding to that question, of what the Premier said when he was an opposition member: "Why not seize the leadership that is required, understand that the independence of the review process is critical..." Can the Solicitor General explain why he is allowing Metro power of investigation? Under what authority is Metro conducting this investigation?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I would first like to point out that I fully support the special investigations unit and its mandate as an independent civilian body to investigate possible criminal actions by police officers that involve serious injury or death. I would also like to point out that this is an independent body. It is supposed to be independent not only of police interference but of political interference. I support the independence of the SIU and I do not intend to compromise that independence by directing the director, John Osler, in how he should be conducting his business.

I do however recognize that since the inception of the SIU by the previous Liberal government in August 1990, there have been a number of concerns raised by different segments of the community. I realize that the SIU has had some growing pains. There have been problems, but I think we should put this issue in perspective.

The SIU is a unique phenomenon, not only in Canada but also in the United States and even Europe. As far as I know, no other jurisdiction in these areas has an independent civilian body to investigate possible criminal actions by police involving death or serious injury. We are breaking new ground in this area and this government is 100% behind this idea. We can only expect, however—

Hon Mr Pilkey: I am attempting to do so, but the question raised by the member is a very delicate one and requires, I think, a fairly definitive response. I can be finished very briefly, if you wish, Mr Speaker.

The Speaker: I realize it is a complex issue. Perhaps the minister could respond to the member either in writing or by placing information on the order paper or indeed by making a statement on another day.

PETITIONS

Mr J. Wilson: I have a petition to the Legislature of Ontario that reads as follows:

"Whereas the Queen of Canada has long been a symbol of national unity for Canadians from all walks of life and from all ethnic backgrounds;

"Whereas the people of Canada are currently facing a constitutional crisis which could potentially result in the breakup of the federation and are in need of unifying symbols;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to restore the oath to the Queen for Ontario's police officers."

I have affixed my name to this petition. In addition, it is signed by a number of good people in the town of Stayner in my riding of Simcoe West.

HIGHWAY WIDENING

Mr Eves: Mr Speaker, I have a petition.

"To the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"A major source of frustrating and dangerous traffic jams, the Trans-Canada Highway from Waubesa to Honey Harbour must be widened immediately. The Ministry of Transportation's failure to meet its continually changing deadlines is unacceptable. We want a firm commitment to four-lane this stretch of Highway 69 by October 1992."

The petition is signed by some 66 residents in various parts of the province of Ontario, and I have affixed my signature thereto.

HIGHWAY RECONSTRUCTION

Mr Eves: I have a second petition.

"To the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We the undersigned beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Petitioning for reconstruction of Highway 518 from Orrville to Highway 69: Help. Highway 518 sends greetings and an SOS."

This particular petition is signed by some 741 residents primarily, if not all, in my riding; just about every resident of the community of Orrville. I can personally attest to the deteriorating condition of this highway and have affixed my signature thereto.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEE

STANDING COMMITTEE ON RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT

Mr Kormos from the standing committee on resource development presented the committee's Report Under Standing Order 123 on Service Delivery at the Workers' Compensation Board and moved the adoption of its recommendations.

Mr Kormos: I want to first thank the people who participated in the committee. I am talking about Dan Waters, Ted Arnott, John Cleary, George Dadamo, Bob Huget, Leo Jordan, Paul Klopp, Sharon Murdock, Steve Offer, David Ramsay and Len Wood. Their participation as members of that committee was most valuable in arriving at these recommendations. As well, all of us should be grateful to the staff who co-operated and participated: Harold Brown, Lisa Freedman and Tannis Manikel as clerks, and of course, Lorraine Luski as research officer.

This report, which is available and which discusses service delivery at the Workers' Compensation Board, is a valuable critique, a good starting point for reforms. We should congratulate the WCB because it has undertaken its own review internally. I want to commend this to any of the listeners. It is available from any MPP's office. It is a matter of phoning or writing to any of the 130 MPPs constituency offices, and this report will be made available to interested persons.

People in injured workers' groups, industrial workers' trade unionists, among others, will undoubtedly be interested in reading this report and perhaps in communicating further with the government or members of the opposition as is their wish.

I want to thank the committee and I want to thank you, Mr Speaker, for letting me rise and speak, albeit briefly, to this most important matter.

Mr Runciman: He doesn't get too many opportunities these days.

Mr Kormos: It is a rare occasion that I speak in the Legislature. Again, unfortunately, it is unscripted and I appreciate that this in itself causes problems for some of us around here, but at this point I do want to move adjournment of the debate.

The Speaker: I did ask if you had a brief statement.

On motion by Mr Kormos, the debate was adjourned.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

HUMAN TISSUE GIFT AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LE DON DE TISSUS HUMAINS

Mr Henderson moved first reading of Bill 153, An Act to amend the Human Tissue Gift Act / Projet de loi 153, Loi modifiant la Loi sur le don de tissus humain.

Motion agreed to.

Mr Henderson: This bill requires hospitals to seek consent from the family of a deceased patient to remove tissue from the body of the deceased for transplant purposes. The hospital is required to seek consent in all situations, except for certain situations which are set out in the bill, such as the transplantable tissue being unsuitable or not needed, or the emotional or physical condition of the consentor making the request inappropriate. Virtually identical legislation is being passed elsewhere with all-party agreement.

JOHN GRAVES SIMCOE MEMORIAL FOUNDATION REPEAL ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 ABROGEANT LA LOI INTITULÉE JOHN GRAVES SIMCOE MEMORIAL FOUNDATION ACT

Mrs Haslam moved second reading of Bill 73, An Act to repeal The John Graves Simcoe Memorial Foundation Act, 1965 / Projet de loi 73, Loi portant abrogation de la loi intitulée The John Graves Simcoe Memorial Foundation Act, 1965.

Hon Mrs Haslam: The Ontario Heritage Foundation assumed responsibility for preserving the burial place of John Graves Simcoe and his wife in 1982, when title to their burial place, Wolford Chapel in Devon, England, was transferred to the foundation. The John Graves Simcoe Memorial Foundation Act is now unnecessary legislation and the repeal of the act is a housekeeping matter.

Mrs Y. O'Neill: I want to take this opportunity to put into Hansard some recollections that we in the Liberal Party have of this outstanding contributor to the history of Ontario.

No one in Ontario can but be touched by the memory of John Graves Simcoe, first Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada. John Graves Simcoe was born in 1752 at Cotterstock in England and died at the relatively young age of 54. He was commander of the Queen's Rangers in the American Revolution and arrived in what is now Ontario at the age of 40 to take up his duties in granting land to United Empire Loyalists, fugitives from the American Revolution.

John Graves Simcoe was confident of the loyalty of these American settlers in Ontario and knew that they were his best hope for the rapid growth Ontario so badly needed at that time. He saw southwestern Ontario as the future centre of the province and even foresaw it as the hub of Canadian trade with the interior of the continent. He founded the city that is now Toronto, intending it to be a temporary capital for Upper Canada, and designed our road system.

John Graves Simcoe was a man of remarkable insight and foresight. He systematically set about to make Upper Canada an example of his excellence and the creativity of British institutions. Among his many achievements, he appointed county lieutenants, introduced a court of king's bench and declared slavery illegal. These are all significant achievements and historical traditions that we have built upon.

He defeated efforts to introduce some American customs into Canadian government, was instrumental in setting up the municipal government system in Ontario and helped to found what is now the University of Toronto. His roadbuilding projects included Yonge and Dundas streets, and Lake Simcoe is named after his father, an honour he wished to personally bestow on that man.

He left the colony at the age of 44 to become governor of what is now the Dominican Republic, and became commander-in-chief for India in 1806, just before his death.

I provide this brief autobiographical review to illustrate what a crucial role John Graves Simcoe played in the early history of our province, and to help Ontarians recognize that the repeal of the John Graves Simcoe Memorial Foundation Act is not a bit of trivial history, but a rather significant and in some ways sad moment in the evolving historical awareness of our province.

Only two and a half hours by train from London, England, lies a piece of soil that the descendants of John Graves Simcoe insist belongs to Canada. That small cemetery in Devon contains the remains of John Graves Simcoe and is proudly cared for by his great-great-grandson, William Powler.

Two years ago the chapel on that site was rededicated, having been restored by the Ontario Heritage Foundation. It is a small stone building in the lush countryside of Devon and was deeded to the province of Ontario in a ceremony in which the then Premier, John Robarts, participated in 1966. It has been maintained by this province and was well on the way to becoming a place of pilgrimage for historically minded Ontarians. Nona Macdonald, president of the John Graves Simcoe Association, pronounced the chapel to be one of the jewels of Simcoe's legacy. She pointed out that the house where Simcoe died some 15 years after he set out to live in a tent in what is now Ontario is now a symbol for us to honour.

While we support this bill, we must remind the government that the traditions that have been built by people such as John Graves Simcoe and the members of the memorial foundation, members of long standing who have devoted many volunteer hours to the effort of providing and protecting the history of this province, will be encouraged and will be financially supported through the Ontario Heritage Foundation.

The NDP government's short record of lack of attention to symbolism devoted to our historical partnership with England and the many settlers of British heritage must be improved. We saw throughout the recent visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales indications that Ontarians find inspiration in our long-standing historical heritage. I and many Ontarians cherish the memory of the founders of our province and its institutions. I trust that John Graves Simcoe and his legacy will continue to be appropriately honoured and the traditions of this province will continue to be supported.

Hon Mrs Haslam: I would like to reiterate what has been said and indicate that for 1989-90, we have an annual cost of keeping the Woford Chapel in good repair. We have actually allocated $60,000 for the restoration of the chapel. Attendance in 1989 was some 850 people. We appreciate the comments and we will, in keeping with the Ontario Heritage Foundation, continue the upkeep of the chapel.

Mr McLean: I would like to participate in this debate because it appears to me that it is going to be the last time we will have the opportunity to talk at any length about John Graves Simcoe in this Legislature. I do not plan on going on at any length, because we support the change that is being made.

I want to bring to the attention of the members of this Legislature that back in 1989, I brought in a private member's bill, trying to get what was called a Heritage Day Act. It was to be thought of as the John Graves Simcoe one; it was after him that I brought this bill in. There are just a couple of paragraphs in the statement that I made at that time. It is very brief.

"I believe that if we celebrate a Heritage Day on the third Monday in February as a public holiday, we will be providing our citizens with an ideal opportunity to learn about their brothers and sisters who live next door, in the nearby community and adjoining townships who may have a different culture or heritage than themselves."

The reason I mention this is three of the municipalities in the county of Simcoe. John Graves Simcoe's wife had three dogs and the townships were named after those three dogs: Tiny, Tay and Flos. So there is a fair bit of heritage here and a lot of history.

"I cannot think of a better method of improving the multicultural composition of our society, of ending discrimination in employment practices or in renting affordable housing. Can members think of a better method for making each and every one of us more sensitive to the different traditions and values of our immigrant, ethnic or native brothers and sisters in this province?"

"But Heritage Day celebrations would not be restricted to only recognizing the role and accomplishments of the many diverse cultural groups in this province. The day could be used in a particular community to focus increased public attention on the role and many accomplishments of many individuals in the history of Ontario.

"For example, some communities may wish to acknowledge the many accomplishments and contributions of a man who was elected to the House of Commons in 1790 and appointed, on 12 September 1791, as the first Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada. Of course, I am referring to John Graves Simcoe who convened the first Legislative Assembly in our province and established York, which we now call Toronto, as the capital of Ontario.

"That is only one example of a person who left his or her mark on our history," that is, when I refer to John Graves Simcoe.

I am sorry to say that we never got that Heritage Day Act through. I felt that we should have. The amount of history that this individual and his family have left to this province I hope will be in the records for ever, and that the John Graves Simcoe Memorial Foundation will continue to make sure the assets are looked after and that the repeal of The John Graves Simcoe Memorial Foundation Act, 1965, will formally give all duties and responsibilities for Woford Chapel to the Ontario Historical Society and will allow the two organizations to amalgamate.

I am pleased to have had the opportunity to speak just briefly on this Bill 73, An Act to Repeal The John Graves Simcoe Memorial Foundation Act.

Hon Mrs Haslam: I would like to reiterate that the Ontario Heritage Foundation, an agency of this government, has assumed ownership of Woford Chapel. It is an important tangible reminder of the British fact in Ontario's heritage. The Ontario Heritage Foundation will assume the ownership and will commit itself to its preservation. I would like to thank all those members who participated in the debate and in their support of this bill.

Motion agreed to.

Bill ordered for third reading.

LAW SOCIETY AMENDMENT ACT
(TEMPORARY MEMBERS), 1991
LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LA SOCIÉTÉ DU BARREAU
(MEMBRES PROVISOIRES)

Mr Winninger, on behalf of Mr Hampton, moved third reading of Bill 75, An Act to amend the Law Society Act / Projet de loi 75, Loi portant modification de la Loi sur la Société du barreau.

Mr Winninger: The purpose of this bill is to allow exchange programs between crown counsel and crown attorneys in the employ of the Ministry of the Attorney General and lawyers from foreign jurisdictions. The bill permits the Law Society of Upper Canada, upon request of the Attorney General, to admit to the practice of law in Ontario lawyers who are not Canadian citizens or permanent residents.

This temporary membership carries with it all of the rights and responsibilities accorded to lawyers, save the right to vote in law society elections. This will enable the ministry to enhance its professional development programs by exposing Ontario government lawyers to the practice of law and public policy in other parts of the common law world.

In the long run, programs like these will result in higher calibre legal work being carried out on behalf of the people of Ontario.

Mr Chiarelli: Last week, I believe, there were three bills from the Ministry of the Attorney General in the House for second reading. Today, in the orders of the day, including Bill 75, which has just been moved for third reading, there are six bills from the Ministry of the Attorney General in the House.

I just want to repeat one of the points that I made last week. When one looks at these six bills that the House will be considering this afternoon, one cannot determine what the agenda of this government is for the administration of justice in Ontario. The bills represent an ad hoc accumulation of bills that make no organized sense whatsoever. A number of the bills are simply copies of bills which were introduced in the last Parliament by the then Attorney General.

I will be pointing out, as each bill comes up today, the ad hoc nature of the legislation which this government is bringing forward with respect to the administration of justice. In particular, I want to say that this bill is very poorly drafted, particularly when one reads the explanation the Attorney General gave in this House the week before last.

He indicated that the bill "is to allow exchange programs between crown counsel and crown attorneys in the employ of the Ministry of the Attorney General and lawyers from foreign jurisdictions." Well, of course, when one reads the bill and the explanatory note which is appended to the bill, it says nothing about an exchange program. It basically says:

"The purpose of the bill is to permit the admission of persons qualified to practise law outside Ontario as temporary members of the Law Society of Upper Canada. Temporary members are permitted to act as barristers and solicitors in the employ of the Attorney General for Ontario or, if appointed under the Crown Attorneys Act, as crown attorneys or assistant crown attorneys."

There is no restriction in this bill to exchange programs. There is no restriction in this bill to indicate that the purpose is to enhance the training or the quality of barristers and solicitors in the Ontario government. The purpose is quite broad, when one looks at the legislation. It in fact confers upon the ministries of the Attorney General and the Solicitor General special privilege when it comes to obtaining the services of barristers and solicitors from outside the province.

I suggested to the Attorney General last week that this is unfair and unequal in the sense that there are many large corporations in Ontario that have special legal needs, needs for special expert attention on various matters, and there is no reason why they ought not to be given the same rights and privileges as the Ministry of the Attorney General or the Ministry of the Solicitor General. They ought to be able to apply to bring in temporary counsel for their own purposes and needs.

When I mentioned that to the Attorney General, he indicated that it seemed like a fair idea, but of course there is no indication that he will be bringing forward any amendments on this particular issue. I do believe the rationale that has been given here today and was given last week is not really what is represented in the bill itself.

Another comment I want to make with respect to this bill is that it really opens the door for the provincial government, almost at will, to retain lawyers from other provinces, for example, Manitoba, for its own purposes: to act as prosecutors or what have you. I pointed out last week that if they wanted senior counsel in the Ministry of the Attorney General or the Solicitor General's office, they could, as they have with other senior bureaucrats with particular political leanings, mainly NDP, import those into the Ontario ministries here to do the bidding of this particular government in a very political way.

I think if that abuse is possible, it raises particular concerns, because the legislation itself confers this right strictly on the government and not on other large legal employers such as large legal firms or corporations that have major legal involvement.

I do want to reiterate those points which I raised last week with the Attorney General. I think they are very significant.

The other point is that this particular little bill of one or two sections raises a very serious, major problem that we have in this country, and that is the problem of interprovincial trade and professional restrictions. What we see here is that we need a special bill to bring into the province, on a temporary basis through approval of the Law Society of Upper Canada, lawyers to do certain types of work.

When we take that particular requirement and expand it throughout the whole economy, we see that virtually every profession and trade is in the same position. The people from British Columbia or Newfoundland or New Brunswick cannot easily come to Ontario to practise their profession or trade. There are a lot of barriers to transprovincial professionals and trades. This is a major problem and it is afflicting this country as it never has in the past.

This government has done absolutely nothing to address the greater issue of interprovincial free trade. What it is doing is passing one narrow bill temporarily permitting lawyers from other provinces to come into Ontario—not only just to come into the province, but even restricting it to working for the provincial government.

This government is negligent in not addressing the major problem of interprovincial free trade. It continues to spin its wheels. The last government did something quite significant. The then Premier and the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology went to first ministers' conferences, went to various conferences and basically tried to get the other provinces to agree to interprovincial free trade.

I know I am digressing a bit from this particular bill, but I do want to say I think it is very narrow. The Attorney General had indicated he was prepared to amend it to include in its coverage large law firms and perhaps corporations, and I certainly would recommend that the Ministry of the Attorney General do that. We will be voting for this legislation reluctantly, because it is so narrow and does not address the broader issues.

Mr Harnick: I spoke about this bill at second reading stage. As I said then, I do not see anything sinister in this bill. It is a very straightforward bill which permits the exchange programs for crown attorneys.

I heard the remarks of my friend from the Liberal Party. I heard his concern, asking: What about other aspects of the profession? Why are these the only people who can get temporary calls to the bar?

My understanding is that lawyers come here all the time from other jurisdictions and that they can carry on a practice of consulting in commercial areas in conjunction with law firms that they may be doing business with on a commercial basis. They can be called to the bar for the purpose of pleading cases and they can request a special status to plead those cases in the courts. So this bill, although it only deals with crown attorneys, is not anything really different than we have had for a long time in Ontario.

The thing about the bill that concerns me is that once it is passed, I wonder if the Attorney General is going to have anything else to do for the balance of his term. I can see that on the orders of the day for today, every bill the Attorney General has presented to this Legislature is here for either second or third reading, and I do not see any indication that there is anything more to come.

Unfortunately—I will be speaking about this at greater length later—these bills do not really do anything in terms of solving the greater problems we have in the justice system in this province. They deal with very particular, narrow house-cleaning issues. They are bills that were drafted by the former Attorney General, the member for St George-St David, not anything that was initiated by this government. The Attorney General has yet to show us any legislation in any form that he intends to introduce. I just fear that when today is finished, the Attorney General probably will have nothing to do for the balance of his term.

His eagerness to get even these house-cleaning bills completed was suspect, because this simple little bill to allow programs for crown attorneys from this jurisdiction and other jurisdictions to exchange places for temporary periods of time came before this House on April 23, 1991. That was seven or eight months ago. I do not know why it has taken seven or eight months for this bill to complete three readings when everybody is essentially in favour of it. I am very suspicious that the Attorney General does not have any idea of where we are going once the Liberal legislation is passed. Even the passing of the legislation has taken a donkey's age.

I hope we can get this cleaned up. I hope eventually the Attorney General will favour us with some of his own legislation, start to look at the problems the justice system in this province has and start to try to solve those problems once the Liberal house-cleaning bills are completed.

Mr Chiarelli: I just want to underline the uncertainty being created in the legal profession in Ontario by this government's having no agenda. Just this weekend, for example, as the Ottawa Citizen reported, one of Ontario's top judges, Chief Justice Frank Callaghan, head of the Ontario Court (General Division), told a weekend conference of lawyers:

"There is a real, continuing danger of having in the province an entrenched court reform bureaucracy. Once it gets started, it can only justify its existence by bringing about further reforms, whether needed or not. It has proven very difficult over the past year to manage this court effectively when it is in a constant state of threat of fundamental change."

The Chief Justice is saying he does not know where this province is going in the administration of justice. He sees threats of reform but he sees no assurances. He really does not know where this government is bringing the administration of justice. I think that is a real damning indictment of this government. I want the parliamentary assistant to the Attorney General to bring this serious concern to the ministry's attention, because the government has not given a good, sound message as to where it is bringing the administration of justice in Ontario.

It is about time they did it. They have been in government for 14 or 15 months. The judge see threats of action and reform and has no idea where the government is going. I think it is time the Attorney General took heed.

The Deputy Speaker: I would like to remind the member that he did not reply to the comments made by the member for Willowdale.

Mr Harnick: I think we should get some of these done. The delay in dealing with matters that are simple and straightforward bothers me. Waiting seven months to deal with a piece of legislation that could have been dealt with in three days is something I cannot understand. It underlies the fact that the Attorney General has no direction. He has no idea what is important, he has no idea what is necessary now and he is fixated with dealing with simple little things that are taking in excess of seven months to complete, when the real job and the real problems are being avoided. I think we have to get these things done and encourage the Attorney General to get going, because we have problems that need solving.

Mr Winniger: I remind my friends in the House, as I said in my introductory remarks, that the bill permits the Law Society of Upper Canada, upon the request of the Attorney General, to admit to the practice of law in Ontario lawyers who are not Canadian citizens or permanent residents. I think what my friend the member for Ottawa West seems to be forgetting is that the law society is an independent, self-governing body. What we have done with this bill is allow the law society to retain control over who is admitted to the law society and when and on what terms they can practise, temporarily or permanently, in Ontario.

The Attorney General can only request that a foreign lawyer be admitted as part of the program. The Attorney General cannot mandate that, simply because of the self-governing nature of the Law Society of Upper Canada. As suggested by the member for Ottawa West, corporations might ask to be admitted with foreign lawyers to this jurisdiction. Certainly the law society can deal with it. The breadth of this bill allows it.

I would also like to address an allegation made by the member for Ottawa West that this is a backhanded way of bringing in political lawyers from other jurisdictions. Certainly the law society retains the control in Ontario as to who can practise and on what terms. I think the member for Ottawa West, as a lawyer with some experience, I understand, who should understand these things, has simply forgotten the overarching authority the law society has in matters of who can practise in this province. I am certain the member for Ottawa West would be the first to protest if this government suddenly started determining what kind of standards of admission the Law Society of Upper Canada would exercise. The Attorney General only requests that these lawyers be admitted for these purposes, and the law society retains the control.

As I mentioned earlier, the purpose of this act is to facilitate the educational and professional enhancement for government lawyers. It is not a free trade scenario. It is not a proposal that should deal with industrial relations. This bill has a very narrow focus. I invite the member for Ottawa West to revisit what he said today in the House. In light of what I have said about the government's narrow focus in this bill, perhaps the member for Ottawa West will come to a full understanding that we are not dealing with free trade here, we are not dealing with industrial relations and we are not dealing with a political agenda. We simply want to enhance the experience, open doors and cross-fertilize in a manner that crown attorneys can only benefit from and which will enrich the manner in which they practise and carry out their professional duties.

I would also respond briefly to comments made by the member for Willowdale. He used the word "suspicious." He used the phrase "donkey's age." He talked about delay, he talked about avoidance. Certainly the bill that is presently being debated, Bill 75, was not unduly delayed and it certainly addresses some of the reforms the members have been asking for from the opposite side of the House.

In conclusion, I suggest the Attorney General is cognizant of many of the reforms that need to be made and he is driving forward this agenda in a very timely and effective manner.

FRAUDULENT DEBTORS ARREST REPEAL ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 ABROGEANT LA LOI SUR L'ARRESTATION DES DÉBITEURS EN FUITE

Mr Winninger, on behalf of Mr Hampton, moved third reading of Bill 76, An Act to repeal the Fraudulent Debtors Arrest Act / Projet de loi 76, Loi portant abrogation de la Loi sur l'arrestation des débiteurs en fuite.

Mr Winninger: I am pleased to offer today for third reading An Act to repeal the Fraudulent Debtors Arrest Act. The Fraudulent Debtors Arrest Act has been part of Ontario law in its present form since 1909. Its history can be traced back to pre-Confederation days when property rights were often viewed as more important than the civil rights of people.

This bill will remove from the statute book a method of arresting and imprisoning a citizen for civil debt which, outside the context of family law, is archaic. The creditors, lawyers and interest groups which the Ministry of the Attorney General consulted unanimously endorsed this bill. Fortunately the act is rarely used now that modern legal remedies which focus on the assets rather than the person of the debtor are available. When spouses are in default of their family support obligations, the remedies provided in other legislation, including the use of imprisonment in appropriate cases, will continue to be available.

The arbitrary arrest and imprisonment provisions provided in the Fraudulent Debtors Arrest Act can no longer be tolerated. I am pleased therefore to call on the House to vote for its repeal.

Mr Chiarelli: I note the parliamentary assistant to the Attorney General has basically quoted verbatim the minister's comments of November 5, 1991, in explaining what this bill is all about.

I made some comments when the Attorney General introduced this for second reading that what we are really doing here is getting rid of one of the remnants of debtors' prison, where people can be put in jail for non-payment of debts. Of course, it has not been used very much in recent years. The issue I raised last week is that people are still being put in jail for minor infractions such as parking tickets and other offences which are really not criminal but which carry fines. People are being put in jail for non-payment of fines.

When I raised this on November 5, the Attorney General said: "The member for Ottawa West asked...what are we doing to deal with issues of incarceration with respect to minor offences like municipal bylaws and the Highway Traffic Act, etc. I am happy to tell him that we have been working on this issue since early this year and we will be bringing forward some legislation, I hope, this fall if the schedule permits."

I am simply asking a question. There is a problem here of putting people in jail when they ought not to be in jail for non-payment of debts and parking fines. Why can the government not draft some kind of omnibus bill that deals with this issue on an overall basis? They are piecemeal and ad hoc in everything they do in the Ministry of the Attorney General. We have here a problem that is more prevalent—putting people in jail and incarcerating them for non-payment of fines—yet they abolish an old act that is hardly ever used any more. What they are really doing is underlining in a very significant way that they are doing everything on an ad hoc basis.

I urge the ministry to get its act together, look at major issues, deal with them together and not waste the time of the House by bringing them in piecemeal from time to time. Nobody objects to this bill; no one is going to object to a bill that rationalizes incarcerating people for non-payment of fines. The Attorney General should pull them together and do it in an organized, efficient manner for the ministry, for the people of Ontario and for this Legislature. The government is just plain incompetent in how it is managing the public business. It should get on and do it in a better way.

We are going to vote in favour of this bill, but we should be voting for something that is more comprehensive and better thought out. The government should get its act together.

Mr Harnick: It is interesting that these bills are so straightforward that not a single member on the government side has risen during second or third reading of any of these bills and made any comments. That enforces my belief that there is no reason why these bills had to take seven months to pass through this Legislature.

This is another bill that first appeared here on April 23, 1991. It consists essentially of one section. The gist of that section is that the Fraudulent Debtors Arrest Act is repealed. I have no idea why this bill took seven months to pass through this Legislature. These bills are so straightforward that even the members on the government benches understand them and they do not have any comments. I do not know why these things take seven months. They are straightforward. There are no regulations that go with them. There is no administrative process that goes with these bills. There is no money the government has to spend in terms of implementing these programs. Yet they take seven months to get one single section through. I think it is probably because the Attorney General forgot he introduced these, it was so long ago. I am going to vote for this and I am delighted to see that we are going to get it off the plate of this assembly.

Mr Winninger: I would just remind the member for Ottawa West that the act to repeal the Fraudulent Debtors Arrest Act is one that deals with civil debt, not criminal sanctions. We agree that in the criminal and quasi-criminal arena there may be problems with incarceration, but in the non-civil field more consideration is necessary due to its complexity.

Here the focus is a very narrow one and this bill simply repeals an archaic provision that leads to the arrest of fraudulent debtors, incarcerating the person instead of dealing with seizure of the property. It is time that this archaic provision, dating back to 1909, as I indicated earlier, be repealed and we deal with the collection of civil debts in a modern manner.

ARBITRATION ACT, 1991 LOI DE 1991 SUR L'ARBITRAGE

Consideration of Bill 42, An Act to revise the Arbitrations Act / Projet de loi 42, Loi portant révision de la Loi sur l'arbitrage.

The Chair: Are there questions or amendments, and if so, to which section?

Mr Winninger: Mr Speaker, I was just going to ask whether staff might be permitted to enter the chamber to assist.

The Chair: Yes, certainly. We will wait.

I will ask the question again. Are there any questions, comments or amendments, and if so, to which sections of the bill?

Mr Winninger: I thought I would indicate that there are five amendments I propose to introduce today, dealing with sections 6, 29, 33, 35 and 45.

The Chair: Are there members who have any comments to any section? Shall sections 1 to 5, inclusive, carry?

Sections 1 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

Section 6:

The Chair: Mr Winninger moves that section 6 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted:

"6. No court shall intervene in matters governed by this act, except for the following purposes, in accordance with this act:

"1. To assist the conducting of arbitrations.

"2. To ensure that arbitrations are conducted in accordance with arbitration agreements.

"3. To prevent unequal or unfair treatment of parties to arbitration agreements.

"4. To enforce awards."

Mr Winninger: This amendment is being introduced to amend the language in the Uniform Arbitration Act. Alberta has also added this language to its act to reinforce the general exclusion of the courts. Several lawyers in Ontario have found it desirable to ensure that court intervention is restricted to the purposes for which the act contemplates it.

Motion agreed to.

Section 6, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 7 to 28, inclusive, agreed to.

Section 29:

The Chair: Mr Winninger moves that subsection 29(1) be struck out and the following substituted:

"(1) A party may serve a person with a notice, issued by the arbitral tribunal, requiring the person to attend and give evidence at the arbitration at the time and place named in the notice."

Mr Winninger: In its present form the bill is not now clear on how a notice to attend is issued. I am talking about what is commonly known as a summons or subpoena. Such notices should come from the arbitrator.

Motion agreed to.

Section 29, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 30 to 32, inclusive, agreed to.

Section 33:

The Chair: Mr Winninger moves that section 33 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted:

"33. The arbitral tribunal shall decide the dispute in accordance with the arbitration agreement and the contract, if any, under which the dispute arose, and may also take into account any applicable usages of trade."

Mr Chiarelli: I would like to ask the parliamentary assistant why the mandatory nature of taking into account applicable usages of the trade has been deleted and it has been put in on a discretionary basis. Certainly my inclination would be that if there are applicable usages of trade, it should be mandatory to take those into account rather than discretionary, and I wonder if the parliamentary assistant can tell me why that has been changed from mandatory to optional or discretionary. Could he perhaps give an example or two of why it would make a difference, having it optional rather than mandatory?

Mr Winninger: The arbitrator in this particular context is an independent one. Through the appointment process and the training for arbitrators, we expect that the arbitrator will, when appropriate and when necessary, refer to customary usages of trade. This is an element that is discretionary, not mandatory. If we were to make it mandatory, this would suggest that the arbitrator has a duty to search for such usages, which is not the intention of the bill at all.

Certainly if the parties give evidence of usages, and again, my friend the member for Ottawa West, as a former practising attorney, is well aware that so much of the basis for what an arbitrator decides is based on the evidence presented before him by the parties and/or their solicitors, we are not about to bind the hands of the arbitrator. He can certainly refer to the usages or customs of trade, if appropriate, and that is the intention of the bill.

The Chair: Are there any further questions or comments?

Mr Chiarelli: I think it is fair comment to ask the question I did, and I gather there was some sort of implied sense that it was a glib question or was not a serious question. In fact, the mandatory aspect of the applicability of usages of trade found itself into the bill in its original form. It cleared the experts in the Ministry of the Attorney General's office and it cleared the consultative process as to making it mandatory.

What the section says is that if there are applicable usages of trade, what happens? Should it be mandatory to take them into account or should it be optional? I think it is an open question, and I do not think the provision that says it should be optional imposes an obligation on any arbitrator to search into the existence of applicable usages of trade. If any are brought to his attention and if in fact they are usages of trade, then perhaps the original wording of the legislation is more appropriate, and that is that the arbitrator "shall" take them into account.

Mr Winninger: I would certainly never imply that a question put forward by my friend the member for Ottawa West might be a glib one. There may be situations where a contract or a collective agreement, or even in some cases a domestic agreement, such as a separation agreement, where the parties have elected to go to arbitration, may be unclear or ambiguous in some respect. That would be an appropriate occasion when an arbitrator would choose to refer to the customs or usages of trade.

But if in fact the terms and conditions of the contract or agreement or what have you are clear on their surface, there may be no pressing reason to go to the customs or usages of trade and in fact it may be a waste of the arbitrator's time to do so. Certainly this section allows the arbitrator considerable latitude in coming to a decision as to whether he or she should invoke the usages of trade.

Motion agreed to.

Section 33, as amended, agreed to.

Section 34 agreed to.

Section 35:

The Chair: Mr Winninger moves that section 35 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted:

"35. The members of an arbitral tribunal shall not conduct any part of the arbitration as a mediation or a conciliation process or other similar process that might compromise or appear to compromise the arbitral tribunal's ability to decide the dispute impartially."

Mr Harnick: I have some concerns—I expressed them at second reading—about the arbitration process and the fact that you will often have situations where mediation or conciliation may become necessary during the course of an arbitration. If the arbitrator or the panel interjects in a particular way, it may well be able to facilitate settling a dispute. However, they have to be cognizant of the fact that this section exists and that the words are "shall not conduct any part of the arbitration as a mediation or conciliation process or other similar process."

My concern about this section is that it may well take some flexibility away from the arbitrator. However, I would like to emphasize that the section goes on to say "that might compromise or appear to compromise the arbitral tribunal's ability to decide the dispute impartially." I think it is very significant to put on the record that particular part of the section because I think one hopes that in interpreting this section, courts will look at those words and interpret them broadly, recognizing what they hope an arbitrator can accomplish and recognizing that flexibility may in fact be the best part of this process and should not be limited.

Where I do have some concern is over the fact that this section may well limit the flexibility of an arbitrator, but I think one has to read this section in conjunction with the words "that might compromise or appear to compromise." I think those are the very key words of the section.

COURTS OF JUSTICE AMENDMENT ACT
(PAYMENTS TO SUPERNUMERARY JUDGES), 1991
LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES
TRIBUNAUX JUDICIAIRES
(RÉMUNÉRATION DES JUGES SURNUMÉRAIRES)

Mr Winninger, on behalf of Mr Hampton, moved second reading of Bill 146, An Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act, 1984 in respect of Payments to Supernumerary Judges / Projet de loi 146, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1984 sur les tribunaux judiciaires en ce qui concerne la rémunération des juges surnuméraires.

Mr Winninger: This bill is part of our initiatives to eliminate unnecessary expenditures in the court system. The expenditure dealt with by this bill is the annual payment of $3,000 by the province to judges of the Court of Appeal and the Ontario Court (General Division) who already receive a full salary from the federal government.

The payment used to cover services by those judges as members of boards and commissions, such as police commissions, but judges no longer serve on those boards because it would be viewed as incompatible with an independent and impartial judiciary to have them participate in the executive branch of government.

The payment also used to cover what was known as persona designata jurisdiction of judges, which meant that the Legislature required these judges to decide questions of fact and law not as members of their court but rather as arbitrators.

The Supreme Court of Canada, in a series of decisions in the 1970s and 1980s, so cut down the scope of persona designata jurisdiction as to make it almost meaningless. The original Courts of Justice Act, enacted in 1984, abolished persona designata jurisdiction entirely. The result is that the $3,000 payment is still being made but for services that are no longer rendered by the federal judiciary in Ontario.

The previous government, in its 1989 amendments to the Courts of Justice Act, eliminated the $3,000 payment for all future appointees. That amendment has been in place since September 1, 1990. The approach taken in that amendment, having it apply only to future appointees, has the virtue of not altering unilaterally the terms of employment of federal judges who took their appointment with the expectation that their salary would include $3,000 from the province.

This bill adopts a similar approach. It eliminates the payment if and when a judge chooses to go supernumerary. A supernumerary judge is one who, at the age of 65, decides not to retire or continue on with a full workload until the age of 75 but rather to work with a reduced schedule. The decision is entirely up to the judge of course. Supernumerary judges continue to receive their federal salary but under this bill they will lose the additional payment from the province.

In proposing this legislation, we have consulted the chief justices of the two affected courts and have secured their concurrence in our approach. We have also touched base with the federal Department of Justice, which has encouraged us to remove the $3,000 provincial payment.

It is our intention to proclaim the bill in force on January 1, 1992, in order to catch the next quarterly instalment of the annual payment.

Mr Harnick: I have some reservations about this act. The reason I have reservations is because judges who are still working and who elect to continue to work as judges are now receiving different remuneration than other judges who are working.

If a judge decides to become supernumerary and continues working, why should he have the $3,000 stipend removed from his salary when other judges are receiving that $3,000 stipend? Perhaps there are other ways the government could look at this. If the supernumerary judge is not working on a full-time basis, the government can pro-rate that amount of money, but the fact is that judge is still working and I happen to know at first hand that a great many supernumerary judges work full-time. Why should they be treated differently than any of their brother judges?

I think the way this bill has been proposed, it is very much a slap in the face to those judges who continue to work and who continue to help with the backlogs the courts have. If these judges did not elect to go supernumerary, it would mean that the actual number of judges hearing cases would be very much reduced in this province.

What we have in this province now are judges who have the option to become supernumerary judges. By becoming supernumerary judges they continue hearing cases yet the federal government is then permitted to, and in fact does, appoint additional judges for the court. I think we have to encourage judges to opt to become supernumeraries.

Mr Winninger: Certainly the member for Willowdale has, on other occasions, indicated his concern with the expenditure of the public purse. I thought the member would applaud fiscal restraint of this kind.

The election to go supernumerary means an electing on the part of the supernumerary judge, as I said earlier, to work less than other judges, usually one half to two thirds of the regular workload. For this the supernumerary judge continues to collect a full federal salary, no less than $147,800. Surely the member for Willowdale is not suggesting that these supernumerary judges would be deterred from doing this kind of noble work merely because $3,000 supplementary no longer is paid.

As I indicated during my opening remarks, this initiative is taken with the concurrence of the chief justices of both of the affected courts and, I presume, with the concurrence of their junior judges.

Mr Chiarelli: Our party is going to vote against this particular bill because it feels there is an inherent unfairness to it. It is a type of unfairness that we have seen in other legislation which has been brought forward by this government. In effect, this legislation is retroactive. What it says to judges who have been appointed over the years who thought they were entering into what amounted to a de facto contract so that they could plan on a remuneration which included this $3,000, is: "All you judges who accepted your appointments on that basis"—which I would all a contractual basis—"that contract has been broken by the government with this piece of legislation. It is retroactive."

I could support and our party could support a bill which said, "You newly appointed judges will know that you are not going to get that $3,000 when you become supernumerary." However, this legislation is retroactive. It is saying to judges who accepted their appointments on the basis of this $3,000: "You ain't going to get it any more. We've changed our mind. We're cutting it out. We have this rational reason."

There are two classes of people in this province. There is a class of people for whom this government legislates retroactively, whom this government considers the "ins," whether they are landlords, whether they are directors of companies, whether they are judges. They are the big, rich people whom we can do bad legislation for retroactively. If it is for the little person, we do not retroactively legislate.

The issue is not whether a judge makes $130,000 or $140,000 a year. The issue is that they are breaking a contract through legislation. It is bad law; it is bad practice; it is unfair. If it is a unionized operation, they are treated with kid gloves. If it is not, they are treated with a heavy retroactive hand.

This government has to learn that there are principles of fairness which affect everybody, including judges, landlords and directors of companies. It is a bad bill because it is retroactive. It is a disincentive for judges to continue hard work, judges who have contracted with the government for that $3,000. This represents a breach of contract. They are saving, by my estimate, somewhere in the area of $60,000 or $70,000 a year in the Ministry of the Attorney General by doing this.

They are cutting the judges back by $3,000. On the one hand, they gave 6% or 7% to public servants in Ontario, increasing by tens of millions of dollars a year their unionized employees, because they have got to be good to union employees. On the other hand, we look at a judge; they will retroactively give him or her a pay cut of $3,000. Shame on this government for continuing to legislate retroactively.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Questions and/or comments on the member for Ottawa West's participation? No questions and/or comments. Further debate on Bill 146? I see no further debate. The honourable parliamentary assistant and member for London South may want to wrap up.

Mr Winninger: The member for Ottawa West raises an interesting issue of retroactivity. I suggest to the member that this is not really an issue of retroactivity, as he suggests. We are dealing with justices who have not attained a supernumerary status yet. We are not taking anything away from justices who are currently supernumerary judges. They continue to benefit from the status quo.

However, what we are saying to justices who are not yet 65 is: "You have a choice. You can stay on full-time and continue, of course, to collect your full salary of $147,800 a year or you may, for reasons of your own, choose to work less than full-time—half time or perhaps two thirds of the normal workload—or if you wish, you can retire when you reach age 65." Any judge who is entitled to become a supernumerary judge is also entitled to retire with a full pension if she or he wishes.

We are not taking anything away from judges who are currently supernumerary. I would only add that the saving will gradually increase over the years to approximately $600,000 a year after 20 years. This is a substantial saving to this government, and I would expect that given previous comments about fiscal restraint flowing from the members opposite, they would fully applaud this initiative.

Motion agreed to.

Bill ordered for third reading.

CLASS PROCEEDINGS ACT, 1990

LOI DE 1990 SUR LES RECOURS COLLECTIFS

Mr Winninger, on behalf of Mr Hampton, moved second reading of Bill 28, An Act respecting Class Proceedings / Projet de loi 28, Loi concernant les recours collectifs.

LAW SOCIETY AMENDMENT ACT (CLASS PROCEEDINGS FUNDING), 1990

Mr Winninger, on behalf of Mr Hampton, moved second reading of Bill 29, An Act to amend the Law Society Act to provide for Funding to Parties to Class Proceedings.

Mr Winninger: I am pleased to move second reading today actually of two bills, Bill 28 and Bill 29, which are companion bills that will greatly improve access to justice for the people of Ontario.

Bill 28, the Class Proceedings Act, and Bill 29, An Act to amend the Law Society Act to provide for Funding to Parties to Class Proceedings, between them create a sophisticated procedure for the litigation of complex cases concerning mass loss.

As the two bills go hand in hand, I propose to address them both in my opening remarks with respect to Bill 28. However, I look forward to receiving further comments from members upon second reading of both Bill 28 and Bill 29.

By way of background, I remind the members of the House of the origins of this legislation. In 1982, the Ontario Law Reform Commission released the most thorough report on the state of class action law in Canada and indeed the world. The research and recommendations contained in that report formed the basis of work by an advisory committee on class action reform established by the Attorney General's predecessor, the member for St George-St David.

The advisory committee on class action reform, which was a broadly representative group that included spokespersons for business, consumers, environmentalists, insurers and the legal profession, developed unanimous recommendations for reform in this area. Members will recall that a class action or a class proceeding is a special procedure that permits numerous individuals who have suffered a common wrong to seek redress in one law suit as a group rather than in numerous law suits as individuals.

In this day and age, when resources for new government initiatives are so scarce, a reform such as this is a particularly welcome change. One of the primary goals of Bill 28 is to economize on the use of legal and judicial resources. With this procedure in place, many injured persons will be able to use one litigation vehicle to obtain compensation. We know the type of society we enjoy in Ontario is sometimes witness to incidents of mass loss. Ontario residents use an array of complex pharmaceutical and other products such as motor vehicles and carry on activities that often, if events go awry, threaten our very environment. It is precisely these cases of mass injury that will be well suited to treatment in a class proceeding.

Concerns have been expressed in the past about the potential impact of the increased availability of class actions in Ontario. Fears have been voiced about opening the floodgates of litigation, increasing the use of our courts and facilitating litigation in what is considered to be an already overly litigious society. It is precisely these concerns that were addressed and resolved by the advisory committee that developed this legislation.

The procedure contained in these bills is a sophisticated one that treats plaintiffs and defendants fairly and with an even hand. I would like to take a moment to set out the highlights of this procedure for members of this House.

First of all, the class proceeding will include a step in which a judge will screen potential class proceedings according to a specific test. Members of the class who do not wish to participate in the class proceeding will have the opportunity to exclude themselves from, or opt out of, the proceeding.

The representative plaintiff will be required to ensure that class members obtain notice of the proceeding. Once certified by the court, the proceeding would continue in a manner similar to other civil litigation but with a number of significant differences, namely, that one judge will hear all motions up to the trial and the court will have the ability to make aggregate judgements in cases where the only issue is the assessment of damages for many individuals.

Normal cost rules for litigation will apply, but lawyers and their clients will be permitted to engage in special fee arrangements for such proceedings, subject, however, to the court having final control over all agreements with respect to fees and disbursements.

Another important feature of this procedure is the creation of a class proceeding fund. The Law Foundation of Ontario will endow a fund in the amount of $500,000 which is designed to provide financial assistance to representative plaintiffs in class proceedings. It will provide representative plaintiffs with financial assistance for disbursements such as expert reports and notice to class members. Members across the House who have practised law will know how costly some of these disbursements can be at the initial stages. It will also indemnify a representative plaintiff who has been assisted by the fund in the event the proceeding is unsuccessful and the court has ordered the representative plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs.

This is a progressive means by which the traditional financial barriers to this type of litigation can be lowered to permit representative plaintiffs to come forward on behalf of a class of injured persons.

The Law Foundation of Ontario deserves a vote of thanks from the residents of Ontario for its generous contribution to this fund. This procedure would not be possible were it not for the financial assistance of the Law Foundation of Ontario. It is an unprecedented contribution that will not only make this particular procedure work, but will also demonstrate to the people of Ontario that the legal profession itself is anxious to see increased access to justice for injured persons.

In conclusion, the two bills I bring forward today for second reading on behalf of the Attorney General will make an important contribution to what I know is a goal shared by all members of this House: access to justice. I urge the members of this House to study the legislation closely and provide either the Attorney General or myself with their comments. I hope we can enact both bills quickly in order that the procedure is made available at the earliest possible date for those who must use our courts to seek compensation in situations of mass loss.

The Acting Speaker: Before we proceed with questions or comments on the parliamentary assistant's participation, I believe the parliamentary assistant has requested that we proceed simultaneously with Bill 28 and Bill 29. Do we have consent to proceed simultaneously?

Agreed to.

Mr Harnick: At this juncture, with the two minutes I believe I have, I am interested, because the parliamentary assistant has actually done something unprecedented by his government: He has actually thanked lawyers.

We have heard the Treasurer blame lawyers for all the ills of the auto insurance business. We have heard one government member after another talk about the lawyers ruining the justice system of this province. Now here they are at the other end accepting money the lawyers are giving to make this program work.

I would like to thank the parliamentary assistant for the magnanimous gesture he has made and the fact that he, among all the government members—I suspect he is probably the only one who recognizes the contribution the lawyers have made to the justice system in this province and particularly to facilitating the possibility for Bill 28 and Bill 29 to become realities.

Mr Winninger: I indicate very briefly that I suggest this government has the highest respect for the legal profession and in fact this assembly counts many members of that august law society within its ranks. I do not believe this is a precedent.

Mr McLean: What are you doing for farmers?

Mr Winninger: Certainly lawyers and farmers may have a lot in common, as suggested from one of the members opposite, in that they both may have difficult obstacles to surmount in their professions and have to deal with adversity on almost a daily basis.

I suggest this is indeed very progressive legislation that can be a beacon to other jurisdictions across Canada that do not already have class proceedings legislation. Certainly the inauguration of a fund of this kind to provide affirmative action for those people who perhaps in the past have been denied access to the courts is a very salutary development indeed.

Mr Chiarelli: Of course we will be supporting these bills, but I want to make several comments.

I was elected in 1987 and I was able to see in action the then critic for the Ministry of the Attorney General, the member for Rainy River, and rather suspected at the time that he had a secret desire, if he ever got into government, to be the parliamentary assistant to the Attorney General. I do not think he ever anticipated that he would become the Attorney General, because for the last 14 months in fact he has been acting like a parliamentary assistant to an Attorney General.

In particular, we know that we are dealing this afternoon with the fifth and sixth bills from the Ministry of the Attorney General. Five and a half of those six bills were written by the previous Attorney General, the member for St George-St David; by the previous government. Since the ascent of the NDP to government and the ascent of the member for Rainy River to the position of Attorney General, he has really been carrying the member for St George-St David's old briefs, in the sense that he is following through on most of the legislation which the member for St George-St David introduced but did not have the time to complete.

If we look at Bill 28 and Bill 29, we see that they were introduced for first reading by this Attorney General on December 17, 1990. I ask, what could possibly have taken this Attorney General almost a full year to bring these bills forward? They are bills that were endorsed by all parties in the previous Legislature, endorsed by all stakeholders in the justice system as being desirable and good. In fact, it is as good to see the parliamentary assistant speak with such conviction on these bills. What an improvement they will be to the administration of justice. I think that is a compliment to the previous government and previous research that has been done in the justice system in Ontario.

Since we are talking simultaneously about Bill 28 and Bill 29, I also want to make a few comments about Bill 29 and the funding of parties to class proceedings. Again, it raises the issue of this government not dealing with issues on a comprehensive basis. In the last Parliament, the 34th Parliament, I moved an amendment to the Intervenor Funding Project Act to provide for intervenor funding for appropriate groups before the Ontario Municipal Board on major planning matters, and the NDP members in the last Parliament all voted and spoke in favour of that particular amendment. That amendment would give stakeholders in communities across the province the right to apply for intervenor funding on major matters, planning matters—and environmental matters, for that matter—before the Ontario Municipal Board, and in the last Parliament the NDP members supported that amendment.

That amendment was moved again in this Parliament, the identical amendment which the Minister of the Environment had supported previously and which the Minister of Financial Institutions, another member of the cabinet, had supported and spoken in favour of, and in this Parliament this government voted against that amendment. That amendment would have done in many ways exactly what Bill 29 does, that is, give additional access to people and provide means of funding—not provincial government money—of intervenors before the Ontario Municipal Board.

Once again, there is the issue of funding appropriate class groups before a court or the Ontario Municipal Board or tribunals. When the Minister of the Environment was in opposition, she moved intervenor funding for all boards and commissions. In fact, she and her government voted against supporting it only to the Ontario Municipal Board several months ago.

We are talking here about streamlining the process. We are talking about access not only to courts but to administrative tribunals. On the one hand, this government is trying to take credit for this bill which in fact was initiated by the previous government; on the other hand, it is voting against a very sensible amendment to the Intervenor Funding Project Act which would have given people in our communities much more access to the Ontario Municipal Board, which really is a semi-judicial body that acts very much like a court.

In conclusion, I want to say that we certainly support these two bills, which make a lot of sense in streamlining the judicial process. I am only sorry that, with respect to Bill 29, it was not married with the overall issue of providing intervenor funding on a much broader basis in Ontario society.

Mr Harnick: I want to begin by saying that we will be supporting these bills. I regret the fact that it has taken 11 months, almost to the day, to get these bills to second reading. They first appeared before this Legislature on December 17, 1990. I think it bears going back and seeing what has happened in terms of the justice system over the past year.

I remind you, Mr Chair, because I do not want you to think I am going to get off topic, as the parliamentary assistant so ably indicated, we are talking here about access to justice. This bill provides access to justice. I want to take a look back over the course of history in the last year to talk about what this government has done regarding access to justice. Since this bill arrived in this Legislature, we have seen the Askov case come and go, and 40,000 cases were dismissed from the primarily provincial courts in the last year. That is not what I call access to justice. That is what I call a travesty for the judicial system, a travesty for the law enforcement system and a travesty for victims.

What was the government's reaction to the fact that 40,000 cases had been denied access to justice? Their reaction was to quickly spend $50 million and to try to resurrect the justice system in this province overnight. I think they have exhausted their budget in terms of access-to-justice legislation for the balance of this term. I think that more and more every day because I see that now they are trying to reduce the budget of the Ministry of the Attorney General. They have spent $50 million; they are now reducing their budget. There is nothing left to provide access to justice for the people of this province.

They spent $50 million, but what has it done in terms of the city of Ottawa, for instance? I had a phone call from a crown attorney in Ottawa today. He said to me he had a case for me to read and provided me with a case, the Court of Appeal decision talking about Askov. I have it here somewhere among all these papers; I will probably find it when I am finished. But what this case enumerated was the fact that the city of Ottawa is approximately, person for person, the same size as the city of Winnipeg. The city of Winnipeg has 28 judges serving its provincial courts; the city of Ottawa has 10. That is why cases in the Ottawa jurisdiction continue to be tossed out of court. The government's knee-jerk reaction of quickly spending $50 million has not solved the problems of the Askov case. The backlog was initially cleared, but the backlog is developing again in the city of Ottawa. I suspect that the city of Ottawa is not alone in that regard. Access to justice has been denied. It will continue to be denied because the government has blown the budget in terms of helping the people of this province in regard to access to justice.

What other symptoms do we have? I think it is interesting. There is a judge by the name of David Cole who was appointed by this government after the Askov case, I believe. Judge Cole is a judge of the provincial court, and he sits in Scarborough. A year after the Askov case came out, he described what he thought it was like going to work. As he passes the gold bust of Elvis Presley that serves as his doorstep, the bearded judge says he feels like he is going into a sausage factory.

I think that if ever the Attorney General of this province should start to worry about the state of justice in this province, it is when one of his own appointments describes going to work as akin to going to a sausage factory. This judge must be saying to himself: "Why did I do this? I used to go out and practise law. I ran a practice and I helped people. Now I have moved from there, in being elevated to the bench, but in reality I have been elevated to the sausage factory." If that does not sound a warning to the Attorney General, if that does not shock the Attorney General, nothing will. But what do we see happening here? We see nothing happening by way of access to justice.

I also want to refer members to what the Chief Justice of Ontario says about the justice system in this province and what he says about access to justice.

An hon member: Who is that?

Mr Harnick: That is Mr Justice Callaghan. I am now quoting from the Toronto Star of July 17, 1991:

"Ontario's court system is a failure, the province's Chief Justice says.

"The main problem is that bureaucrats are funding and controlling the courts, Chief Justice Frank Callaghan said in a speech obtained by the Star.

"Judges as a group have lost their independence, he said. Callaghan says it's ludicrous that Attorney General Howard Hampton—the province's chief prosecutor—and his officials should be controlling the purse-strings of the legal system, courtroom space and judges' workloads.

"The result is that a person's right to a fair and speedy trial may be in trouble, he warned.

"Control of the courts should be taken away from the government and put in the hands of the judiciary, said Callaghan, Chief Justice of the Ontario Court (General Division).

"The integrity of the legal system does not depend solely on the integrity of each individual judge," he said. "It also depends on the ability of the citizen to come before the independent judge and receive his or her judgement.

"Should your opponent (the Attorney General) control your court system?" he asked litigation lawyers at a meeting of the Advocates' Society.

"Callaghan made his hard-hitting remarks in a speech after a society dinner in Toronto on June 20. He went on to criticize the province for putting a 'top-heavy bureaucracy with no legal experience in charge of hiring and firing courtroom staff, deciding how much money the court system should get, where cases should be heard and what hours the court should sit.

"In an interview yesterday, Hampton said some of Callaghan's concerns 'are worth talking about.'

For God's sake, this is the Chief Justice of the province saying the system of justice in this province is a failure and the Attorney General has the audacity to say that some of his concerns "are worth talking about." Where are we going? We are talking here about access to justice.

The article goes on to quote a Toronto criminal lawyer by the name of John Rosen. I can tell this House that I personally know John Rosen. I do not think there is a better criminal lawyer in this country. I do not think there is a person who knows the criminal justice system better than John Rosen does, and here he says that "anyone involved in the system" knows what Justice Callaghan is talking about.

"I think there's a lot of truth to what he says," Rosen said in an interview yesterday. "Can you believe in this day and age the court system is not on computer?" Rosen asked, offering an example of the government's ineptitude.

"Callaghan pointed to the way the Supreme Court of Canada is managed as a model. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court appoints a registrar whose job it is to run the court. The registrar reports directly to Chief Justice Antonio Lamer."

I put it to this government that the legal profession knows what is going on. The lawyers who practise in the courts know what is going on and they know that access to justice in this province no longer exists. We have an Attorney General who is totally and completely out of touch with what is going on. Access to justice is something that the Attorney General pays lipservice to.

I would like to go on and relate some of the other symptoms of the fact that the justice system is breaking down and that there is no access to justice.

In the Small Claims Court, we have a situation where we have a $3,000 maximum limit in Metropolitan Toronto outside of Metropolitan Toronto we have a $1,000 unit. That started out as an experiment. It started when the former Attorney General, Mr McMurtry, had a vision to expand the Small Claims Court. The Liberal government that followed that Conservative government never moved to change that system or to evaluate that experiment.

This government we now have completely ignores the small claims courts. They have now become part of the General Division of the Ontario Court of Justice, and the Attorney General stood in this Legislature and told me that he has no control. Well, he does have control. He can amend the Courts of Justice Act and he can create a Small Claims Court that will provide access for the citizens of this province.

We now have a Small Claims Court that has eight full-time judges. We used to have a Small Claims Court that had 13 judges. These judges do not even have judicial immunity. We have in excess of 2,000 cases a month being initiated in the small claims courts, yet the system is breaking down. The judges are not protected, the complement of judges is not complete, and we have an Attorney General who has stood in this Legislature and said he cannot do anything about it. I say to this House that the commitment of this government to access to justice is nothing more than lip service.

The same thing is true when we talk about the new Ontario Court of Justice. We have overworked judges in that court, and the civil courts are no longer operating with any efficiency whatsoever. Preliminary motions in the Ontario Court of Justice, or in the predecessor to the Ontario Court of Justice, the Supreme Court of Ontario, were handled by masters. The court then merged and became twice the size. The number of masters remains the same. The judges do not have time to hear the preliminary motions in the court. All the motions come before the masters. The masters do not have the manpower and they do not have the resources to be able to move the cases along. When the cases stall at the level of the masters, they cannot get on to trial. They tend to back up and the courts become clogged.

What did the Attorney General tell me when I asked him about this problem during question period? He said, "There's nothing I can do." With respect, he can amend the Courts of Justice Act. We gave third reading today to a bill that provided crown attorneys the opportunity to be involved in exchange programs here and in other jurisdictions. The Attorney General can bring in a bill amending the Courts of Justice Act and do the same thing; bring it before this Legislature and make the position of master of the Ontario Court of Justice a reality. He can appoint masters and we can get the civil cases out of the backlog that is clogging the whole court.

We have other examples of this government's commitment to access to justice. Last week alone, 1,700 parking offences were dismissed by justices of the peace in night court because they had lists in excess of 200 cases to deal with and they could not in any possible way deal with lists that size. They had no choice; they dismissed the whole ticket.

This Attorney General, I suspect, has not set foot in a courtroom since the day he became the Attorney General to see what the state of justice is in this province. The fact that this is happening a year later and we have not seen any action by the Attorney General in these courts is indicative of the fact that access to justice means nothing to this government: not a single initiative by this government in a year and a half to provide access to justice for the public. I hope the Attorney General reads his newspaper because that is probably the only way he is going to realize what the problems are. He has absolutely no connection with the justice system otherwise.

We now see that legal aid is in jeopardy. All of a sudden the government is starting to wonder why legal aid numbers are skyrocketing. This is one of the most fundamental means of access to justice for the public offered in this province. I would think that legal aid, being the cornerstone of access to justice, would be something the Attorney General is intimately familiar with. He has been the Attorney General since September 1990.

Mr Winninger: October 1.

Mr Harnick: I stand corrected. I am advised by the parliamentary assistant that it was October 1, so he has bought himself three weeks in terms of my argument. It sure did not improve him any.

Legal aid is the cornerstone of access to justice in this province. To see that legal aid has been neglected by this government for over a year to the point where it is about to start making such radical changes that we may not have a legal aid program left in this province is appalling. The fact that they are consulting with people but not consulting with the lawyers who do the work within the legal aid system is frightening. The rumours abound.

What do we see coming out of the ministry? The spokesperson for the ministry, Rosemary Hnatiuk, says there is no need to panic. I suspect there is not a right-minded person in this province who is not prepared at this stage to start panicking when he or she watches the incompetence of this government in trying to deal with the justice system. It is positively pathetic.

Let's move on to the next area. I know I am going to have a great deal of time to speak about this later. We have an Attorney General who in an interview with the Lawyers Weekly in excess of a year ago talked about auto insurance and the very important need to restore access to the courts to innocent accident victims. We have heard what this government is going to do. They are going to take rights away from innocent accident victims. They are going to take them away from those who are most badly injured in order, in a camouflaged way, to say they have expanded the right of people to use the courts to claim for their damages when injured in a car accident. They are going to say that is access to justice: hurt those most badly hurt in order to pretend they have kept their promise.

The Attorney General spoke out a year ago. He said he was opposed to not giving innocent accident victims the right to bring actions in court for their damages. I hold the Attorney General to his statement. I hope he can stand up and fight for access to justice for these people. I am not optimistic.

The other area the Attorney General talks about in terms of access to justice is his much-discussed support and custody orders enforcement bill. I have to be very frank. This SCOE bill was something we laboured on last January and February. It finally passed this Legislature. We were taunted by the Attorney General because he wanted it passed quickly. He felt it was not passed quickly enough. Is it up and running yet? It is not up and running. The reason it is not up and running is that the government is using the people who are owed money, the people who need access to justice most in this province, women and children, and deferring the implementation of the SCOE bill till next year so that it can meet financial obligations in the present budget that is before this House, that pathetic $9.7-billion budget. They are using those people to try to reach their targets. I think every person on that side of the Legislature should be positively ashamed.

I will go on talking about access to justice. The Attorney General showed up a couple of weeks ago and told us the government was about to spend $1 million to reach people who were in default on support payments to their spouses and their children. "We are now going to get into a $1-million advertising campaign. If we advertise and spend the $1 million, we are going to get those people to pay." Nothing could be more ludicrous. Those deadbeats are not going to pay. They are not paying now and they are not going to pay because they see an ad on television. That is not going to make them pay.

What is the effect of that $1-million expenditure? I am now quoting from the Law Times dated October 21 to October 27, 1991:

"As well as saving money by delaying legal aid fee increases, the ministry has lopped off $850,000 from the support and custody enforcement branch's budget. That amount was designated for hiring staff to start changes to the way support payments are collected and remitted. The plan involving deductions of support payments from paycheques was to have begun this year but has now been put off until after the start of the new fiscal year next April.

"That cut is ironic, inasmuch as Hampton criticized former Attorney General Ian Scott for lax enforcement of the current support payment program. As well, Hampton's first bill after being appointed last year proposed the direct deduction plan.

"Lawyer Fran Kiteley, a well-respected family law lawyer, stated she was disappointed by the news, saying: 'It is a disaster trying to work and get any results from SCOE. From my perspective, they appear to be terribly overworked, and the $850,000 that has now been lopped off their budget is $850,000 so that they can hire people to chase the deadbeats who don't pay for their support, who don't meet their support obligations.'"

It is appalling, and at the same time, what is the Attorney General doing? He is spending $1 million, and what is he doing with that $1 million? He is putting ads on television to say to the deadbeats: "Pay up. Please, pay up." Is he kidding anybody? He is taking away $850,000 so that people can be hired to chase the deadbeats, and then he is spending $1 million so that he can put ads on television to do public relations for his ministry and for himself. I think that is pathetic. It is shameful, and again, it shows that the Attorney General knows nothing about access to justice. He has no intention of implementing any programs related to access to justice, and the man does not know what he is doing. This whole ministry is breaking down.

I might add that when I pick up the Lawyers Weekly and I see articles about how the Attorney General and the deputy minister do not speak with one another, how they are fighting with one another, how they do not agree with one another, I wonder. Somebody had better start listening to somebody in that ministry, because the system of justice in this province is breaking down.

I suspect that save and except for probably having breakfast with the parliamentary assistant, the Attorney General does not speak to him either. I tell the Attorney General that he had better start to use the people who know what is going on and he had better start to rely on them. He cannot do it by himself, because what he is accomplishing by trying to do it by himself is absolutely nothing. He is taking this province in a backwards direction we will never recover from as far as the system of justice goes.

The other concern I have, and I raise it in terms of the context of access to justice, is that we now have to appoint a new assistant deputy minister. The Premier writes to the Attorney General and says "Hire Mr Code," because Clayton Ruby sent a letter to the Premier that said "Hire Mr Code." It is not the first time Clayton Ruby has directed the Premier in terms of the system of justice in this province. He had a scheme a while ago that was going to promote fast sentencing. That scheme never got off the ground, because when it was leaked to the public, the public was not happy about it.

Who is running the show in the Ministry of the Attorney General? Is it Clayton Ruby? Is it the Premier, who every now and then has to call the Attorney General to tell him to do something? Or is it the Attorney General?

I tell the Attorney General that he has a deputy minister who understands what the system of justice is all about. I should please let her tell him what to do and accept what she is telling him so that we do not go back 10 years or 20 years or 30 years. Maybe we should go back 10, 20 or 30 years, when we did not have the demand on the justice system, but surely this Attorney General is totally out of touch with what access to justice is all about.

The other concern I have about access to justice is that the people of my riding, the people of Willowdale in Metropolitan Toronto, have a real concern for what they see happening, for what they read about every single day in the newspapers. They have a concern that in the Metropolitan area we now have the statistics of murders and sexual assaults being given on a daily basis, much the same way as baseball scores. My constituents are concerned that their neighbourhoods are no longer safe to live in and that they are deteriorating with every day. They do not see the Attorney General doing anything to help maintain their communities and the safety and dignity of their lives.

What do they see? I will tell members what they see. They see a court system in disarray. They see a police force that is working overtime to try to keep the streets safe. They see a police force that lays criminal charges. They see criminals attending for trial, going in one door of the courthouse and almost 20 minutes later coming out the other door laughing at the system of justice. There is no longer any system of deterrence left in this province, and without that system of deterrence, my constituents are not safe in their neighbourhoods.

I do not see the Attorney General taking any steps whatsoever to deal with this problem. I have very grave concern for the safety of our neighbourhoods and I have very grave concern that the Attorney General is neglecting the important aspects of life in the Metro area.

The other area of access to justice—I remind you, Mr Speaker, that “access to justice” is the term used by the parliamentary assistant, and that is what this debate is all about—is, what about the victims of crime? What access do they have to justice? I will tell members what this government’s history has been in the last year.

Last February, the standing committee on administration of justice, at the behest of my party and the member for Burlington South, asked for and received 12 hours to debate in committee, pursuant to standing order 123, victims’ rights and what happens to victims who are harmed as a result of a crime occurring. The 12-hour schedule was prepared and witnesses were subpoenaed. They were prepared to attend and to tell the justice committee what they thought the government should be doing about the rights of victims of crime.

On the very day those hearings were supposed to start, what did the Attorney General do? He decided to have a private, closed conference dealing with victims’ rights. He invited all the same witnesses who were supposed to be at the justice committee to come and meet him in private. The effect of that was that he scuttled the whole opportunity to talk about victims’ rights in a public forum and to give the government some guidance about what it should be doing to protect victims of crime.

I remind members again, the context of how I look at this is that victims’ rights are very important at a time when crime is going up every day in the large area of Metro Toronto. To this date, I hear noises from the Attorney General periodically paying lipservice to victims’ rights, but I have not seen a single, solitary, concrete piece of legislation come from this government. This is a government, I might add, that in the past voted for a victims’ bill of rights. In fact, the NDP proposed a victims’ bill of rights when it was in opposition. But what did they do when the member for Burlington South, by way of a private member’s bill, brought a victims’ bill of rights before this Legislature? They voted against it. Where is their commitment to access to justice? They have no such commitment.

It is in this milieu that Bills 28 and 29 finally appear before this Legislature again. It is interesting that in his opening remarks the parliamentary assistant tried to pretend this was an NDP government bill. Nothing could be further from the truth. They could not develop a piece of legislation like this if their lives depended on it. This bill was purely and simply the result of the former Attorney General, the member for St George-St David.

Of interest about this bill is the fact that it was developed by the former Attorney General, not just by consulting. This bill was based not just on consultation but collaboration, something this government should learn, because every time it tries a piece of its own legislation—we have seen it in the labour relations field and we are going to see it again—it says, “We consulted widely.” Well, their definition of consulting is to make a decision and tell people about it afterwards but not ask for their input or opinion.

This bill should teach this government a lesson, and the lesson is that if it wants to get a good piece of legislation before this Legislature, it should not just consult after the fact but make people the real players. They should make those people whom they are consulting with the real players, part of a collaboration process. But this government will never do that, because it does not trust anybody. They only trust people who are within their own ranks. They only trust the big unions. They only trust NDP rank-and-file members. They do not trust anyone from outside their walls. That is why every single piece of legislation they have initiated has been a disaster. Every single piece of legislation they have initiated has had to be changed. I believe this government has no idea about the justice system in this province. They have no idea now, and with every day I am more and more sure that they are going in reverse.

I would like to add a couple of words about Bills 28 and 29. These bills in fact offer a form of access to justice. I recommend to the parliamentary assistant and to the Attorney General to read what the former Attorney General said in the Gazette. I will even provide them with the dates. It is the Gazette, published by the Law Society of Upper Canada, volume 24, number 1, dated March 1990.

The former Attorney General had no illusions about this bill being the be-all and end-all in terms of access to justice. Now I know, once this bill is passed, this government is going to take all the credit for it and is going to use this bill to tell everyone it really believes in access to justice. They are going to stand on every street corner in every town, village and city in this province taking bows for the bill and using it to show that they believe in access to justice. The member for St George-St David said that this bill is not a bill that the public was burning up about. He said quite frankly that it is a bill that will help access to justice in a very limited area. It is not an omnibus bill dealing with access to justice; it is a bill that deals with access to justice in terms of class proceedings.

I would just like to tell anybody who is watching this debate today that when the NDP members are standing on the street corners, taking bows and saying they believe in access to justice because they passed the bill of the member for St George-St David, please do not believe them. They do not believe in access to justice. They are sitting around watching the justice system deteriorate and now they are going to use this to try to say, “We really believe in access to justice.” They do not even know what access to justice is and they do not know what the court system, the judicial system and the law enforcement system in this province entail, despite the fact that they have been the government since September 1990.

Just a word about this bill: It is a good bill. It provides a new system dealing with class action claims. Section 2 of the bill describes what a representative plaintiff is: one who commences proceedings on his or her own behalf and on behalf of members of a class. Under section 3, a defendant faced with two or more actions in which there are common issues can move to have the proceedings certified and a representative plaintiff named, thus eliminating a multiplicity of lawsuits that might have to be defended. Under section 4, any party to a proceeding against two or more defendants may at any stage move to certify the action as a class action. Under that section there will be a motion for certification which is mandatory. The plaintiff who wishes to be certified must move for an order certifying the action as a class proceeding. There is a low threshold test for certification directed to the economic and efficient use of the justice system.

I might add that the idea of certifying and having to show that there is a cause of action is a very important thing, because one of the things we hear when dealing with class action bills is that when this legislation is passed the courts will be running rampant with people trying to bring class actions and that this, in conjunction with contingency fees, is just going to cause an overwhelming surge in litigation in this province. That has not been the effect in the United States, where they have class action bills similar to this, and in the province of Quebec, which has a class action bill similar to this. I think the member for St George-St David, the former Attorney General, has understood quite well what the concerns were. The bill has the mechanisms to prevent that huge surge of litigation.

The bill also sets up a fund to help plaintiffs prosecute an action in so far as disbursements are concerned but not to pay for their legal fees. That is a very significant aspect of this bill. The bill also maintains the same cost provisions we have always had in this province in so far as the costs following the actual success or failure of the litigation are concerned. There is no question when one reads these bills that there is an attempt to bend over backwards to balance the needs of all the litigants—the plaintiffs and the defendants.

For that reason the former Attorney General is to be commended, because he has brought to this Legislature a bill that is significant within the limitations he himself set out. It is not the be-all and the end-all of access to justice, but it is a bill he can certainly be proud of. All the accolades for this bill are deserved by the member for St George-St David, the former Attorney General. This bill had nothing to do with the NDP government, other than the fact that it took it off the shelf and then took one year to bring it here, to get it through second reading. I think that speaks volumes.

I have nothing further to say about this bill at this time. I will be supporting the bill. My party will be supporting the bill. I think that in terms of access to justice, this government has a long way to go, and we had better see some initiatives soon, although I am not optimistic.

The Acting Speaker: Are there questions and/or comments? Seeing none, would the parliamentary assistant have a few closing remarks?

Mr Winninger: The member for Willowdale has brought forward a whole litany of complaints about the justice system, and certainly this is not the forum nor the focus to deal with them in general.

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I thought I heard you ask, before the summing up, whether anyone had any comments about my remarks. No one has any comments about my remarks and now we should be summing up this bill so that we can get it through second reading before the next Christmas comes and goes.

The Acting Speaker: It is not a point of order.

Mr Winninger: As a matter of fact, had I not been interrupted by the member for Willowdale, I would have proceeded to address one of the substantive issues he raised, and that is the one of access to legal aid. Certainly the demands on our legal aid funding will diminish when several individuals can pursue the same cause of action in the form of a class proceeding. Instead of having hundreds of individuals or thousands of individuals applying for legal aid assistance, under the provisions of this bill only one person need apply.

Because of the funding provisions that are contemplated under Bill 29, where a fund has been established to pay for some of these initial disbursements that are required to move forward a class action proceeding, there will no longer may be the same recourse to the severely circumscribed funding that legal aid is able to offer. What is new about this bill? It contemplates court-approved contingency fee arrangements that allow a plaintiff in a class action proceeding to move a case forward, to enter into arrangements with the lawyer which may, to some extent, be contingent on the ultimate success of that proceeding. Even if a plaintiff should lose, there is provision under the fund that is being created that an unsuccessful plaintiff can be indemnified by the fund. The reason that can operate smoothly is that a successful plaintiff will be required to pay back some of the proceeds of the litigation into the fund.

The member for Ottawa West, who has returned to the chamber, raised an interesting point earlier on. He suggested that this government was not paying attention to the issue of intervenor funding. The member for Ottawa West should know that the intervenor funding issue is under review by Professor William Bogart, whose report is expected in January 1992. Both the class proceedings fund and intervenor funding will increase access to justice, but this class proceedings legislation only deals with court actions. Intervenor funding is a matter for administrative tribunals and certainly it would not be appropriate to join it to this particular bill.

As I said, the issue of class proceedings is indeed a separate matter from intervenor funding. I note for those who are interested that there is a first annual conference organized in Quebec City dedicated to the memory of the distinguished former justice of the Supreme Court

Canada, Yves Pratte, also a former director of Air Canada following his retirement from the Supreme Court of Canada. This conference is devoted to class action law both in Ontario and Quebec. This conference, which is to be scheduled right here in Toronto next year, will investigate and examine areas of similarity between Quebec class action and Ontario law. This is an area that shows Quebec and Ontario have a great deal to learn from one another.

I would like to review very briefly the salient highlights of the proposed legislation. This is a procedural change; it is not substantive. It is a very sophisticated procedure.

Mr Chiarelli: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: What we are seeing here today is the parliamentary assistant filibustering his own bill, looking at the clock, trying to fill the time.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order.

Mr Winninger: This is a very sophisticated procedure, hitherto unprecedented in Ontario, that has taken a number of months to refine and to perfect. It has also taken a number of months to establish the fund that will enable class proceedings to move forward on the basis I have described.

Those members on the opposite side of the House who would complain about the delay certainly should be cognizant that this is flagship legislation. It has taken a number of months to carefully design. There is no reason why the members on the opposite side of the House should complain about delay. It is based on the unanimous recommendations of a broadly based advisory committee, as I said, business, environmentalists, consumers, insurers and lawyers.

Finally, I allude once again to the new cost provisions which are certainly precedent-setting, including the fund for disbursements which will no longer deter potential plaintiffs from initiating and proceeding with class action proceedings. There is a new provision that allows lawyers to charge a contingency fee, subject of course to judicial control. Finally, a plaintiff who may lose can be indemnified by the fund. As I said earlier, the plaintiff who wins must give a percentage of the proceeds back to the fund, so this will help to perpetuate the fund and allow other class action litigants access to justice as well.

In conclusion, the kind of enlargement of the access to justice called for by the members for Ottawa West and Willowdale and previously by the member for St George-St David, who deserves no small credit for his involvement in helping to design the contents of the bill, has now been met by the provisions of this legislation. On that note, I move that this bill be referred to the standing committee on administration of justice.

The Acting Speaker: We have dealt with Bills 28 and 29 simultaneously although they are two separate bills. We will have two separate questions.

Mr Winninger has moved second reading of Bill 28. Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker: Mr Winninger has moved second reading of Bill 29. Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

Bills ordered for standing committee on administration of justice.

The House adjourned at 1753.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Table des matières

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi qu'à celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1 page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday 19 November 1991

The House met at 1330.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr Cleary: While the Ministry of Labour currently lists 16 help centres in the province, I am concerned that eastern Ontario is not being serviced.

The Minister of Labour is aware that Cornwall and surrounding area has been exceptionally hard hit by the economic downturn. One local survey has indicated that 75% of the area's unemployed are between the ages of 45 and 64.

As the help centres, targeted at the older worker, offer services such as job placement, personal counselling, vocational testing, job training and contact with local industries, it is clear that Cornwall would be an obvious choice. In fact, a number of local residents have been attempting to secure a help centre for Cornwall for over two years.

I would like to take this opportunity to implore the Ministry of Labour to respond to the needs of eastern Ontario's unemployed workers and establish a permanent centre in the Cornwall area.

WASTE MANAGEMENT

Mr Cousens: Today we begin debate on Bill 143, an act respecting the management of waste in the greater Toronto area. It is another kind of act, an act of desperation by this government. They have promoted the 3Rs, which we all agree with—reduce, reuse, recycle—but let's talk about the 3Rs they have forgotten about.

Recovery: If only this government could understand that there are other ways of recovering energy from waste. Recycling is an option they have excluded and thrown out. They have ruled out other options that allow there to be a true recovery from waste such as we are seeing in Japan at garbage dumps.

Realism: What is the realistic time frame for this government to start to deal with the problems, the realism that deals with the cost of land in Metro versus the cost of land in Kirkland Lake, a willing host for garbage? What about the realism that has to do with really finding sites in the Metro area and in the regions around Metro?

How about rights? That is the third R. The first R is recovery, the second R is realism, and what about the rights of people in Ontario, where this act of desperation by this government is going to take away personal rights of people to their property rights? It is going to take away the rights of municipalities, which will lose the right to appeal. They will lose their rights under the Municipal Act. They will lose their rights under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

We are talking about the disappearance of fundamental rights and a government that needs to learn three new things: recovery, realism and rights. It is high time they started to listen.

ALCOHOL AND DRUG TREATMENT

Mr Mammoliti: On behalf of the task group of parliamentary assistants, I have delivered to the minister responsible for the provincial anti-drug strategy a report entitled Caring For Each Other: The People of Ontario Respond to Alcohol and Drug Treatment Problems. The task group was formed to seek public response to the recommendations contained in the final report of the Advisory Committee on Drug Treatment: A Vision for the '90s.

Between February and April, we held forums in 13 communities across the province and received 275 submissions from concerned individuals, agencies and institutions. These people welcomed the recommendations of the Vision document. Many viewed it as a blueprint for change.

Our report of these consultations supports our government's recent announcement of a $9.4-million expansion of addiction services in Ontario. As the report bears out, the public and the government are in agreement. The flow of a vast amount of money to for-profit health centres in the United States must be stemmed. At the same time, services in Ontario should be expanded, and can be, for much less than the cost of US care. Our government is committed to both.

The report also gives the government a tool for the future. It can help in our assessment of programs already announced and it can be used to assist further reforms as fiscal resources become available. Additionally, this report speaks to our government's commitment to public consultation.

We are pleased to share this report with members during Drug Awareness Week. We are hopeful this release will help bring greater attention to an issue that has a profound impact on our society.

HAZARDOUS WASTE

Mr McClelland: On November 7, I brought to the attention of the Minister of Energy the fact that a substance containing PCBs exceeding provincial guidelines had been disposed of in the Keele Valley landfill. The minister was given the certificate number and the date the material was transported through the streets of Toronto. Ministry of the Environment staff knew of the incident, as did the landfill managers.

The Minister of Energy told the House that the facts would be checked and that he would confer with his colleagues on this matter and take appropriate action with them. He ended his response with the following lofty statement: "Situations like this will not be tolerated in Ontario, if in fact that is the case."

It has been two weeks and there has been no indication that the government has done anything to address the fact that these PCBs are there and the threat that they are raising by being knowingly exposed to the environment. I have raised this issue in the House again today because when it was raised earlier, neither the Minister of Natural Resources nor the Minister of the Environment was in the House, and I want to be sure that they are aware of the situation.

I remind the House that the waste water, runoff and leachate collection system is connected to the municipal sanitary sewer system, which has its ultimate outlet into Lake Ontario. I would remind the minister responsible for the GTA and the Minister of Natural Resources that Keele Valley is located at the head of the Don River.

It is nice to know that the Minister of Energy feels the situation should not be tolerated. The people of Ontario and members of this House want to know what has been done and what is going to be done.

LABOUR LEGISLATION

Mr J. Wilson: Eleven days ago the Minister of Labour unveiled his proposed labour relations blueprint that will ultimately wipe out any hopes for Ontario to climb out of the current economic recession. Since the minister's announcement, I have received several inquiries from business people in my riding who are deeply concerned that this government either does not care or does not understand the extent to which Ontario's economic future is in jeopardy because of the NDP's plan to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Collingwood's industrial base has been devastated by this recession, and the minister's labour relations agenda will only serve to further imperil the town. One construction firm which has been in Collingwood for some 62 years doubts it will make it to year 63 if the Labour Relations Act is amended along the lines proposed by the government. The owner of this business writes:

"I could not believe that it was possible to make the Labour Relations Act worse, but this is incredible. If these recommendations are approved and another organizing attempt by another union was to be made on this company, I would have to very seriously consider whether or not to continue business in this province under your government."

If this Collingwood construction firm pulls up its stakes and moves to another jurisdiction, the government will have to explain to some 175 workers just exactly how its Labour Relations Act changes helped workers in Ontario.

This legislation will not help workers and it will not help employers. It will do nothing to improve business-labour relations in Ontario. The only investment it will generate is south of the border and in other provinces.

BASEBALL HALL OF FAME

Mr O'Connor: In the difficult times in which we find ourselves today, it is important to take note of the positive steps being taken by smaller communities in attempting to improve their situation.

I was very pleased to see it publicly announced recently that Stouffville is bidding for the Baseball Hall of Fame to be located in that town. Stouffville is an enthusiastic baseball town and would warmly welcome the many visitors the Baseball Hall of Fame would attract. Stouffville is very close to Toronto, where the Baseball Hall of Fame is currently located. Space at the Stouffville Fitness Centre is now immediately available for occupation. Once the town has found a new site for municipal offices, the Baseball Hall of Fame would take over the current town offices, making the town square a focal point for the entire community.

The business community in Stouffville is very excited about the benefits this new tourist attraction offers. The Baseball Hall of Fame would offer a much-needed economic boost to the area and a great opportunity for the town to become more visible in the greater Toronto area.

I strongly support this bid for the Baseball Hall of Fame. I think it will add terrifically to the community. The community has terrific support for this, and I support it wholeheartedly.

ATTENDANCE OF PREMIER

Mr Daigeler: Mr Speaker, do you believe the members for York South, as opposition leader, would have tolerated the Premier's absence from the province for more than two weeks while Parliament was in session? By now he would have had several fits of apoplexy at this unprecedented snub of the Legislature.

Ostensibly the Premier is overseas drumming up business for Ontario—and the Deputy Premier better listen. I have no problem with that, yet he could have easily done that during constituency week. Why did the Premier fail to return today? Is he afraid to face the House at Queen's Park because he cannot boost business right here in Ontario?

What is keeping business away from Ontario is the Premier's own misguided priorities. With his labour and rent control reforms, he is making life miserable for employers and investors. Rather than reduce government regulations and the tax burden, he plans to increase unilaterally the power of unions and to halt rental construction through his cap on capital cost allowances.

It is time for the Premier to face the music at Queen's Park, lest the voters play him a very disagreeable tune at the next election.

JOHN COUCH

Mrs Witmer: Remembrance Day ceremonies in my community took on a special relevance and significance this year. This year the men, women and children in Kitchener-Waterloo took time not only to remember those who had died defending their country in war but also to pay tribute to the courage and self-sacrifice of a native son, Captain John Couch, whose heroic efforts to help those who survived the crash of his Hercules transport plane in the high Arctic resulted in the supreme sacrifice, his own tragic death.

Captain Couch died of exposure to the Arctic cold after working feverishly for about 24 hours to help those who had been injured. The fact that 13 of the 18 people aboard the flight survived is due in no small part to Captain Couch's valiant efforts. To help ensure we never forget his self-sacrifice and concern for others, the Waterloo branch of the Royal Canadian Legion will provide a $600 bursa-each year from its poppy fund to Captain Couch's high school, Bluevale Collegiate Institute in Waterloo.

At this time, on behalf of the members of this House, I would like to extend our sincere sympathy and our condolences to Captain Couch's widow, Carol, to his daughters, Melissa and Rebecca, and to the other members of his family. As Canon Ladds said in his homily at the funeral: John was always the kind to put people first.... The example of his heroic courage will remain as a legacy."

SHELTER FOR WOMEN

Mr Winninger: I rise in the House today to recognize the work of the Atênlos Native Family Violence Services in London, Ontario. This recognition is particularly appropriate since November is Wife Assault Prevention Month, and the work of Atênlos in building a caring community to help with wife assault among first nation peoples is year-round.

Yesterday the Ontario Association of Interval and Transition Houses identified housing for battered women as a primary need. It stressed that shelters should be administered at the grass-roots level: run by women who are survivors of family violence.

Atênlos currently provides confidential crisis and support counselling to first nations people in the London area, 80% of whom have been emotionally, physically or verbally abused. This coming spring in the riding of London South, Atênlos will officially open London's first seven-day native women's shelter. Some 14 to 18 native women and children will receive and build the support they need. The Ministry of Community and Social Services will contribute substantially to the operating cost of this shelter.

We often talk about native self-government within a constitutional context. It is also appropriate to see urban native people providing a place of refuge for urban native women as an act of self-government. I laud this initiative and urge the support of all parties in recognizing the need for grass-roots native family violence services in responding to the distinct needs and safety issues of native women and children.

Mrs Caplan: I rise today on a point of personal privilege and I would ask that the Speaker intervene to secure an apology for me.

Shortly before members' statements began, the Minister of Health made a statement in the press gallery that the former minister had made a decision, although not communicated, regarding a request from Hemophilia Ontario. The minister neither discussed this with me prior to her statement nor had any way of knowing what had taken place. She was incorrect and I request an apology.

The Speaker: That is not a point of privilege.

VISITOR

The Speaker: I invite all members to welcome to our midst this afternoon the former member for Ottawa Centre, Mr Richard Patten, seated in the members' gallery next.

TAX REVENUES

Hon Mr Laughren: Last week, the province was informed by the federal government of a decline in personal income tax revenues estimated at about $2.1 billion, most of which occurred in the 1990 tax year. Because we are eligible for various federal adjustments, we must make up a net loss of $670 million in this fiscal year. This afternoon I am providing the people of Ontario with details on the actions we are taking to manage this change in our revenue picture.

This revenue loss is yet another example of the price we are paying for the recession with its plant closings, job losses and overall weak economic performance. The recession Ontario experienced has been aggravated by federal government fiscal and economic policy. Our revenue shortfall demonstrates that its effects are deeper than we anticipated, with the result that they will be felt for quite some time to come.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Laughren: I know the Conservative opposition does not like any references to its federal counterparts, but it is unavoidable.

Mr Cousens: Don't talk about the feds.

Hon Mr Laughren: I will not talk about them. I will try to avoid mentioning the member's federal cousins.

Instead of implementing policies to counter the recession, the federal government clung to a high dollar and a high real interest rate policy which deepened and prolonged the recession and its effects on people, businesses and governments. This legacy, combined with free trade and the GST, weakened consumer and business confidence when the opposite was needed.

The recession hit Ontario hardest. We have absorbed more than 80% of all recession-related job losses in Canada. As a result, more than one million Ontarians are now on social assistance. This number is expected to grow another 20% next year, in part because of reduced unemployment insurance benefits.

The increased costs for social assistance combined with the federal government's policy which caps its contribution to this program have had an enormous impact on Ontario's budget. This policy of limiting federal contributions will cost Ontario an additional $1.6 billion this fiscal year. This cost will continue to grow unless the federal policy is changed.

Therefore, we are urgently pursuing with the federal government a retroactive change in its policy of capping contributions to Ontario for social assistance payments. I am tabling correspondence with the federal Minister of Finance which seeks his co-operation in addressing our concerns and in participating meaningfully in the renewal of Ontario's economy.

We are also expressing interest in working with the federal government and the provinces to address the shortcomings of current economic and revenue forecasting. It is imperative that we improve the information available to all provinces to undertake effective fiscal planning. I hope to be meeting soon with the federal minister to discuss our position.

I have indicated that federal adjustment payments will help to offset some of the revenue loss. We anticipate receiving $585 million through the stabilization plan. Another $585 million comes through adjustments to the established programs financing for health and post-secondary education, which automatically take place because of the personal income tax revenue change. We will also take advantage of the opportunity, through the federal-provincial tax agreement, to make $300 million in payments in the next fiscal year.

These offsets total $1.4 billion. That leaves Ontario with a net shortfall of $670 million which we will manage this fiscal year in order to meet our budget plan.

Last week, I said we intended to manage the personal income tax revenue loss to meet the financial targets of our current budget plan so we can continue to build on its anti-recessionary strategy and maintain support for Ontarians hurt by the recession. I am reaffirming this commitment today. To do this, we have initiated a number of measures.

Effective immediately, all ministries are rigorously reviewing their discretionary spending. Until April 1992, there will be a freeze on the purchase of vehicles, furnishing and consulting services, except in exceptional situations. This action is in addition to the $100-million reduction in ministry operating budgets which I announced in my October 2 statement. Through it we are estimating a further saving of $50 million.

We are reviewing our capital spending program and will reduce it by $200 million. The funding for projects affected will be absorbed within our capital program next year so they can proceed. In taking this measure, I note that our commitment to Ontario's infrastructure remains strong, with capital expenditures totalling almost $4 billion this year, the highest level ever for Ontario. Furthermore, the $700 million dedicated to our anti-recessionary program remains intact.

Other offsets to the shortfall include additional revenues. The sale of the province's share in SkyDome will contribute a minimum of $150 million to help address our deficit target.

As well, additional revenues under the established programs financing will provide us with a further $200 million this year. This amount reflects new support for temporary residents, higher population estimates and increased cash transfers associated with earlier downward revisions in corporate income tax revenues.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Laughren: I will speak a little more quietly because I do not want the members opposite to have to yell to be heard when they are interjecting.

Finally, we estimate that we will receive $70 million through the sale of assets such as surplus properties and the receipt of dividends from crown corporations.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Would the Treasurer take his seat. With the co-operation of the House, we can hear the remainder of the statement and any other statements which are to be made this afternoon. There will be an opportunity, under the standing orders, for both opposition parties to respond.

Hon Mr Laughren: We are confident these measures will enable us to manage this unforeseen revenue shortfall this year. We will monitor closely our revenue and expenditure projections and take further actions if required.

We must be realistic about the future. Ontario is facing a serious fiscal challenge. It requires that we all work together to maintain programs and services and to build a strong, sustained economic recovery. But the personal income tax revenue loss has very significant implications for next year's budget planning.

Based on this year's experience, we currently estimate Ontario's gross personal income tax revenues will be between $1 billion to $2 billion lower than previously projected for next year. There will be offsets to this decline and we intend to deal fully with this pressure in our 1992 budget in order to meet next year's targets. Furthermore, we have put into place a series of strategies which will now begin to address this fiscal challenge head on.

1. My colleagues and I over the past several months have been communicating with our partners in the broader public sector about the serious fiscal problems we are facing and seeking their co-operation in a number of areas. On behalf of the Chair of Management Board, I am tabling a letter he has written to our agencies, boards and commissions asking that they adopt a salary freeze for all executive positions, just as we have put into place for our senior managers, political staff and members of the Legislature.

In addition, we have been speaking to all our major transfer payment partners about the need to implement similar measures in their organizations. We are also asking that consideration be given by all to the seriousness of the fiscal situation and the importance of negotiating lower wage settlements throughout the public sector.

2. Given the financial pressures we face, we must be realistic about our ability to increase funding levels to our transfer payment partners next year. In the measures announced today and those which were outlined in my October 2 statement, we have been able to minimize the impact of fiscal pressures on our partners next year.

Clearly we must manage within an environment of reduced financial flexibility. I am indicating today that it will be very difficult to significantly increase funding to our transfer partners. Thus, any increases in transfer payments for 1992-93 will be very limited.

We recognize the difficult circumstances our transfer partners are facing and we will continue to work closely with them through these difficult times and ensure effective levels of service.

We will endeavour to get full information to them as early as possible for their planning purposes. I hope to provide our transfer partners with the government's early direction on major transfer payments by the end of this calendar year.

3. As members are aware, policy and program expenditure reviews are now under way as part of our 1992 budget nning. These reviews are being co-ordinated by the new asury board. Programs and services are being scruti- ed for their effectiveness, cost-efficiency and consis- cy with this government's priorities of economic ewal and social justice.

We are committed through these reviews to achieve st savings and to ensure that spending meets the priori- s of government. The reviews are critical to determining at government does and does not do in the future. They l help to direct its reshaping, make it more effective and ure that priorities are implemented.

4. Through the Management Board of Cabinet, we will accelerating our ongoing program of increasing the effi- cy and effectiveness of the public service. A number of roaches are being considered. We are looking at admin- rative processes, some restructuring and changes in the rganization and operations of government. In addition, ough attrition and streamlining, a range of positions at levels will be eliminated in order to meet the objectives this strategy. Changes which are made will be in the rit of co-operation and participation with employees and rgaining agents. We will carry out our role as employer h integrity. This measure, while contributing to some ings this year, will have its biggest impact in the next cal year.

These are difficult fiscal and economic choices to ke. They can best be determined by working together to n and implement solutions. Pre-budget consultations, ich will begin in January, will enable Ontarians to par- ticipate in the process of finding solutions together to ad- ss the fiscal and economic challenges we face.

This government is committed to leading and acting; to rking actively with labour, business, communities and er governments to build a sustained economic recovery d to secure our goals of economic renewal and social ice. We have introduced and will be introducing other islative and program proposals which will support in- tment, job creation and training opportunities. These iatives will be the basis of Ontario's economic renewal d the restructuring of our economy. They are the basis of agenda for getting Ontario working again.

The measures I have detailed will support the manage- nt of our fiscal pressures. They will enable us to meet b budget plan, continue its anti-recession package, build tategy and build towards recovery. We are strengthening position to meet the challenges of our next budget and continue to pursue a strategy of economic renewal and ater equity and fairness for Ontario.

RESPONSES

TAX REVENUES

Mr Phillips: I say to the Treasurer that today's an- nouncement is very serious, very troubling and a cause of ne considerable concern to us. As far as we are con- ned, it is a government that has lost its way. This is not first statement the Treasurer has made. Many people d the budget was wrong. This government said it was only government in this country that was right, that everybody else was wrong. That was six months ago. A month ago the Treasurer said he had a $670-million prob- lem. Today we see another $600-million problem.

I can tell the Treasurer that the people of this province are troubled and extremely concerned about this an- nouncement today. They are worried about the problem because it was six weeks ago that I said in the House to the Treasurer, if he remembers: "I think there is a problem with the personal income tax. Look into it." We were as- sured there was not a problem then. Six weeks later, we see a $2-billion problem. We said six weeks ago we thought there was a problem here.

The solutions: One is that I will ask the Treasurer to check carefully into the fiscal stabilization plan. He says he is going to get $585 million out of that. We want to have some assurances that he has checked with the federal govern- ment and that this has some sense of reality. Certainly when we look at the fiscal stabilization program, we are not at all sure he is going to get $585 million out of that.

We see a government that has lost its control, lost its way, and frankly, if I can say this to the Treasurer, is begin- ning to lose the confidence of the people of this province. No one mistrusts the Treasurer's own personal integrity, but what we are seeing is a financial plan that is out of control. People are starting to worry, "Where will it end?"

On the fiscal stabilization program where he is calling for $585 million, we raise the question today, and we would like some assurance soon in the House that this has some sense of coming true. On provincial sales tax reve- nue, we have said before there is some concern about the numbers he has in his budget. This would have been the time for the Treasurer to come forward and say, "We've reviewed them, we've taken a look at them and perhaps they're too high."

Fundamentally, the Treasurer is giving us a plan we are not certain he is going to be able to stick with for the rest of the year. We are getting it one step at a time. We said the budget was wrong. We raised questions with the Treasurer in October, if he remembers, and said, "Will the provincial income tax be on?" He said, "Yes, we think it'll be fine." There is a $2.1-billion problem there.

It is interesting. As one of my colleagues asked, where is the Premier today? We are facing an economic problem here in the province. The unemployment rate went up sub- stantially a week ago, and where is the Premier? He has chosen to be out of the country.

The concern we have is that the Treasurer has now put on himself about a $2-billion problem for next year, unless I have his numbers wrong; he is saying a $1-billion to $2-billion shortfall in revenue next year from the projec- tions he had previously. I think that is correct. I believe he delayed about $350 million in his October 2 announce- ment, and in this announcement there is another $300 mil- lion. It is either a $1.5-billion or $2.5-billion problem that he has transferred to next year, if I am not mistaken in his numbers. This year we have a problem. This is the third announcement he has now made, and we are worried that this announcement will not hold and that he has created a substantial problem for himself next year.

Our concern is that we would like to see the full picture. We did not see the full picture in October. We are worried about this fiscal stabilization program. We are not sure that is going to come true, and we now see for next year a $1.5-billion to $2.5-billion problem he did not anticipate.

All of this, I say to the Treasurer, is creating an element out there that, first, is making it difficult to have confidence in the government's fiscal plan, and second, the real solution is to get the economy going. Believe me, that is the solution. But when people look at a government that cannot manage its fiscal affairs, they begin to lose confidence in its willingness to invest in jobs and job creation in this province. One goes hand in glove with the other.

As I said at the outset, we are troubled by this announcement. We predicted much of this might come true. We asked him to look at it, and indeed it did come true. Frankly, we are concerned that more bad news may be ahead that we have yet to see. We would like to have seen that today so we could have the full financial picture for the people of this province, so that they could have some confidence this government knows what it is doing in its fiscal affairs.

Mr Harris: I am really shocked today. We heard some rumours coming out of the NDP caucus that this was going to be a really serious announcement, that there were going to be some serious cuts, that there was going to be some sweat and blood and tears as a result of the Treasurer's sweat and blood and tears over the last weekend.

I have looked at this announcement. In the way of cutting their $53-billion expenditures, I see a 13.7% increase. I see a plan that says, "I hope, maybe by reviewing, we might be able to reduce expenditures by $50 million," or 0.1% off a 13.7% increase. That is all that is in the Treasurer's statement today. It is not even there. It is, "I hope that by working together and reviewing we can cut 0.1% out of our 13.7% increase we brought in the budget." That is what this announcement is today.

When we examine it and look at $200 million of deferrals to next year, that makes the problem even worse next year. Instead of taking the $150 million from the SkyDome and reducing our deficit, he says, "I'm going to use that." That means another $150-million problem next year. We see the feds are giving him $1.5 billion more and then another $200 million. We appreciate that from the feds. He says $70 million from a fire sale of assets in the middle of a recession.

No company, no family, no business would ever do that unless they were bankrupt, without examining every other alternative. Can members imagine a family or a company, in the middle of a recession, saying, "We're going to carry on giving 16% increases in total salaries to ourselves"? Can members imagine them saying, "We're going to carry on our spending at a level close to 14%, but we're going to fire-sale some of our assets, those things that help us generate the revenue." It is absolutely ludicrous that the Treasurer is heading anywhere close to this direction.

I want to talk about the phoney announcement about salaries. Here they are, a 16% increase in the public service last year, and the Treasurer is saying, "We are going to freeze ourselves and senior management." Now to the transfer agencies he is saying, "You'd better be careful next year, and we're asking about 1% of you to take a wage freeze." But all the unionized employees go ahead as if it is business as usual. The government makes statements that it hopes they will bear the reduced revenues in mind. Do they think the trustees of the school boards, the municipalities, the hospitals that are negotiating, have been saying, "Go ahead, take whatever you want; it doesn't matter"? They are doing their very best and they are crying out to this government for some leadership.

I quote to members what really bothered me from the Chair of Management Board in the Globe and Mail today when we found out school settlements are 6.1% on average. The Chair of Management Board, who is also the Minister of Education, said, "Yeah, I'm kind of worried. Something needs to be looked at." This is the response from the Treasurer.

Now I want to read members a quote from the head of a union. It is Robert Garthson, begging, pleading, asking them to legislate a freeze. This is a vice-president of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation. He said "it is 'simplistic' to look only at wage settlements"—he said that is "only" at; he is agreeing you should look at them—"and he said restraint measures 'have to be applied across the entire spectrum of society.'" He is asking for this. The union is asking for this. If the government had a wage freeze today in the broader public sector, it could save $1 billion over the next year. They could start to address the problem.

This announcement today by the Treasurer says to me that next year there will be $2 billion minimum in tax increases in the next budget. It says to me there will be double-digit increases in municipal taxes, in school board taxes. That is exactly what the Treasurer is saying. He has cut nothing. He has said, "I hope we can cut $50 million if we apply our best efforts." I say to the Treasurer he is closer to Bill Vander Zalm than I thought yesterday. He is living in Fantasyland and this is a Fantasyland statement made by him today.

VISITOR

The Speaker: I invite all members to welcome to our midst this afternoon another former member of the assembly, the former member for Halton North, seated in the members' gallery west, Mr Walt Elliot. Welcome.

LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

The Speaker: I beg to inform the House that Mr Bradley, the member for the electoral district of St Catharines, is recognized as the leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition. Does the member have a few comments?

Mr Bradley: Briefly, I am delighted to have the confidence of my colleagues in the Liberal Party to serve as the leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition. I almost said "royal opposition," because that has been a matter of great attention recently. But I look forward to being able to question the government from a new position and of course to having so many colleagues who are so capable of providing support to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr Harris: I have given these speeches to the new leaders of the Liberal Party so many times I am reluctant to take up too much time of the House. I know for sure I am going to be called on to do another one come February, and my caucus voted today; they figure it is 50-50 there will be at least one more before then.

However, I want to welcome and congratulate the member for St Catharines. I look forward very much to working with him for the period of time he will be in this role and position. He will gain an appreciation very quickly in this position that it is not nearly so simple as it looks from the outside. The grass always looks greener over on the other side. It is true that it is much greener over on that side versus this side—we understand that—both in terms of the salary increases they have all enjoyed since the last election and, more important, in terms of the fun and enjoyment and challenge of carrying out policy. However, he will find that as well, just from the shift in his role.

We congratulate him. I understand it went to three ballots. I know that creates a lot of tension in the morning. We wish the member for St Catharines very well.

Hon Mr Laughren: I too would like to congratulate the member for St Catharines. I think I speak for my entire caucus when I say that we all look forward—

Mr Christopherson: No, you don't.

Hon Mr Laughren: I confess this can fall apart in a hurry.

Mr Scott: You're learning about that, aren't you?

Hon Mr Laughren: Yes. I welcome, however, the advent of a kinder and gentler opposition with the member for St Catharines. I know he will do a fine job.

I want to say a brief word about the previous leader, my favourite storyteller, who said he would never be a candidate.

An hon member: That was then and this is now.

Hon Mr Laughren: I understand the difference between what was then and what is now. That is not a problem. I want to express my appreciation for the job he did in this House of keeping us on our toes. I know the member for St Catharines will do the same.

ORAL QUESTIONS

TAX REVENUES

Mr Phillips: My question is to the Treasurer. As I said in my comments on his statement, I think he can appreciate that the confidence of the people of Ontario in the ability of the government to manage its fiscal affairs has been considerably shaken.

On October 2, when he announced a $600-million problem, some of us raised the issue of provincial income tax shortfalls, I believe on that day, and suggested that the Treasurer might want to check on that. Seven weeks later we now find there is a $2.1-billion shortfall in provincial income tax revenue. Did the Treasury, or the Treasurer himself, inquire of the federal government as to the status of provincial income tax revenue? What was the response the Treasurer got?

Hon Mr Laughren: I was somewhat surprised when the member for Scarborough-Agincourt responded to my statement. I thought he was somewhat unfair, because all this fall when I have responded to questions about our revenues, I have been saying that it looks as though our own sources of revenues seem to be on target but I did issue three warnings or cautions: (1) that a large portion of retail sales tax revenues did not come in until January, because of December shopping; (2) that corporate income taxes, because of the way they are reported and collected, do not get reported back in until February or early March, and (3) that the income tax revenues the federal government collects for us and then gives back to us over a two-year period have been historically incredibly volatile.

For those reasons, I was expressing caution about our revenue figures. Other than that, all I can tell the member is that we were getting some disquieting rumbles. There were press reports about income tax revenues.

The Speaker: Would the minister complete his response, please.

Hon Mr Laughren: We did not get anything official from the federal government until last week.

Mr Phillips: I take it, if it is not too unfair, that the Treasurer had some indication, but not an official indication, that there was a shortfall. We see two additional problems on the horizon which I would like him to comment on today, not unlike the ones we raised six weeks ago. The Treasurer has indicated that the fiscal stabilization plan will give him revenue of about $585 million and that he will get an additional $785 million from the established programs financing. Has he had some assurance from the federal government that both of those things are a likelihood?

Hon Mr Laughren: Yes. It is my understanding there is no reason for us to believe we will not get that money, no reason whatsoever. Now, of the numbers the member mentioned, one is the $585 million for the established programs financing and the other is the $585 million for the stabilization plan which kicks into place when there is a dramatic downturn in a province's economy. It has happened in other provinces as well—British Columbia and Alberta, I believe—so we have no reason to believe we will not get that money from the federal government. I will be meeting with Mr Mazankowski to make sure these things are nailed down, but since we are clearly entitled to them, there is no reason to believe we will not get them.

Mr Phillips: I hope the Treasurer has actually had some conversation with the federal government and has gotten some assurances. As I look at that plan—I have to look at it myself; I do not have a large Treasury staff—I have some questions about it. I believe it is not $585 million from the established programs financing; I believe, from the Treasurer's statement, that it now is $785 million. Again, I will leave those two things with the Treasurer. The reason I raise them is that six weeks ago I raised the provincial income tax matter and now we find the problem.

I think it is now clear that the people of Ontario have some significant reservations about the Treasurer's fiscal plan. I do not think there is any doubt about that. Today's announcement will just cause further disquiet. We see now that he has added at least $1 billion to next year's problem.

Will the Treasurer undertake, not in April but in the next few weeks, to bring forward to the Legislature a new fiscal plan so that the people of Ontario can see all of this laid out and can have some confidence that he has looked at the total program and now has his fiscal house in order? Can we now have an undertaking that we will not wait until April for a budget but rather will have a fiscal plan out of this government that the Treasurer can live with and that the people of Ontario will understand is his fiscal plan?

Hon Mr Laughren: I am a great believer in the budgetary process and so I do not want to bring down a budget in the next month. I do not think that is necessary. However, I assure the member for Scarborough-Agincourt that we do hope, as part of the pre-budget consultation process, to put more information out there for the people of Ontario and the people of the assembly than has ever been put out there before, so that they get a better sense of exactly how difficult the problem is.

I take issue with the member for Scarborough-Agincourt on the whole question of how we are managing our fiscal plan. Exactly opposite to what the member for Scarborough-Agincourt is saying, despite a very severe recession, despite very severe cuts in federal programs, despite the fact that we had this income tax hit that nobody could have predicted—it happened in previous years to the former government; I am not blaming it; that happened—despite all that, we are managing our fiscal plan to make sure we are in keeping with the targets laid out in the spring budget and are going to continue to do that.

Mr Phillips: In all sincerity, the Treasurer is delaying his problems to next year. That is the reality.

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr Phillips: My second question is to the Treasurer. The key solution for Ontario is to get the economy rolling. Many of his fiscal challenges would be solved if he could get the economy rolling. The Premier, wherever he is—he is travelling more than George Bush—promised us on September 23 that the government would bring forward an economic plan to this Legislature. He said that it was his highest priority and that the ministers would be announcing their economic plan. When can we expect the comprehensive economic plan to be laid out for the people of Ontario so that we can have some confidence that the government can get the economy rolling at last?

Hon Mr Laughren: The renewal of Ontario's economy will not come in a blinding flash of light. It is going to come as we come out of this recession and as we, as a government, make sure we do not panic and overreact to the fact that it is a severe recession.

We have already taken a number of measures that will help us in the economic rebuilding of this province. We are going to transform the training system, which I think all members agree needs to be transformed. Training in this country is inadequate and is not well co-ordinated. We want to bring some coherence to the training plan. That will be out in the not-too-distant future.

We have taken some moves on encouraging workers to invest in the economy themselves through the worker ownership plan. I think that is a very important initiative we have taken.

This is a contentious issue among some members, but I think reforming the labour legislation of this province will also go some way towards rebuilding the Ontario economy and making sure there is a sense of security among workers, which they presently do not have.

We are determined to move ahead with reform of the social assistance program so that people on social assistance get back into the workplace. We are going to put a lot of emphasis on that in the next year.

I can see the Speaker is looking edgy, so I will sit down.

Mr Phillips: I think the answer indicates the problem. There is one thing that will divide labour and the business community at this critical point in time. We have a firestorm out there. We have a recession that is under way and needs to be fixed. The government frankly has started a fight between the two groups that can stop the fire the best.

The Treasurer should believe me. If he looks at the business groups and labour in this province, where are they going to be focused in the next six months? Where is the Ontario Federation of Labour holding conferences across the province? What are they doing it on? The labour relations stuff. What is the business community doing? They are focusing on that when we should be focusing on getting the economy rolling.

Will the Treasurer at this time, recognizing his fiscal problems, recognizing the need to get the economy rolling, undertake at least to set the labour relations legislation aside? Let that be dealt with when we get the economy under control and it can be debated in a rational forum. Will the Treasurer at least undertake that one thing to get the economy moving?

Hon Mr Laughren: We are not prepared to set aside the labour legislation. I know members opposite would never proceed with these kinds of labour reforms. I understand that. Having put out a discussion paper, and having labour and business discuss the paper that has been put out and get back to the Minister of Labour with their suggestions, we will see what develops from that consultation period. But we are determined to move ahead with labour reform. We think it is long overdue in this province and we have no intention of setting that aside simply because the Conservatives and some members of the Liberal caucus would like to see us do that.

Mr Phillips: When the Treasurer announced his budget, I think he said: "Every other province is wrong. The federal government is wrong. We're right." I think that is the case. The Treasurer may argue no, but that is what was said at the time, "We know best." Can the Treasurer lay out for the Legislature now the evidence that his plan is working where the other plans are not working? What is the evidence now that he was right and everyone else was wrong?

Hon Mr Laughren: I must say that in the budget in the spring we put out some numbers that bothered a lot of people. They were tough numbers but they were realistic numbers. When I look across this land at other provinces that put out numbers, they were not very realistic numbers. I do not like to step back in time too often, but I remember a year or a year and a half ago when that party was in power and it said, "We're going to have a surplus," which suddenly turned into a $3-billion deficit.

The member opposite cannot have it both ways. We put out numbers that we knew would upset some people but that we thought were realistic. We put out numbers indicating what our fiscal plan was for the next three years as well. A lot of people did not like that, but we had an obligation to indicate how we thought we were going to come out of this recession and how, in some cases, we intended to make sure we invested in this province in a way that made sure we were prepared to come out of the recession in a healthy way.

TEACHERS' SETTLEMENTS

Mr Harris: I find it ironic that the Liberals and the NDP are arguing about who was more incompetent or who is more incompetent. Why do they not both admit they are incompetent and let's get on to a new direction? Obviously they are both incompetent when we look at the spending they have initiated.

The Treasurer's announcement today, this wishy-washy statement on transfer payments, is not acceptable. Contracts are being settled now: 7% increases, 6% increases are being settled. The vice-president of the union representing teachers, Robert Garthson, has come forward and said: "We need some overall leadership, not just one group of teachers, not just one group in society. We are begging. We are asking for some leadership from the top."

Will the Treasurer today give that leadership from the top and let teachers, unionized workers, non-unionized workers, transfer agencies, arbitrators and employers all know that there is no money for any increase next year?

Hon Mr Laughren: There is no question that this government does things differently than the Tories do. There is absolutely no question about that. I want to assure the Tories in this House that this government will never mismanage the economy in the way Tories do in Ottawa. We do not need any lessons from Tories on how to manage the economy.

I say, on a very serious note, because I think the leader of the third party asked a serious question and deserves a serious answer that is non-partisan in nature, that when we make our transfer announcement, which I indicated in the statement I wanted to make before the end of this calendar year, and that does not leave us a lot of time—we want to make that announcement, but I think we are already sending signals to our transfer partners out there that there is not going to be much money announced in that statement.

Mr Harris: Teacher settlements are averaging 6.1%. We have a strike on in Elgin and the offer on the table is close to 6%. Can the Treasurer today tell the taxpayers all across the province, all those who are in the middle of negotiations with teachers, how much he is going to transfer to cover the cost of those increases in salaries?

Hon Mr Laughren: As I indicated in my first response, it is our intention to do that as quickly as possible. What we are doing is evaluating, through the treasury board, all our expenditure programs in government. That has never been done before, never in this province. I confess we do not have a draconian, ham-fisted way of looking at fiscal problems. We are determined not to overreact in the short run, but rather to do it in a methodical, planned way so that when we approve the estimates process for 1992-93, it is done in a more thoughtful way than has traditionally been the case.

Mr Harris: The total cost, year over year, to the Ontario taxpayers for the civil service was 16.1%. Inflation for that period of time, I think the Treasurer will agree with me, will be somewhat under 6%. Inflation next year will probably be in the 2% to 3% range. Does the Treasurer see any need for an additional increase this year, given the 16% overall in new money that has gone towards the civil service this year, either in new civil servants, pay equity, merit pay or increases, and given inflation somewhere under 6%, and 2% to 3% next year? The two-year average will still be 8% if he says it is zero today. Does he see a need for more money there?

Hon Mr Laughren: I think the leader of the third party is confusing the Ontario Public Service with the broader public service that is in hospitals, schools boards and social agencies all across the province. This year when negotiations occurred through the collective bargaining process, the increase that was negotiated with the civil servants was 5.8%. Since then we have asked each ministry to absorb 0.8% of that, so really it came down to a 5% increase. When those settlements occurred, inflation was running at a rate of 6.1%.

Hon Mr Laughren: I confess that the easiest politics in the world is civil service bashing. That is the easiest thing in the world to do. I do not think it has much to do with rebuilding the economy of this province.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr Harris: Today in his announcement the Treasurer indicated he would not touch one cent of the capital spending that is in his recovery package because that was important spending, because that was creating jobs in this recession. He is going to cut $200 million in other spending. He is not going to touch this spending over here because that is creating jobs, but he is going to cut $200 million this year out of capital spending in other areas. Could he tell us how many jobs that will cost?

Hon Mr Laughren: A lot of the capital measures we are taking are measures that were not going to get off the books this fiscal year anyway. There will be some others, but not all of them have been identified. We have determined that we are going to find $200 million in capital spending. I could not give the leader of the third party a list of every one of them at this point, but we are determined that they will be either put off until next year—I am sure there will be some that will simply be cancelled because of our fiscal problems. It goes without saying that we cannot do it all. Even having said that, approximately $4 billion this year is the most in capital expenditures that has ever gone on in this province.

Mr Harris: The Treasurer is not cutting some capital spending because it creates jobs in the recession, but somehow or other he is cutting $200 million. I asked him how many jobs that would cut. It is a pretty straightforward question. If he knows how many he will save by not cutting here, surely he knows how many he will lose. Obviously he is going to lose a substantial amount of jobs.

Could the Treasurer tell us if the the people of St Catharines, the people of Windsor and the people of Niagara Falls can still expect substantial capital investments to relocate ministries to their communities?

Hon Mr Laughren: First, I wonder if I could put the record straight, because I think the leader of the third party is confusing our anti-recession package of $700 million, which we put in place this spring and which is very largely under way now and mostly will be completed by the end of this fiscal year. I hear what the leader of the third party is saying. I think he would like to see us end those capital expenditures in those communities that are expecting relocation of civil servants but I do not—

Mr Turnbull: Like to see you resign.

The Speaker: The member for York Mills.

Hon Mr Laughren: I think the leader of the third party is not quite sure whether he wants us to continue with spending or whether he wants us to cut all the spending, because I get a mixed message from him. Perhaps if he has another question he could make it clear which it is he wants.

Mr Harris: The question was pretty straightforward. I asked what capital the Treasurer was going to cut and he would not tell me, so I tried to identify capital expenditures in the future and he still will not tell me. The reason for the question is so he cannot keep talking out of both sides of his mouth. That is the problem. The Treasurer has not cut a single thing and he will not identify anything.

We told the Treasurer that his budget was 180 degrees in the wrong direction. The people of this province told him that. We laid out a document, New Directions: A Blueprint for Economic Renewal and Prosperity in Ontario, and we asked him to consider this. He has still ignored all this advice.

The Treasurer's announcement today means a minimum of $2 billion in new tax increases in his April budget. It means a minimum of billions of dollars of tax increases in municipal and school board budgets next year by not taking action today. Particularly after today, we have absolutely no confidence in the Treasurer. The people have no confidence in the Treasurer. The working people and those who are not working, unionized and non-unionized, have no confidence in the Treasurer. We will be moving that motion of non-confidence.

Mr Speaker, you are going to ask me if there is a supplementary here, and there is not. I am wasting my time with the non-answers.

Hon Mr Laughren: I detected a rhetorical question in that statement. I regret very much that the leader of the third party does not have—

Mr Eves: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: There was no question. How can the Treasurer answer a question that does not exist? Is this a ministerial statement or not?

The Speaker: I will allow the minister to respond.

Mr Cousens: No way. Come on. That was not a question.

Hon Mr Laughren: He was on his feet. Of course I have a chance to respond.

Mr Speaker: Order. I realize the phrasing did not seem to suggest an interrogative. On the other hand, the minister has the opportunity to respond to what he determined or at least thought was a rhetorical question included in the wording. I will allow a supplementary.

Mr Harris: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to inform you that I waive my right to the last supplementary. There is no question.

Hon Mr Laughren: I think the leader of the third party has a problem.

Mr Cousens: This is terrible. Come on, no question.

Mr Tilson: We sure don't want an answer.

Mr Villeneuve: You want to hang yourself, Floyd. Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. When the House comes to order, we will hear a response from the Treasurer and then we will move on.

Hon Mr Laughren: I will try not to be provocative.

I regret that the leader of the third party does not have confidence in me as Treasurer, because I have confidence in the leader of the third party to bring to this assembly all the policies that are important to Tory parties all across this country. I have confidence in him doing that. I have confidence in the leader of the third party to wipe out his party's deficit in the next couple of years. I have confidence in the leader of the third party. What I do not understand is why he is so angry and upset that, despite the fact we are in a very severe recession, we are able to manage according to our targeted figures in the budget. I think what is really bothering him is that we are succeeding in doing that.

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member should take her seat.

Mr Sterling: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Under standing order 32(a), covering question period, which we are now undertaking, there is no provision for a minister to stand in this place and make a statement in the midst of question period when a question has not been asked. Therefore, I ask you to replace the time on the clock taken by the Treasurer in response to no question, as he has used up the time of the opposition to ask questions as provided in the standing orders.

Hon Mr Cooke: Mr Speaker, on the same point of order: I do not think there is a provision for the leader of the third party to stand up and make a statement without a question either.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party, to the same point of order?

Mr Harris: Yes, Mr Speaker. To the point of order—I think it was a new one—that was raised by the House leader for the New Democratic Party: If I was out of order, I apologize and withdraw all I have said.

The Speaker: I remind the leader of the third party that I did recognize him to place a question. The member for Brampton North.

Mr McClelland: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment.

The Speaker: To the member for Carleton, I am sorry, I should have explained to you. I am very pleased to review what has occurred, but I am not adding time to the clock. I allowed the question because the member asked to be recognized. Therefore, there was the opportunity to place a question to which the minister had an opportunity to respond. We now move on to the next in order while the clock continues to tick by, I remind you.

Mr Sterling: On a point of order, Mr Speaker—

The Speaker: Is this a new point of order?

Mr Sterling: This is a request for a ruling on the request I brought before you. I would like you to identify where the member for Nipissing placed a question to the speaker. That is what is provided for in the standing orders and it is your duty to protect the members of the opposition under the standing orders.

The Speaker: To the member for Carleton, I recognized the leader of the third party so that he could place a question. Therefore, the member to whom he placed the question has an opportunity to respond.

ENVIRONMENTAL LEGISLATION

Mr McClelland: My question is to the Minister of the Environment. Her environmental equivalent to the War Measures Act, Bill 143, in my view is the height of hypocrisy. An official from her legal services branch told me yesterday that the reason this bill was introduced under the office of the greater Toronto area was one of mere convenience. In fact, part IV of this very important act, the Environmental Assessment Act, deals with environmental protection initiatives. It is an environmental protection act which clearly falls under her responsibilities as the Minister of the Environment.

Will the minister not agree that this bill would be better dealt with in two separate bills, and will the minister agree today to sever part IV of Bill 143 and introduce it as a separate piece of legislation since it is clearly not the minister responsible for the greater Toronto area but the Minister of the Environment who should be dealing with part IV.

Hon Mrs Grier: Whether I introduce legislation as minister responsible for the GTA or as Minister of the Environment, what is very important, critical and new about this legislation is that for the first time a government is looking at waste management in an integrated way, recognizing that you do not solve waste management problems by merely looking for disposal sites. You have to look at the 3Rs in waste reduction and at the same time find disposal sites for the residue after you have reduced the waste as much as possible. That is what this legislation will accomplish and, frankly, I am not sure it particularly matters under which hat it rests.

Mr McClelland: It matters because this is clearly the most heavy-handed piece of legislation ever introduced by a Minister of the Environment anywhere. It is shocking to me to think that the minister, who was once an advocate for citizens' rights, the same Minister of the Environment who introduced an environmental bill of rights, the same minister who stood with the Premier and said there would be no expansion of existing landfill sites without a full environmental assessment, would write such hard-handed, ruthless legislation.

The minister has clearly attempted to use these waste management reduction measures she talks about to disguise her draconian and heavy-handed measures. Her environmental war measures act wipes out the very rights and principles she once personally championed. I ask the minister again to sever part IV of the bill so that it can be dealt with in the way it should be and proceed, while the other sections of the bill receive the public scrutiny and the input they require and deserve.

Hon Mrs Grier: I find the analogy between a waste reduction bill and the War Measures Act extremely offensive, but let me say to the member that it is about time somebody in this province waged war on waste, and if his government and previous governments had done it over the last two decades, then this government would not be forced to manage the crisis in the way we are.

ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME

Mr J. Wilson: My question is for the Minister of Health, who I think just slipped out for a moment. Perhaps she will be back if one of the members of the NDP could get her. She was here a second ago.

My question concerns the request for compensation for haemophiliacs in Ontario who contracted HIV through the province's blood supply. I say to the minister, who is back in, I appreciate her concern for rising health care costs in Ontario, but she will also be aware that a six-year-old haemophiliac, a little boy who contracted the AIDS virus through the Australian blood supply, was awarded compensation by the courts in the amount of $875,000. It cost the Australian government $15 million to fight this case, and now that government is being forced to settle, as a result of the court case, similar cases out of court.

As of this morning, 18 lawsuits have been filed by persons with haemophilia who contracted HIV through Ontario's blood supply, and each names the government of Ontario in its suit. Why is the minister refusing to act responsibly and provide catastrophic relief to haemophiliacs in Ontario who contracted HIV through our blood supply?

Hon Ms Lankin: I do not think we are refusing to act responsibly at all. In looking at this issue, I think I have confirmed the position the ministry had taken in the past.

Let me say briefly to the previous Minister of Health under the former government that with respect to comments I made today, I clearly said that the ministry had taken this position in the past. I do not attribute this directly to the minister having made a cabinet decision, but in terms of documentation and letters, many positions had been taken by the ministry with respect to not dealing with the issue of catastrophic relief for haemophiliacs suffering with HIV until a comprehensive strategy dealing with the Prichard report and response in general was done. I have, in fact, copies of that in writing, but I apologize to her for having attributed remarks directly to her. It is not in fact what I said, although I understand she understood that.

I can say to the member opposite that we are committed to providing benefits and support to all people in this province suffering from HIV and AIDS. We do not see in the provision of health care treatment that there should be a distinction based on how the individual contracted the disease, and I think we have to be very careful with respect to this. In fact, the federal government has been very careful not to tie the kind of compassionate compensation that it forwarded to any indication of culpability on the part of the blood supply. The response we have taken in Ontario is not a unilateral response; in fact, it is shared by every province in the country at this point.

Mr J. Wilson: The minister is aware that there are some 375 haemophiliacs—many of those people are children—who are now living with the AIDS virus simply because they placed their faith and trust in our health care system and in Ontario's blood supply. The Australian example makes it clear that the fiscally responsible thing for her government to do—she should never mind what the Liberals did not do—would be to compensate these people now, rather than spend millions of taxpayers' dollars fighting this issue in court. Why would she rather see our scarce health care dollars given to lawyers than to people who only placed their trust in our health care system and in her government?

Hon Ms Lankin: Whenever a legal issue is raised, it is very easy to say you should settle on that legal issue, irrespective of what the principles involved are; to spend money in that way rather than spend it on court costs. I suggest the member has to take a look at the legal issues involved. What I think we should be spending the money on, all of it, is delivery of services to the people who have this disease. That is not categorizing one group of people who have this disease.

With respect to the issue of the blood supply itself, we are talking about a national issue. We have had a response from the federal government and from every provincial and territorial government that is involved with the process that there is not a legal culpability involved in this. What we have is people suffering from a disease who need treatment and who need benefits and expansion of the services in that area. That is the right way to spend the money.

AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr Hansen: My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Farmers in the Niagara area have been looking at ways to help ease the tremendous financial hardships they have encountered over the past few years. Recently the regional municipality of Niagara voted in favour of relaxing its land use policies to allow farmers to sever lots from their farms to help raise funds to cover costs. This decision has not been supported by the government and the ministry has said it will send all severances to the Ontario Municipal Board. Will the minister and the Minister of Agriculture and Food meet with the Niagara farmers and the Niagara regional representatives to listen to their concerns and requests?

Hon Mr Cooke: I appreciate the question and the interest the member has shown in this very difficult issue. We in this government understand the very serious situation the farmers are experiencing in the Niagara Peninsula and we certainly understand the motivation behind the decision regional council made to try to help out the farm community, but we had to make a decision in this government of how we would protect agricultural land, and the decision has been made.

I have spoken directly with the regional chair, and I know the Minister of Agriculture and Food has spoken to representatives of the farm community. We are going to meet, because we have to find long-term solutions for the farmers in that community. We want to do that with the farm leadership and with the municipal council leadership. A meeting has been set up for December 17 when we hope to begin that dialogue.

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Scott: As members undoubtedly know, the riding of St George-St David numbers among its population some of the poorest and most disadvantaged people in the entire province of Ontario. My constituents in St James town and Regent Park, the largest public housing project in the country, would have been shocked, I think, to see the government backbenchers give a standing ovation to the Treasurer when he said he was managing the services of the province efficiently.

My question is for the Minister of Health. Last week and this is why my constituents would be concerned, they read in the press that the Deputy Minister of Health, Michael Decter, a mandarin from Manitoba, had indicated "We are looking very hard at the type of services delivered and what are the outcomes. For instance, we spend large amounts of money treating lung cancer, which frankly does not do much good." He went on to give other examples of services that might be cut out. He spoke of heart bypass surgery and organ transplants for people over 70 years old.

The serious question I have for the Minister of Health is, are these things Mr Decter speaks about being actively considered in the ministry? Does the deputy minister in that respect speak for the government?

Hon Ms Lankin: As we review how our health dollars are spent, we are committed to trying to put in place process that ensures every procedure is evaluated based on health outcomes. We think that this is an important way to go and that there have been some pilot projects within certain hospitals with respect to total quality management and continued quality improvement which suggest that those are really important elements to an evaluation tool.

Recently the Canadian Cancer Society, with respect to the studies that have been done in a co-operative, broad-sector way, in the Cancer 2000 report has suggested that we need to look much more at the prevention issue rather than treatment with respect to lung cancer, that we need to shift those resources.

The particular cases I think were used as illustrative of the kind of debate we need to have in our society with respect to which kinds of health care procedures we continue to invest in, in our new procedures that we bring on line. They are not considered at this point in time a list of actual items that within a month or two I would be announcing any changes with respect to.

Mr Scott: I want to thank the minister for the completely candid answer, because I take it to be entirely clear that Mr Decter does speak for her and the government when he says this government is actively considering whether OHIP services should be provided in respect of certain cancer treatments, bypass operations for the elderly and organ transplants. There has been a reflection of that in today's press, no doubt connected with what Mr Decter said, when the Toronto Hospital, which is a hospital upon which my constituents are directly dependent, as members can imagine, announced that transplants, for example, which it is well known, might be cut.

Dr Hudson, the new president of the hospital, said patients will be turned away. "'We would have to say'—speaking of organ transplants—'trash the organs; we're not going to use them, we haven't got any money.'... Patients will be told: 'Sorry, you're going to die.'"

The other half of the riding, north of Bloor Street, includes some of the richest citizens in the country. They will be able to get this kind of treatment and surgery, if not in Ontario then in Quebec or in Philadelphia or in New York or in Dallas. In light of the needs of my riding, what is the minister going to say, in light of what Dr Hudson has said, to constituents in the south end of the riding who are going to suffer from this destruction of the health care plan under which they are presently the beneficiaries? It is an important and very troubling question. I ask the minister for a candid answer.

Hon Ms Lankin: I appreciate the opportunity to give a candid answer. I think I have been very candid on this issue all along. I believe that there is a great deal of room within our health care system and within the hospital system for restructuring that will provide service in a better co-ordinated way across the region, and we will make some good decisions about how and what we are providing within our hospitals.

I hope—I have to say I hope—with respect to what has been quoted by Dr Hudson in this article, that in fact he said much more that was much more balanced in his approach. I am quite shocked by the quotes that are here. In discussions I have had with the OHA and with other hospital CEOs, I think we have a very co-operative approach that has been established. That has not been reflected in the headlines. Let me tell the member that those kinds of comments, which I will say directly are outrageous—I certainly hope they were put forward in a much more balanced approach—are the very kind of thing that leads to panic in the member's community and in other communities. I would like to say that I hope we can quell that panic, and I look for the member's assistance in doing that.

I received a letter by fax, very shortly after the paper was out today, from University Hospital in London and from the co-ordinator of the multi-organ transplant service.

Mr Scott: My constituents do not live in London; they live in Toronto.

Hon Ms Lankin: Perhaps the member could listen to the response.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Ms Lankin: The chief of the multi-organ transplant service, who is working with the ministry task force with respect to this issue, was shocked at those kinds of comments being made and wanted to assure the people of Ontario not to panic and not to have fear, that these kinds of statements go far too far with respect to what the situation is.

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude her remarks, please.

Hon Ms Lankin: Let me also say that I think the Ontario Hospital Association and its leadership should be listened to. I will just quote right from the weekend, where Mr Timbrell said: "'Will patient care be jeopardized?' he asks. 'No. Will there be waits? No. Will there be a compromise on quality? No. Will there be a change in how we receive services? Yes.'" I think we are going to try to manage that change.

NORTHERN HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Eves: I have a question for the Minister of Northern Development and Mines. I am extremely disappointed to hear that after some discussion, the Minister of Health has unilaterally decided not to consider any threshold exemptions beyond physicians who are currently in the government underserviced area program. I am concerned that this ill-conceived decision is going to have a very negative impact on the accessibility to health care services in northern Ontario.

Can the Minister of Northern Development and Mines give this House, and more particularly the residents of northern Ontario, her personal guarantee that this decision by her government will not adversely affect northern Ontario residents?

Hon Miss Martel: I think the member would understand that I could not give a personal guarantee regardless of if it were a question of medical care or anything at this point in time. We are under a great period of fiscal restraint in the province. All of us, in terms of our various ministries, are making every effort to maintain the basic services that we have to maintain our programs, but we will all have difficulty this fiscal year to try and do that.

I should talk to the member in particular about the specific case, the dermatologists in northeastern Ontario, whom I am sure he has a concern about, as I and my colleague the Treasurer do. Yesterday my ministry talked directly to the Deputy Minister of Health. We asked that a meeting be arranged with respect to Dr Donahue. Those arrangements are being made right now.

Second, there is a second meeting that will occur between the OMA, this government and the doctors, which I will be attending in Sudbury, that have a concern specifically about the shortages in cardiology and in obstetrics so that we can talk to all of them about what can be done. I look forward to having those discussions. The meetings, as I understand it, were trying to be arranged as soon as possible.

Mr Eves: I talked to some of those doctors whom the minister and the Treasurer apparently talked to late last week. Their version of the meeting is not anywhere near the same as that of the Minister of Northern Development and Mines. Dr Donahue is not the only specialist in Sudbury who has a problem. These people are generally concerned about the needs of their patients as northern Ontario residents, as a result of the decision of the Minister of Health.

Dr Abdulla, who is the cardiology chief at Sudbury Memorial Hospital, is concerned that the government's decision may force him to move south. He is the only qualified nuclear cardiologist in all of northern Ontario. He is one of five serving a population of 600,000 people that should have 10. Dr Cheung, also of Sudbury, the minister's home town, is the only full-time neurologist practising north of Parry Sound in the province. He may also be forced south, he says. He is extremely concerned about the ramifications of the government's decision on his patients and his staff.

When is the minister going to realize that the government's decision is placing the health care of northern Ontario residents in jeopardy? Is it not the intention of the government to provide those first-class health care services in northern Ontario? That is why we build centres like the Sudbury cancer centre, so people can be treated there, not so they can be paid under the northern health travel grant program to ship them all to Toronto because the Minister of Health is cutting out their services and forcing them to move south.

Hon Miss Martel: It certainly is a priority of this government to provide those services, especially in Sudbury, and that is why I and my colleagues the member for Nickel Belt and the member for Sudbury have fought so hard on behalf of the cancer treatment centre and other specialists who are located in Sudbury. I remind the member of that.

Also, if he listened to the first answer—he obviously did not—I said that we were in the process of arranging a meeting between the Ministry of Health, the representatives from the OMA, my office and the cardiologists and obstetricians who were at the meeting in Sudbury on Friday, and requested a meeting and that their concerns be aired.

If the member had listened to my first response, he would have heard me say clearly that we understand it as not only a problem with the dermatologist Dr Donahue; it is also a problem with the others. We are undertaking as soon as possible to have these meetings.

I would also say, with respect to the situation of Dr Donahue in particular, that I asked him very clearly at the meeting on Friday if he was prepared to open his books and have a meeting with the ministry because none of us in terms of those he has asked some help from—that is myself and the Treasurer—in none of the letters he sent to us did he indicate what his costs were or what his problem was. In none of the letters he sent to us did he indicate what his costs were or what his problem was, so we have asked very clearly that if we are going to come to a meeting with him, and we intend to do that, will he in turn open his books? I hope he will do that. That is the basis upon which we are now arranging those meetings.

LABOUR LEGISLATION

Mr Abel: My question is for the Minister of Labour. My riding of Wentworth North—

Interjections.

Mr Scott: Let that guy ask a question. Give him a break.

The Speaker: Order. The Speaker would appreciate the assistance of all members, not just the member for St George-St David.

Mr Abel: I am grateful to the member for St George-St David for taking care of my best interests here. As I began to say, my riding of Wentworth North consists of three towns, Dundas, Ancaster and Flamborough, and in these three towns there are several shopping malls and plazas. Several of the shop owners from within these malls and plazas have contacted me with some concerns regarding the proposed changes to the Ontario Labour Relations Act, specifically picketing on third-party property. My question to the minister is, will the proposal to allow picketing in shopping malls interfere with businesses not involved in a labour dispute?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I think it is a good question and useful to get rid of some of the scare tactics that are used in terms of this legislation. Incidentally, I was going to make the point that we are—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: As I was just going to say, Mr Speaker, what we are looking at is a discussion paper, not legislation as yet. We will not know what is in the legislation until we finish the discussion process. I think it is a good point, however, that there is not a fear as is raised by some of my colleague's constituents who are concerned.

The current state of the law allows for workers to picket at the entrance to the mall or in the parking centre and that can often lead to real problems with a number of people who may be involved in the malls. The change would allow for picketing inside at the actual store the was being affected by the labour dispute, and I think that will be a lot easier than previously.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I think allowing—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Would the minister take his seat, please.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Minister.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I think the final point is that the proposals in the discussion paper, which still has to go through the discussion process, will allow peaceful picketing directly at the business involved, and attempts to picket them all generally would be illegal, as they currently are.

TEACHERS' SETTLEMENTS

Mr Beer: My question is to the Minister of Education. In an article in today's Globe and Mail, it is reported that the minister has told Ontario school boards that they need to show more restraint in wage settlements, which are currently running on average at 6.1%.

Last month, as Chairman of Management Board, the minister intervened in discussions between the Council of Regents for Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology and their staff and stated that they ought not to offer any settlement above 2.7%.

Is the minister prepared to give this same message clearly and firmly today to the leadership of the teachers' unions in this province?

Hon Mr Silipo: I think I said earlier, and I will continue to say, that I believe and this government believes in the collective bargaining process and in that process continuing. What I have also been saying and will continue to say is that we have some realities that we all need to deal with, and very clearly the area of wage settlements is an area that everyone needs to look at, whether it is in the school board sector or in any other sector. That is the kind of message I have been giving out, and that is certainly the kind of message I will continue to give out.

Mr Beer: That really is no answer at all. The minister is quoted in the Globe and Mail as saying: "It concerns me...something needs to be looked at...without being too firm...we will need to be sharpening our message."

It seems the minister is quite prepared to sharpen his message when it comes to the community colleges, but he ducks the issue and is afraid to make the tough decisions when it comes to discussions between the school boards and the teachers. What is happening here is that the minister has also indicated that school boards can expect 3% or less in transfer payments, and yet it is clear from what is going on in terms of these settlements that there simply will not be money for the wage settlements.

What is the minister going to do? Will he state today how he is prepared to protect the Ontario property taxpayer if, on the one hand, he is not prepared to give the school boards the money to run the schools of this province, and second, he does not seem to have the wherewithal or the courage to stand up and state clearly and categorically the wage limits that will be permitted?

Hon Mr Silipo: Although I note with interest the settlement reached for the colleges' support staff of, I believe, 3% for next year, I also, as I say, believe very clearly that school boards, teachers' federations and other employer organizations have a clear responsibility to continue the collective bargaining process and find solutions to the fiscal problems that we have through that process.

I met yesterday with representatives from the Ontario Public School Boards' Association. I will be meeting with representatives from other trustees' associations, as well as with teachers' federations and other employee groups and representatives, to discuss with them very clearly the kind of situation we are all living under. It is the kind of restraint, quite frankly, that everyone will have to show.

The Treasury has already indicated we will be making our transfer payments announcements before Christmas as a way also to indicate very clearly to the municipal level, school boards and other transfer payment agencies the kind of support they can expect from this government. It is a time for all of us to look very clearly and very realistically at what we can achieve.

Mr Beer: I would like to state that the answer is not acceptable. It is purely a lot of gobbledegook, and I invite the minister back at 6 o'clock for the late show.

The Speaker: I assume the member for York North will file the necessary document.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr Eves: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I did not want to pursue this, because I did not want to take up any more time of question period, but as he stood on his feet for his second supplementary on his second question, the member for Nipissing indicated that in view of the fact that he was getting non-answers from the Treasurer, he would not be placing a second supplementary question.

I may be wrong, but I for one did not hear a question, Mr Speaker. I would ask you to review Hansard to see if in fact one was placed, because I believe—and again I may be incorrect—that you permitted the Treasurer to respond to the member's question. Well, I do not think there was a question. I would ask you to review Hansard, and if in fact there was not a question, why was the Treasurer given an opportunity to respond to a non-question?

Mr Conway: Mr Speaker, on that point, I listened with some interest to the exchange this afternoon between the member for Nipissing and the Treasurer. I do not want to prolong the point, but it seems to me that surely the Treasurer has a right, and any minister of the crown has a right, to respond to a question. But it seems to me that if a member of the opposition bench has the right to get up—and I think any Chair has to exercise some measure of latitude. It is not an easy task; I understand that. But on the basis of what I heard this afternoon, I would certainly support a ruling by the Chair to allow some latitude whereby one might hear a rhetorical question.

It seems to me that if we in the opposition, as members of the Legislature, are going to stand up and make a statement as part of a routine question time, it is not unreasonable that a member of the government who is clearly going to be engaged in that process—after all, that is the informing logic of this process. I do not like to disagree very often with my friends in the third party, but I would simply say as a member of this Legislature that in what I heard this afternoon, when a member of the Legislature stands and puts a point, though it may not be as purely interrogative as the rules would anticipate, it seems to me that, mens rea, if that is the legal term, the reasonable thing would be to allow some kind of response, if only in the anticipation that there was a rhetorical question contained within the submission.

The Speaker: First of all, to the member for Parry Sound, I appreciate your having brought this concern to my attention. I certainly listened quite intently to the comments by the member for Renfrew North. I did make a ruling on this earlier. I will, however, be pleased to take another look and will report back to the member for Parry Sound later.

PETITIONS

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

Mr J. Wilson: I am pleased to present a petition to the Legislature of Ontario that reads as follows:

"Whereas the Queen of Canada has long been a symbol of national unity for Canadians from all walks of life and from all ethnic backgrounds;

"Whereas the people of Canada are currently facing a constitutional crisis which could potentially result in the breakup of the federation and are in need of unifying symbols;

"We the undersigned respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to restore the oath to the Queen for Ontario's police officers."

I am pleased to say that I have affixed my name to this petition, as have my good friend and colleague the member for York Mills and a number of good people from my riding who live in Wasaga Beach and Stayner.

Interjections.

Mr J. Wilson: I hear a lot of heckling from the opposition because they wonder why every single day since the government took away the reference to the Queen in the police—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Will the member for Simcoe West take his seat, please.

ENVIRONMENTAL LEGISLATION

Mr McClelland: I have a petition signed by over 700 people in opposition to Bill 143. It is signed by 700-plus people from the Maple and Vaughan areas who are asking if the government of the day would put a stop to Bill 143. I will sign that petition so it can be introduced.

CLOSING OF TREE NURSERIES

Mr Miclash: I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it reads:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We oppose the proposed closure of the bare root section of the Dryden Tree Nursery due to the loss of substantial employment...Dryden Tree Nursery purchase of materials and services, income dollars spent locally and the MNR local presence in the community."

That is signed by some 112 residents of the area, and I too have attached my name to that petition.

GASOLINE PRICES

Mrs Y. O'Neill: I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario which reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"Whereas gasoline prices are significantly higher in the Ottawa area than those in southern Ontario;

"Whereas such a price disparity discriminates against Ottawa area consumers;

"The Legislative Assembly of Ontario should urge the Ontario government to correct this injustice for Ottawa area motorists."

This is signed by 150 people, and I have affixed my signature.

CHRONIC FATIGUE IMMUNE DYSFUNCTION SYNDROME

Mrs Mathysen: I am presenting a petition signed by 2,988 people from all over southwestern Ontario who request that:

"The Ontario Ministry of Health take steps to establish a clinic in one of the London, Ontario, teaching hospitals for the appropriate assessment, treatment and clinical research for chronic fatigue immune dysfunction syndrome.

"These signatories further request that the Ontario Ministry of Health provide the necessary funding to establish a critically needed permanent regional information centre in London, Ontario.

"These signatories would like the members of this House to understand that very little is known about this debilitating disease. It strikes people in every age group and leaves its victims with cognitive dysfunction, memory loss, difficulty with concentration, sleep disturbance, physical pain and extreme prolonged fatigue. A conservative estimate of those afflicted in Canada is about 100,000 victims, an estimated 10,000 of whom reside in southwestern Ontario.

"Despite the horrendous cost to the health care system the inability of sufferers to continue to work or attend school, no Canadian epidemiological study has been done for CFIDS."

On behalf of all those concerned members of this Legislature and the many victims of this disease, I respectfully submit this petition, to which I too have signed my name.

GASOLINE PRICES

Mr Grandmaitre: I too have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, similar to that of my colleague from Ottawa-Rideau:

"Whereas gasoline prices are significantly higher in the Ottawa-Carleton area than those in southern Ontario;

"Whereas such a price disparity discriminates against Ottawa area consumers;

"The Legislative Assembly of Ontario should urge the Ontario government to correct this injustice to Ottawa area motorists."

This is signed by 127 people living in the Ottawa-Carleton area, and I have affixed my signature as well.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT

Mr Kormos from the standing committee on resources development presented the following report and moved its adoption:

The committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill 126, An Act authorizing the Filing of Information in an Electronic Format under Statutes administered by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations / Projet de loi 126, Loi autorisant le dépôt de renseignements au moyen d'un support électronique dans le cadre de lois dont l'application est confiée au ministre de la Consommation et du Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

Bill ordered for third reading.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Mr Cooper from the standing committee on administration of justice presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee begs to report the following bill, as amended:

Bill 115, An Act to amend the Retail Business Holidays Act and Employment Standards Act in respect of the opening of retail business establishments and employment in them / Projet de loi 115, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les jours fériés dans le commerce de détail et la Loi sur les normes d'emploi en ce qui concerne l'ouverture des établissements de commerce de détail et l'emploi dans ces établissements.

Motion agreed to.

Bill ordered for third reading.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

GOVERNMENT CHEQUE CASHING ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR L'ENCAISSEMENT DE CHÈQUES DU GOUVERNEMENT

Mr Morin moved first reading of Bill 154, An Act to prohibit the Charging of Fees for the Cashing of Government Cheques / Projet de loi 154, Loi interdisant de demander des droits pour l'encaissement de chèques du gouvernement.

Motion agreed to.

Mr Morin: The bill prohibits any person from charging a fee for cashing a cheque issued by the government of Canada, the government of Ontario or a municipality.

CHURCH OF THE TORONTONIANS ACT, 1991

Mr Harnick moved first reading of Bill Pr104, An Act to revive the Church of the Torontonians.

Motion agreed to.

Mr Harnick: This bill is to revive the charter of a corporation.

The Speaker: It is a private bill for which there is not normally an introduction.

CITY OF NEPEAN ACT, 1991

Mrs O'Neill moved first reading of Bill Pr110, An Act respecting the City of Nepean.

Motion agreed to.

EARTH DAY ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR LA JOURNÉE DE LA TERRE

Mr Christopherson moved first reading of Bill 155, An Act proclaiming Earth Day / Projet de loi 155, Loi proclamant la journée de la Terre.

Motion agreed to.

REDIRECTION OF BILL

Mr Runciman: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Bill 126 was moved on to third reading earlier. I am given to believe there was an agreement with respect to this bill going to committee of the whole. I am looking for the consent of all three parties in the House to redirect that piece of legislation to committee of the whole.

The Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement to send Bill 126 to committee of the whole?

Hon Mrs Grier: I am not aware whether there have been discussions with the government House leader. Could I ask that we stand down this decision until I get some sense of what in fact has been discussed?

The Speaker: This matter can be dealt with later on. We note there are no House leaders present in the chamber at this time. We can set this aside for now and the member can come back later when we have had an opportunity to determine what can happen with this.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

The Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 33, the member for York North has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer given by the Minister of Education to his question concerning transfer payments and teachers' salaries. This matter will be debated at 6 pm today.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

WASTE MANAGEMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR LA GESTION DES DÉCHETS

Mrs Grier moved second reading of Bill 143, An Act respecting the Management of Waste in the Greater Toronto Area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act / Projet de loi 143, Loi concernant la gestion des déchets dans la région du grand Toronto et modifiant la Loi sur la protection de l'environnement.

Hon Mrs Grier: I am pleased that debate on waste management in this province is about to begin. In my six years in this Legislature I think this is the first time members have had an opportunity to debate a comprehensive approach to waste management, despite the fact that the issue of waste management has preoccupied many of us and the time of this House in question period. There has not been a comprehensive piece of legislation getting to the heart of the matter that is beginning to deal with the problem.

In Ontario, as in the rest of Canada, our quality of life and prospects for economic prosperity have traditionally been rooted in an advantage that few other jurisdictions on earth enjoy. We are a community of approximately nine million people occupying almost 900,000 square kilometres of land rich in resources.

But we have long been aware that this abundance is not without limits and that we have been straining those limits. That is the hard fact that underlies the evolution of environmental protection in Ontario. It has been addressed in legislation and in programs developed and refined over the past quarter century by a series of governments.

In spite of current economic conditions, public concern for the environment remains high. In fact, it has strengthened in focus. The public has adopted recycling as part of everyday life wherever recycling systems have been put in place. They are becoming more selective as consumers, creating a demand for environmentally friendly products. The greening of public attitudes is manifest here and around the world in disapproval of some of the products and byproducts from industries, businesses and institutions that are often seen to be harming the environment.

For their part, many in industry, commerce and institutions are thinking and working in more environmental ways. They are quick to recognize the advantages in cost and efficiency of low-waste, low-pollution operations and also the marketability of greener, environmentally friendly products.

We are now building on the foundations of environmental legislation established in Ontario and launching major new environmental initiatives to address the public's environmental and economic concerns.

Today I am pleased to introduce the Waste Management Act, 1991 for second reading in the Legislature. This is our government's first milestone in refining the province's environmental laws so that we may maintain a level of environmental quality which will nurture a healthy, productive society and a strong, sustainable economy.

With this legislation we are beginning to implement an environmental strategy which is based on four major policy directions.

First, this is a green government. The environment must be taken into account by all ministries in every policy and program that is decided upon.

Second, stewardship: Everyone has a stake in the environment, a responsibility to protect it and a right to enjoy its benefits.

Third, conserving: To create a sustainable environment, we must transform ourselves from a consumer society to a conserver society.

Fourth, prevention: Our programs have a double focus, to develop strategies to prevent further damage and to clean up existing problems in our environment.

The Waste Management Act, 1991 addresses urgent environmental issues facing this province and provides the government with the legal authority to resolve them and begin implementing strong and consistent environmental policies.

The act provides a framework within which we can accelerate the transition from a consumer society to a conserver society strongly based on the 3Rs—reduce, reuse and recycle—with the emphasis on waste reduction.

This legislation is the foundation for implementing a series of regulatory initiatives for waste reduction, the first of which I released for public consultation last month. This legislation is the means by which we intend to achieve more than 25% waste diversion from disposal by 1992 and more than 50% by the year 2000, goals that have been espoused for quite some time but for which programs and policies were not put in place to enable us to reach them.

We are tackling a waste management system that has traditionally been heavily weighted in favour of simply finding disposal sites instead of reducing the amount to be disposed of in the first place. With this legislation, and regulations and programs to follow, we intend to require municipalities to account for and maintain records of the full cost of waste management facilities and to establish disposal fees which are substantial enough to reflect those true costs.

At the same time we will expedite approvals of 3Rs facilities, such as composting and recycling plants, to remove some of the barriers that have impeded their establishment up to now.

This act will help us to improve the public's ability to carry out the 3Rs so that waste reduction measures are consistent across the province. This means mandatory recycling and leaf and yard material composting programs in all the larger municipalities. This will allow more people to share the benefits enjoyed by those who live in our already waste-conscious municipalities.

In the industrial, commercial and institutional sectors which account for some 60% of the solid waste now going to disposal, the act will allow the province to require annual waste audits, implementation of waste reduction action plans and recycling programs in designated large operations. A growing number of companies and institutions are already doing these things to achieve substantial waste reduction as well as significant improvements in operational efficiency. This legislation will help us in bringing the rest along and establishing a fair and competitive environment.

This legislation also extends our ability to deal with packaging and containers, which make up an estimated 21% of our waste stream, and in addition, to deal with disposable products and products that pose other waste management problems. Here too we expect to develop an effective program of waste audits and waste reduction action plans.

Sections of the act focus attention on the greater Toronto area where we have close to four million resident making up about 44% of the total Ontario population. It is in the GTA consequently that we find the greatest need for solutions to deal with disposal sites that are rapidly reaching their original design capacities. At the same time, this concentration of population and economic activity provides the greatest possible opportunities for success in 3Rs initiatives.

We have established the Interim Waste Authority to provide provincial leadership to the GTA in establishing long-term waste disposal facilities and seeing them through the environmental assessment process. The act before us today provides some of the authority essential to achieving this goal.

The act also provides for implementation as required of some of the interim GTA waste disposal decisions which have already been announced and discussed in the Legislature.

Current estimates of waste disposal indicate that capacities at the Keele Valley and Brock West landfill sites are greater than were expected some months ago. Ministry staff are evaluating these latest estimates, and I look forward to seeing how they hold up. Obviously those estimates have significant bearing on the need for actual use of the interim capacity measures, specifically for example, the need for one transfer station in Durham region and the need for a lift at the Keele Valley landfill site.

Regardless of changing estimates, however, all our information does point clearly to a need for a lift at the Britannia Road landfill site in Peel region starting next year. The risk of not preparing for interim capacity at Keele Valley and Britannia Road is one I cannot take for the sake of both the environment and the economy of the greater Toronto area.

The act before us today reflects in varying degrees all four of the basic environmental policy directions this government has established.

It encourages a green government approach to waste reduction at the regional and municipal level in tune with provincial initiatives, including the waste reduction efforts led by the Ministry of Government Services.

It helps provide a better environment for stewardship, with opportunities for industry, commerce and institutions as well as the general public. The consultation we have begun on the proposed 3Rs regulations ensures full public access to the process of developing the forms this stewardship will take. With the strong emphasis placed on waste reduction, we are implementing conservation over consumption and creating conditions more favourable to conservator approaches.

Similarly, the act will help us prevent pollution. It will help us guide the public, governments, industries, commerce and institutions in anticipating and reducing the production of waste materials and diverting others from disposal into productive use. These basic policy directions will continue to be paramount as I bring forward further legislative initiatives, policies and programs.

These approaches have been incorporated into the municipal-industrial strategy for abatement. The MISA program is focused at more than 300 industries discharging directly into our lakes and rivers and more than 12,000 industries which tie into our sewer systems. We have strengthened that program to emphasize pollution prevention and to reduce the discharge of persistent toxic contaminants by reducing the use of these contaminants in the first place.

These new directions I am implementing share the values and reflect the principles adopted by the Ontario Round Table on Environment and Economy, which I am privileged to chair. The government is continuing to look to this multistakeholder group for the strategic planning essential to the development of a conservator society in an environment that will nurture and sustain quality of life as well as healthy economic activity.

As a government, we are convinced that solutions to environmental problems cannot wait for more prosperous times. The challenge before us is to develop creative programs to respond to the need for immediate and strong action and to do this in a way which is fiscally responsible.

When we look at the role of various economic sectors in environmental protection, we are looking to more than just reducing the environmental problems they create. Now we are seeing the greening of industry, which in turn has led to green industry, where pollution prevention is the key principle. The government is working with business and industry to increase their competitiveness in a world market for environmental expertise which could exceed $200 billion.

In developing comprehensive programs which emphasize pollution prevention as well as the other policy directions I have outlined, the Ministry of the Environment is providing a spur to all industries to come up with technological advances to meet our regulations. The ministry wants to establish an environmental climate which will encourage industry to bring about this kind of development.

The government is on the road to providing the people of Ontario with the quality of life to which they aspire, in an environmentally sustainable economy. Reducing the amount of waste we produce and disposing of the residue in an environmentally sound way is an important step along that road and I welcome the opportunity to debate those principles and this legislation in this Legislature.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members who wish to participate in this debate?

Mr Sorbara: I want to advise my colleagues in the House that I intend to speak at some length on this bill.

An hon member: Surprise, surprise.

Mr Sorbara: There is the say-nothing member for Middlesex shouting out her insults again, sent in my direction during—

Mrs Mathysen: Mr Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Please take your seat. Yes, I understand. You were not the one.

Mrs Mathysen: That is right.

The Deputy Speaker: Take your seat, please. It was not the member for Middlesex; it was another member.

Mr Sorbara: Then I would apologize to the member for Middlesex. I am so accustomed now to hearing insults hurled at me from her during the course of deliberations in the standing committee on administration of justice that I just naturally assumed, and that was in error.

1550

Interjections.

Mr Sorbara: I guess we are going to have a lot of interjections through this. I will just try to ignore them as best I can.

I plan to speak at some length on this bill. Members will be hearing through the course of a very long debate arguments that I think will establish conclusively that the best course for the Minister of the Environment would simply be to withdraw this bill and start again. I will be making submissions to the House as to why I consider that to be the only appropriate course.

I want to say at the outset that the members will be hearing very strong arguments from a number of our members, not just members from ridings in the greater Toronto area but from members representing all parts of the province, because in our view the draconian nature of this bill can and will have implications for every single community in Ontario and indeed beyond that to the whole course of solving our environmental problems and working out environmental solutions in Ontario.

It is difficult for me to believe that the Minister of the Environment, the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, could actually allow her name to be associated with this bill, and I say that as honestly and as straightforwardly as I can. I have several reasons for saying that, but the one I think is paramount in my mind is the extent to which the Minister of the Environment, when she sat on this side of the House—I think the Chair was just directly in front of me here—was an outspoken, articulate, powerful and respected advocate on issues relating to the environment.

It went beyond the role her leader, the now Premier, had assigned to her as Environment critic. You could tell, particularly in the interchanges between her and the member for St Catharines, while he was Minister of the Environment, that she understood the issues. In particular, she understood the extent of the right to be heard that the laws of the province had vested in the people of Ontario, which was paramount in her understanding of environmental issues: the right to be heard, the right of a community to participate in the decisions that would affect them.

She went so far, during the course of the last Parliament, as to introduce an environmental bill of rights. That legislation was never passed, but it vested in individuals and groups in a community the opportunity to take their case to an independent tribunal and to have it deliberated upon.

The essence of Bill 143, the bill she introduced in this House a few days ago and now sponsors in second reading, the kernel of the bill, is to abrogate the rights of citizens in virtually every respect and virtually every law that has governed environmental protection, I say to the minister, since we started legislating in those areas in this Parliament. She laughs. When I say that, she laughs. I am going to get into why that is the case, but I will just set it out for the members, because it is important we get to that matter urgently.

This bill provides that, by order, the Minister of the Environment can, under her pen and under the authority of Bill 143, order that there be an additional capacity at the Britannia landfill site and order that there be additional capacity for Metro's garbage at the Keele Valley landfill site, without the ability of the citizens of this province to be heard on the matter.

This is how far it goes. This bill allows that the order of the Minister of the Environment bypasses the Environmental Assessment Act, which she used to believe in, the Municipal Act, the Planning Act, the Ontario Municipal Board Act, and even beyond that, the rights that accrue to municipalities under private contract.

What are we left with? I will tell members what we are left with. After her order comes down, under her signature or the signature of one of her directors, the people of the province have an opportunity for 21 days to express their view in writing, and that is it. After that the matter is closed, and after that the garbage trucks come, and after that her will shall prevail. This is rule by royal prerogative and it looks very bad on the now Minister of the Environment, a former champion of environmental rights: 21 days to respond in writing; no hearing.

I, as a representative of the people of York Centre and the Maple community and the Vaughan community, and thousands of others who might have something to say in the process of a hearing, are told that we have no right at all to be heard. All our democracy, all our rights legislation, everything we believe in as legislators, is based on the right to be heard and she has presented us with a bill that says: "You shall no longer have those rights. I can personally order the expansion of a dump. I can personally inflict that on the people of a community"—Peel, York region, and by extension really anywhere else. If this passes, this sets one of the most dangerous precedents in environmental regulation and environmental management of any jurisdiction in North America, the denial of the right to be heard.

Imagine if in this Legislature the government were able to bring forward a bill and say: "There's going to be no debate. If you have a concern about it, write us a letter. Send us your views by mail."

I want to tell members what that is like. My constituents have been writing the Minister of the Environment for months. They have been communicating by mail. They are not given an opportunity to meet her personally. That would be too much. But they have been writing her. Do members know what they get? No answer at all; no response.

Let me just give members one example. This her across the floor, who talks about the 3Rs—

Some hon members: Heroine.

Mr Sorbara: I do not want to make it a sexist differentiation. This hero or heroine of the environment proclaims that she is going to implement the 3Rs in Ontario. Let me just tell her a little story or two about that.

In the municipality I live in, York region, they are anxious to get on with the 3Rs. In fact, they are anxious to build a recycling depot and a composting depot. Do members know what? They cannot do it, and they cannot do it because under the Regional Municipality of York Act, passed by this Parliament, they do not have the authority to do it. They need a change in legislation. It is not a big change in legislation; it is a very small amendment to the York region act.

They bought a building to get on with their plans for dealing with her majesty's 3Rs. They paid money for the building. They developed plans to use that building for recycling and composting, but they need authority to do that. They were limited in their authority and asked the previous minister, the member for St Catharines, for that authority. He said, "Yes, we will bring forward legislation." Then there was an election and he was no longer the Minister of the Environment. That gives members a sense of how long ago this matter emerged.

They needed the authority, so they wrote when the new minister was sworn in. They asked that a bill be brought forward by her or the Minister of Municipal Affairs to empower them to do this. The letter came from the chairman of York region, as would be appropriate. Do members know what the Minister of the Environment said? Nothing. There was no response whatever, no letter back saying: "Thank you for your letter. I understand. Yes, I'm in favour of the 3Rs," or: "No, I'm not in favour of the 3Rs. That will be very difficult. The legislative calendar is very busy." Nothing, no response whatever.

The chairman of York region wrote a letter and asked the Premier to ask some minister to get on with that, with a simple amendment to the York region act. Do members know what the chairman of York region heard from the Premier in response? Nothing. No letter, no phone call, no postcard, no suggestion that, "Yes, we'll deal with that down the road." Nothing. Do members know what? The bill is still not in the House.

The Minister of the Environment, who stands up here and unabashedly proclaims her belief in the 3Rs, has not got the decency to advise York region whether she will bring forward such a measure. I find it hard to believe. It is a very good example of the extent to which what this minister and this government say about environmental issues contradicts what she and her government actually do.

Now, as she perhaps exits from the chamber, I would like to tell my colleagues in the chamber how we got into this mess in the first place. It is a mess. If any members were at the demonstration outside this morning and saw the hundreds of people who were here from the city of Vaughan and York region and the locality of Maple, they could see the anger and the resentment in their faces, all of them working men and women who have other things to do than come down here and protest. When a community rents buses and books off work and arranges to come down here for a demonstration, there is something seriously wrong.

Let me explain to my friends what went wrong. I want to take members back to the election campaign of the summer of 1990. Very serious environmental issues arose at that time. I do not want to go through every single promise the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, now the Minister of the Environment, and the member for York South, now the Premier, made during the course of that election campaign. I think, though, of her promise to immediately bring in an environmental bill of rights.

I too will be signing Christmas cards during the course of the next month and a half, but not during this debate, I say to the Minister of the Environment.

I want to take her back to the election campaign. There was concern at that time that our government was going to take measures to identify a landfill site in Whitevale in the community of Durham or in my own home community.

Hon Mrs Grier: Where was the public process then?

Mr Sorbara: The Minister of the Environment asks, "Where was the public process then?" I want to tell her that in saying that, she admits there is no public process in this bill.

Let's go back to that election campaign. Concerned that the government was going to put into place a public process for consideration of a landfill site in Whitevale and the expansion of Keele Valley and perhaps Brock and Britannia, the Leader of the Opposition at that time, the member for York South, the person who is now the Premier, visited every one of those sites. Our friend the member for Durham West was there, so he knows the lie. He knows the extent to which the Premier and the Minister of the Environment and the government of which he is a part broke their word.

Mr Wiseman: No, they didn't.

Mr Sorbara: My friend the member for Durham West says, "No, they didn't." I have the transcripts.

Hon Mrs Grier: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Will you ask the member to withdraw that allegation, please?

The Deputy Speaker: I frankly did not pay total attention. If there was an offence, I am sure the honourable member will recognize it.

Hon Mrs Grier: The member used the word "lie," Mr Speaker.

Mr Sorbara: There is no offending statement, Mr Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I will review the transcript, but if there was an offensive word used, I am sure and positive that the honourable member will withdraw it. Please continue the debate.

Mr Sorbara: There was nothing offensive in what I said. I am simply putting the facts on the record in this House. Talk about offending statements. Let me defer for a moment. The now Premier, in launching his campaign, said to the people of Ontario, "David Peterson lied to you about automobile insurance." I am quoting the now Premier.

Hon Mrs Grier: What about the deficit? What about the surplus and the deficit?

Mr Sorbara: No, I am quoting the member for York South. A year later, the Premier, without any embarrassment, without any shame, without an apology to David Peterson, simply withdrew his plan for public automobile insurance. We now have the bill that David Peterson and the member for Bruce brought forward and passed in this Legislature.

There is nothing offensive in what I said. I am just putting the facts on the record. The facts are these: The now Premier stood in my riding, at the edge of the Keele Valley landfill site, and promised to the people of my riding that an NDP government would not allow any expansion of the Keele Valley landfill site without a full hearing and assessment under the Environmental Assessment Act. That is what he said. That is not conjecture. It is not faulty memory.

Mr Stockwell: Verbatim.

Mr Sorbara: It is verbatim. That is what he said.

Just to build the argument, the now Premier of the province also said, when asked about the cynicism about politicians, and I am quoting more or less verbatim, "I think it comes from politicians saying one thing when they're in opposition and another thing when they're in government." There is no more startling example than the betrayal—is that unparliamentary, I ask the minister who is signing Christmas cards during this debate?—of the word given by the Premier of the province to the people of Maple about expansion of the landfill site. He did not qualify it. He did not say, "We're going to examine the extent of the emergency, and if there's no emergency, then we will have a full EA."

That put us on a little bit of a spot. We were in government and we had a responsibility to make sure to the people of this province that we brought forward policies that were both realistic and vested real rights in the people. So we said, and we took our hits for this: "We're not going to go through a process under the Environmental Assessment Act. We will go through a process under the Environmental Protection Act."

There are all the same opportunities for a hearing and to submit one's case that exist under the Environmental Protection Act. The only difference between the two acts in that regard is that under the Environmental Assessment Act a review has to be undertaken of all the other options and alternatives to using that site. Under the Environmental Protection Act, you have to be as scrupulous, thorough, scientific and environmentally correct in the choice of sites as the other act. The only difference is that you do not have to look at alternatives, other locations or other technologies. During the campaign we undertook to do just that.

The now Premier was more absolute in his undertaking, in his promise to the people. He said, "We are going to have a full hearing of the kind that the people of Maple want and expect." It is now one year and four months since that time. The Premier broke his word. The Premier and the Minister of the Environment are doing exactly what they said they would not do, that they would not abrogate the rights of the people, that in fact they would turn to the act that vested the most thorough and comprehensive rights this province has in environmental legislation to protect their interest.

This was the Premier who said David Peterson lied. This is the Premier who said we had misled the people. Bill 143 is a great fraud on the people of Ontario. It is the most serious deception one could imagine from a minister who used to enjoy some confidence on environmental issues.

Let me explain why it is such a fraud on the people of this province. It has all the rhetoric of good environmental policy in three of its four parts—unnecessary, by the way, because what the minister wants to accomplish through this bill in the area of the 3Rs, reduction, reuse and recycling, is all possible without this legislation. She has the authority to do it right now. One of the reasons we have a bill here is because her plans are not ready, so she delays with legislation.

All of this nice rhetoric contains a poison pill so serious that it will destroy her credibility and the credibility of her government for the balance of its term in office during this Parliament. I vow to my colleagues in this Parliament, I vow to the people of my community and I vow to the people of Ontario that I will move heaven and earth, I will do everything in my power to make sure that discredit, which is so deserved now because of what has happened, becomes a reality.

How did we get into this mess? I think the first mistake happened on September 6, but that is now history.

Shortly after the Minister of the Environment was sworn in, she began making statements setting out her government's policy on garbage and waste disposal. In every single instance she wrapped her words in fine rhetoric. Maybe her time in opposition was just a matter of fine rhetoric too.

I go back to November 21, 1990. The minister made her first statement in the Legislature. She revealed her conservator action plan. This plan reordered the 3Rs, putting priority with reduction first, then reuse and, as a last resort, recycling. Very fine words. Then comes the beginning of the poison.

She said there was going to be an Interim Waste Authority to look for a permanent site. She said at that time as well: "We are not going to consider Whitevale. We do not need to consider Whitevale." She said with such gall in this Legislature her plans would be so successful that there was going to be no garbage gap. That is to say, there would be no need for an interim site while her Interim Waste Authority found a permanent site, no gap. She said it in here, and I will sit down and take my seat if she wants to stand up and deny she said it. She said, "There is going to be no garbage gap." I see she is not asking for the floor. She is still signing Christmas cards.

In her November 21 statement, the minister made statements indicating there would be no garbage gap in the GTA because her waste reduction regulations were going to be effective and she was sure the people of the GTA would be successful in diverting enough waste from landfill to extend the lifespan of the current landfill sites until long-term sites were approved. Now we know that was not true. She said there would be no gap, and now we are debating a bill which clearly acknowledges that there is a gap, that we are going to need some interim capacity and that she will, by divine right, determine where that garbage shall go.

She has determined now that it is going to go to Maple a riding represented by a Liberal, by the way. It is ver-interesting. It is not going to go into Whitevale because the premier stood there as well. "If you are going to take a hit, take a hit in a Liberal riding," says the Premier. "My God, it's not take a hit where we won a seat. Take a hit in a Liberal riding. After all, they've had garbage there for 20 years so what difference does it make." Take the hit in the Liberal riding and do it under Bill 143 in a way that does not give the people the right to be heard.

It is not going to work. The people of Maple are going to be heard. The people of Vaughan are going to be heard. The people of Ontario are going to be heard. The minister cannot rule by divine right of kings or queens any more. That is what Parliament was all about.

She says she needs the bill by Christmas. That is three readings. "Get this over with. Just get me out of here. Get the Legislature closed down. I need the bill by Christmas." The minister has not yet abrogated the rights of parliamentarians to be heard in the Legislature, and we will be debating this bill long after she has been discredited by every environmental group, not only in Ontario but in Canada.

If the minister presents a bill that says the people of Maple will not be heard, we have to speak for them. We have to talk and talk and bring it to the attention of every group, of every community, that the Minister of the Environment now rules by what she thinks is best.

It was back on November 21 when the minister first said there would be no garbage gap and no need for an interim study. We said then that we hoped she would be right, that we hoped we could have a new place to dump this garbage that is being produced so rapidly. We said when we wished her well on that agenda. We do wish her well on that agenda and we want her to get on with that agenda.

But we said at that time as well, "Now, look. You have taken Whitevale off the list of possibilities. So that means, any extension, that you have reduced the number of sites that might be suitable for interim capacity. Even if you don't need them, get on with the hearing process. Start one now. Identify and admit that there is a possibility."

She refused to do that. She said, "No, I don't need that." This was a year ago today short two days; it was November 21, 1990, when she said: "No gap. No need for a hearing. It's okay. I am going to look after this with my MRs. We don't have to do this." A year later a bill comes before this House with a poison pill in it that abrogates the rights of citizens right across Ontario to be heard.

We will not even ask for the Environmental Assessment Act any more. That is what they promised, but we will not ask for that. No. It is okay. Just give us something. The Environmental Protection Act: There is a law they are responsible for. Let us be heard. Let us make our case.

I want to tell members why the minister will not do that. It is very simple. Because if anyone put forward a proposal to expand the Keele Valley landfill site and increase its capacity for garbage, it would never survive a hearing. It would be rejected by just about any environmental panel we could put together. It would not survive it. It would be rejected. It would not pass. It would not come up to speed. It would not meet the standards we now put in place to determine where our garbage should go, to the extent that it goes in a hole in the ground.

The minister would lose. Metro Toronto would lose. The panel, after hearing all the evidence, would say: "Sorry. That site is not appropriate." So the way you get around that if you are the Minister of the Environment is you say, "There's going to be no hearing." Now it starts to make sense why this whole thing is there: "Liberal riding. The people have had garbage in their backyard for 20 years. I don't upset another community. I know it won't pass the standards that apply to these sorts of things, so I'll take away the right to be heard. I'll even take away the rights that accrue under a private contract."

The minister can, just with the stroke of a pen, eliminate a private contract. By the way, there is a contract between Metro Toronto and York region and the city of Vaughan, and do members know what that contract says? When the current capacity is met, they will never apply for additional capacity. That is what the contract says. That is what a judge would read when he read that contract when someone came to ask him to enforce it.

So this minister says: "I have to find a place for garbage. I've got a garbage gap. It's not like 1990 when I said there was no gap." She actually believes that if she says there is no garbage gap, there is no garbage gap, and when she says there is a garbage gap, there is a garbage gap.

We could have been a year into the hearing for the expansion of Keele Valley by now. Do members know why the minister would not allow that hearing and now presents a bill that says such a hearing will be illegal? Because it would not pass the standard. It is simple. It would not pass the standard.

Why would it not pass the standard? I will tell members why. Generally, in Ontario and in Canada, we do not put garbage sites in the middle of cities, in the middle of urban areas. We do not do that. Actually we have never done that. It used to be, when Ontario was basically a rural province and most of our forefathers lived on farms, there was very little garbage, and to the extent there was garbage there was the back-40. You dug a hole and you put the garbage there and no one ever thought about it again.

Now we still look for some sort of 1991 version of the back-40, and that is not in the heart of the city. Let me tell members what has happened in Maple since the dump that is now in existence was approved after a hearing. Since then an urban community has grown up all around the area. Thousands and thousands of people have moved into the area. Under laws passed by this province—the Planning Act, the Municipal Act, the Regional Municipality of York Act and the Township of Vaughan Act—laws that allow for communities to grow, an urban area has grown up.

In fact, the city hall for the city of Vaughan is directly across the street from this landfill site. All of that community grew up on the basis that a private contract and the laws of this province would provide for the closing of that landfill site some time in the 1990s and no later than the year 2003. People moved there on the basis of that undertaking. People bought houses. They brought their children to schools. They set up businesses. It is an urban area now.

I used to live there. It is a beautiful community. Thousands and thousands of people have moved in.

There are a lot of things that go towards the setting of standards you apply in determining where a landfill site should go, but one of the first is that you do not put it in the middle of a builtup area. That is why the minister will not have a hearing, because it is a builtup area now. The dump is in the middle of a city. I invite any member who is interested to come out and see. You do not need to fly over it to see. You just have to drive there. On the one side are city hall, houses, schools and businesses, and on the other side of the street is Canada's largest dump.

Mr Stockwell: Bob Rae saw it.

Mr Sorbara: The Premier was there. He saw it. He was probably encouraged to make that kind of commitment because he knew this place would never pass the scrutiny of any hearing process under the Environmental Protection Act or the Environmental Assessment Act.

Let me tell members something else. This site sits on top of the headwaters of the Don River system in southern Ontario. It is in the Oak Ridges moraine. This government put special protections in for the Oak Ridges moraine. So we have a landfill site on the Oak Ridges moraine and the headwaters of the Don. They tell people they want to clean up the rivers, yet they are going to pile a huge new capacity for garbage right on the headwaters of the Don.

Everything we know about dumps says it does not matter how much clay you put in, sooner or later they leak. Sooner or later the effluent goes through the clay and into the ground water below. That is why when we were in government we put in special protections for the Oak Ridges moraine. That is why we began that process. Now the Minister of the Environment, knowing that an expansion of Keele Valley would not survive a hearing process, brings forward a bill that says, "I'm ordering that Metro Toronto do all the engineering to expand it and I'm going to prohibit a hearing." This is the most offensive kind of injustice that could ever be done to the people of the province.

We were at November 21, 1990. Things proceed apace. The minister slowly started to intimate in speeches and announcements: "My goodness, maybe there's going to be a waste gap, a garbage gap. Maybe we'll need additional capacity." So her next strategy was to wrap the next announcement in language that made her look progressive to a very small group of people in Ontario. She said the garbage had to stay in the home communities.

This is interesting, because Metro Toronto had spent about $10 million developing a plan to transport its garbage by rail to a site in the Kirkland Lake area, not in the community of Kirkland Lake but in an abandoned open-pit mine in the Kirkland Lake area, an area so uninhabited that it is not organized into any municipality whatever. I am not saying that was an answer to the garbage problem; I am simply saying Metropolitan Toronto was working on plans to do that and was preparing to bring a submission to a hearing to determine whether that was an acceptable solution under environmental principles.

The Minister of the Environment did not tell them not to do it when she took office. She did not say, "No, don't spend that money," until April 2. That was the day the Minister of the Environment really screwed up the works. She said to Metro Toronto: "Just cut that out. Cut out that business of sending garbage to Kirkland Lake. Don't even think about it. Under my plan garbage stays in your own municipality." She would not even allow Metropolitan Toronto have its proposals considered under a hearing process.

This is the minister who wanted an environmental bill of rights. This is the minister who used to champion the rights of citizens to be heard. So citizens in Metro said: "We take her at her word. We want a hearing for this. We don't demand that this be the solution. We just want it to be heard." She said again: "No hearing; that doesn't fit within my plans. I've got a different plan. The garbage stays in the backyard."

Her announcement at that time was very interesting. She said the people of Peel region would have to find a site in Peel region for the garbage they produce, that comes from their homes and their businesses. "We want a site in Peel for the garbage Peel produces."

She said to the people in Durham: "You will find a site in Durham to dump your garbage. You're going to keep your garbage at home. That's going to force you to reduce and reuse and recycle. You have to find, I say to the people of Durham, a site there."

But she said to the people of York region that they would have to find a site in York region not just for the garbage of York region—that would be easy—but that the people of York region would have to find a site for all the garbage of Metropolitan Toronto. How fair is that, talking about fairness, the party that champions fairness? I want to make the point again. Can members imagine that by fiat of the Minister of the Environment, York region is now responsible for having a site within its borders to deal with all the garbage generated by 2.5 million people in Metropolitan Toronto? Why York region?

If you believe in environmental principles it does not make any sense. Even if you were going to be fair, if you were going to be stupid and fair, at least you would say the garbage from Metro Toronto would be equally allocated in Peel, Durham and York. Those are the three municipalities that border Metropolitan Toronto. That would be stupid but it would be fair, I think.

We could not believe it that day when she made that announcement. We could not believe she would be so utterly arbitrary, insensitive and vicious to the people of York region. Yes, there are two Liberal members representing that area, but surely the minister is not so crassly partisan as to take that into consideration—or maybe she is.

I have been pleading since that announcement for one justification as to why York region becomes the situs for the landfill facility for Metropolitan Toronto, and I have never been given an answer, not even the courtesy of a reply. Why not Durham? Are there too many NDP members from Durham? Why not Peel? Are there too many NDP members from Peel? Why not Simcoe? Why not Essex? Why not Kent? Why not Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry?

Mr Villeneuve: It's too far—and East Grenville.

Mr Sorbara: Now the member for S-D-G & East Grenville says it is too far. I think it probably is too far, but why York region?

Let me put it this way: Let's examine the standards of the Minister of the Environment on this basis. Let's assume that just across the border from York region there is a site that is A-1. It is perfect. It has all the geological and geographical attributes that make it the site for garbage. Let's assume that site exists out there, somewhere beyond the boundary of York region. The Minister of the Environment says, "I prefer a second-class site in York region over a site outside the boundary that is environmentally superior."

How can that be? How can a minister who says, "We want to base our environmental initiatives on the highest of standards," say that an inferior site in York region shall be preferred to a site outside York region that is superior as far as garbage is concerned? How can she do that? What are her standards? Are they just political? Is it just convenient? Is she saying to the people of Maple: "You've taken garbage for 20 years and you're represented by a Liberal. We've got to put it somewhere and there is a garbage dump. Sorry for the mistake I made back in November 1990. We're going to have to do something about it and we can't have a hearing because that site couldn't pass a hearing, so I'll bring forward Bill 143?"

Bill 143 says that all the standards, the rights, the processes we have had to make sure we do the right thing are hereby abrogated. They are denied. They are withdrawn. "Do not look to the Municipal Act. Do not look to the Environmental Assessment Act. Do not look to the Environmental Protection Act. Do not look to private contract. Do not look to anything. I hereby order," says the Minister of the Environment, "that the garbage shall go there. I hereby order Metropolitan Toronto to do the engineering studies. I hereby order that any additional garbage capacity that emerges before the long-term site in York region is identified shall go in the backyards of the new community of Maple.

"I hereby order that," she says to the people of Maple. "I order it. It shall be done," she says, "and I'm going to bring forward a bill in the Legislature that is going to cut off your right to a hearing. You can write me. You've got 21 days to write me and it doesn't matter what you say in those written submissions. After that it is going to be a done deal. I'm tired of this garbage mess," she says. "I've been in hot water on it for a whole year. I can't stand the pressure. I am going to rule by fiat. Rights are denied. Forget about a hearing. Don't write submissions; it's not worth it. The law is going to pass and I'm going to order it."

I cannot believe it. I just keep thinking, is this the same woman who introduced an environmental bill of rights when she was in opposition? Is this the same woman who used to chastise the member for St Catharines for even the most minor exemption from the Environmental Assessment Act? Is this the same member who used to stand in her place and condemn a government for even the smallest exemption when she knew that the exemption was minor and it did not affect anyone?

Now she is going to expand Canada's largest dump sitting on the headwaters of the Don River in the Oak Ridges moraine. She is going to abrogate a private contract, a solemn undertaking, that the dump would not be expanded. This is interesting, because years ago, when the people of Maple used to raise their concern about the possibility that Keele Valley would be expanded, I used to say to them I thought not because there is a contract, signed by Metropolitan Toronto, that is enforceable in courts, saying that it would never seek expansion. The only way to get around that contract is to introduce a law in Parliament abrogating the rights that exist under those contracts, so I said to them not to worry, that I could not see the then minister ever doing that, that it would be draconian.

Do members know what? Here it is, Bill 143. Part III of this act says she can order it, and she will order it, notwithstanding private contracts. Those private contracts will not impair her ability to order an expansion of the site. What other private contracts will we see the Premier and the member for—

Mr Scott: Where's Bob Rae?

Mr Sorbara: I tell my friend the member for St George-St David that he should not ask where the Premier is. He is somewhere in Europe campaigning for Glenda Jackson to get a seat in the House of Commons. I do not expect to see him back here, given what the Treasurer just did on the budgetary process. Members should forget about the Premier; he is hiding out in Paris, the good life.

My goodness, these guys have come to power and they are just loving it. The Premier is campaigning for Glenda Jackson. Wowee. The Fabian socialists are going to take up new seats, thanks to the Premier over there in jolly England. He is in Paris. He is having a great time, he sends his regards.

The Deputy Speaker: Please speak to the bill.

Mr Stockwell: The only one who doesn't need Prince Charles is Peter Kormos. The only one who's safe is Kormos.

Mr Sorbara: My friend the member for Etobicoke West says the only one who is safe is the member for Welland-Thorold. I am not sure how safe he is. It may well be that this government, in the way in which it now abrogates rights, might just abrogate the right of the member for Welland-Thorold to effectively represent his constituents. They threw him out of cabinet.

The Deputy Speaker: Please, I would ask you to speak to the bill.

Mr Sorbara: I will indeed speak to the bill. We were at April 2 when the minister, of her own accord and without consultation—this is the most amazing part. She did not even phone up or write any political leader in York region or Metropolitan Toronto. She just decided, after thinking about it perhaps after a cocktail party, that Metro's garbage would go to York region. How is that a reasonable environmental decision?

Garbage created by 2.5 million people needs a pretty good place to put it, if you do not use modern technologies, which is what she should be doing. You need a pretty big hole. She decided that it was York region. She said: "No hearing on the Kirkland Lake proposal. That's too far away. You've got to have it in your backyard. After all, Metro's got few sites, so I think Metro's garbage is going to go in York region." Now she is passing a law to make that a reality.

Do members know what? It is not going to happen, because we are going to fight, we are going to oppose and we are going to object. Members probably heard the demonstration here today. That was small; that was peanuts compared to what is going to happen down the road. She cannot just take away people's right to be heard. She cannot just do that. Members should imagine if they are charged with a criminal offence and the prosecution lays out the case before the judge and then the Minister of the Environment says: "Excuse me; the defendant is not going to be heard. The judge shall make his decision based on what he's heard so far from the prosecution."

That is exactly what she is doing in the area of environmental rights, and it will not survive. This bill will not survive if we in the opposition have anything to do with it. I remember the Premier saying "We'll fight this thing till hell freezes over" when he was in opposition.

Mr Stockwell: It must be chilly in Hades.

Mr Sorbara: It is getting awfully cold and it is not just because it is November 19 and winter is approaching. This is a fight. The Minister of the Environment has waged war on the people of Maple, on the people of Vaughan, on the people of York region and on the people of Ontario and we will not tolerate it. Her bill, by the way, says, "You can write us within 21 days with your views on what we decide to do."

I guess that is one of the biggest offending parts of all. If you talk to any individual or group involved in these sorts of matters, you will know, Mr Speaker—and I know that you are interested in this—given the complexity, the scientific information, the environmental information of the documentation in support of a submission or an application for a landfill site, those documents cannot even be reviewed to find out what they really say within 21 days. That was made clear to me by representatives from the municipality. Even in an application for a minor amendment, a variance, before a committee of adjustment, they give you more than 21 days. But these documents are this high. The scientific information is very complex, and often you cannot even understand it unless you are able to cross-examine the scientists who wrote it.

We cannot be heard, we cannot cross-examine. We cannot phone up and say we would like a discussion. She says, "No, no; no hearing." It is clear from everything I have seen and heard on this thing that from day one, from the day she was appointed as Minister of the Environment, someone has whispered in her ear that, come hell or high water, we are going to put garbage in Maple.

She said once that there was no garbage gap; then she said there was a garbage gap; then she said, "We're going to put Metro's garbage in York region," then today the bill comes in for second reading and it is there. It allows the minister to make an order to Metro.

This bill, by the way, does not ask Metro to consider Keele Valley; it orders Metro to spend the money to do all the engineering studies preparatory to putting another so-called lift on the Keele Valley landfill site. It does not provide Metro with any money to do that; it does not allow it to consider additional sites, it does not allow it to consider additional technologies. It does not allow any of that. It orders them to do that.

Do members know what one of the other great ironies is in this? The scientists—not the politicians who tell you one thing one day and another thing another day in accordance with convenience—say there is another six years' capacity at the Keele Valley landfill site. That is to say, there are six more years that we could be taking garbage there without any application to expand it.

The minister nods, "Yes, that is right." Well, then, why does she not allow a hearing on expansion? She has six years to mount that hearing.

Interjection.

Mr Sorbara: The Minister of Health, signing her letters, expresses her disappointment.

The Minister of the Environment has six years to allow for a hearing. We asked her to call for a hearing a year ago. We asked her simply not to expand it, but if she was even thinking about it, to allow for a hearing. She said no. Then in April, when she said, "There's going to be an interim site, and it's probably going to be Keele Valley," we said, "Let's have a hearing," and she said no. Now she introduces a bill that says, in law, "There shall be no hearing. There is going to be none. We are not going to allow that."

I say to the minister that she will not get away with taking away people's rights. It will not happen.

The Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, please, just to interrupt you for a few minutes: I have reread what was said and I do not find anything offensive to the standing orders. But I would just like to bring to your attention that sometimes we play with words and it may attract or raise the ire of people. I would just caution you to be careful. Please continue.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Speaker, I invite you to come to your own decision on what happened. The words you just reviewed had to do with what happened during the election campaign. I put before you the fact that the member for York South, then Leader of the Opposition, went to the Keele Valley landfill site—

The Deputy Speaker: The decision has been rendered and there is no point in elaborating on it. I ask you to continue to debate on the bill.

Mr Sorbara: I put it to you that I did not say the Premier lied to the people of the province at that time. I just put the facts before you and I will let the people judge. But I remember that during that campaign, the current Premier cavalierly called anyone who got in his way a liar. That is what he did.

Now his Minister of the Environment is introducing a piece of legislation that takes away the right of the people of Ontario to just a hearing; it takes away the right to a hearing. Can members imagine that, that this is sponsored by New Democrats who used to champion fairness and the right of people to be heard? Has the government discussed this in its caucus? Has it any idea what a terrible precedent this is? There are 100 landfill sites in Ontario that are scheduled to close over the next two years.

Hon Mrs Grier: Eight hundred.

Mr Sorbara: The minister corrects me: It is 800. Does that mean that in each case when they have not got new capacity, the minister is going to order their expansion with her new divine right of kings power and prohibit a hearing? That is what I read.

Hon Mrs Grier: That's the legacy of mismanagement we inherited.

Mr Sorbara: Boy, oh, boy. I will just tell you, Mr Speaker, that is terribly offensive. She says, "It's the mismanagement we inherited." Give me a break. The Minister of the Environment says this is mismanagement. A year ago she said there was no garbage gap. Now she says there is going to be a garbage gap. I ask you, Mr Speaker, where the mismanagement is, where the lack of understanding is.

We said when we were in government that there might be a gap and that we would provide for it and let people be heard. She waited two years. She changed her mind over and over again, and then she says there will be no hearing, and she says it is because of mismanagement back then.

Is that the style of the minister? Is that the policy of the government? If it finds mismanagement, it takes away people's right to a hearing. That is good. Let's apply that to the justice system. There is mismanagement of the courts. Perhaps we were in part responsible for that. So we will take away the people's right to a hearing. We will take away a defendant's right to defend himself or herself. Let's apply that to the Ontario Municipal Board. The municipal board is mismanaged. Perhaps we are partly responsible, do you know what? "We will take away the right to a hearing." That is what she says.

Maybe this is just the beginning. Maybe this is really what this government is all about. It will point to mismanagement when the Tories were in government and when we were in government. It will go back as far as it can. Remember, this is the Premier who said in this House not very long ago, "We have to stop the finger-pointing." She just pointed her finger at me and interjected and said, "It's because of the mismanagement you guys were responsible for." But that is not finger-pointing, by a minister who said a year ago, and less than a year ago: "There's no garbage gap. We have it all solved."

Maybe it is just taking her a little bit longer to get into her portfolio than we had expected. We thought she believed in rights. We thought mismanagement was not the criterion to determine whether or not people had rights. We thought that a Parliament in a democracy was about creating rights and empowering people and investing rights in people. But now we have something different from the Minister of the Environment. She is the leading edge of this government, because she says her bill is leading edge. This is great stuff, she says, Bill 143, "Boy, it allows me to do all sorts of things on recycling."

Talk about mismanagement for a moment. The Minister of the Environment, shortly after she was sworn in and started down this road, promised this Parliament that she would introduce a bill creating the Interim Waste Authority in the spring of 1991. She said, "I will be introducing a bill to create this new corporation that is going to solve our problem." She promised. Talk about mismanagement. She accuses us of mismanagement. Six months later we have a bill. Talk about mismanagement. What about doing what she says she is going to do?

I kept asking for the bill during the spring session. "I really do not need it," she said, "in order to create the authority." I said, "But what about what you said in the House about the fact that you would present a bill, that you would not do this except under legislative authority?" "I am sorry; you are not getting a bill."

My constituents wrote; they did not get an answer. I wrote; I did not get an answer. Talk about mismanagement. Talk about pointing fingers. The minister blames this on us. They have been in power now some 15 or 16 months and she is still talking about mismanagement.

We said there was maybe going to be a garbage gap. We said that people had a right to be heard, that they would be heard and that there would be no expansion of the Keele Valley landfill site except within the context of a full hearing. We believed in people's rights.

This minister says it is okay to take away people's rights if we can point a finger at mismanagement in the past. I think that is a shocking admission. I think that is the most cavalier denial of democracy anyone could ever come up with.

Hon Mr Laughren: Oh, shocked and appalled.

Mr Sorbara: Well now, there is the Treasurer interjecting, not from his seat. I do not want to get on to what he did today. Talk about mismanagement, and there is the Treasurer. If we talk about mismanagement, two weeks ago—

Mr White: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I believe we were supposed to be speaking about Bill 143.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): That is not a point of order. The honourable member is basically on topic.

Mr Sorbara: The Treasurer asked for it. The member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, the Minister of the Environment, says this is all because of Liberal mismanagement. Then the Treasurer, from some seat somewhere in this House, shouts in agreement. Talk about mismanagement: $2.1 billion in mismanagement. He says it is the feds' fault. He says he is going to go, cap in hand, to the federal government to ask for $585 million. He is going to do that, and he says he is going to do that in the same speech in which he condemns the federal government and accuses it of being the source of much of the problem.

I want to tell the Treasurer something while I am on the point. The federal government has a discretion as to whether or not to provide the Treasurer with the $585 million. If it has any discretion whatever, his little finger-pointing exercise at the federal government is not going to stand him in good stead when that government is thinking about whether or not to salvage his budget, which is now in total disrepair. Talk about mismanagement.

Interjections.

Mr Sorbara: Yes, indeed, I think we need to put the environmental assessments in the hands of the Treasurer, who is a champion in the area of management.

We were travelling through time and I now take you, Mr Speaker, to August 16, 1991. That was the day the minister—outside the House, because of course the House was not sitting in mid-August—

Mr Grandmaitre: She never makes an announcement in the House.

Mr Sorbara: My friend the member for Ottawa East says the minister never makes an announcement in the House. That reminds me of something I wanted to get on the record, the fact that when this bill was introduced on October 24, the minister did not have the courage simply to stand up during the period set aside for ministers' statements to say what has been normal and customary during all the five or six years I have been in this Parliament, to stand up and say words to the effect that: "Mr Speaker, later today I will be introducing a bill to deal with waste management in the greater Toronto area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act. That bill will blah blah blah"—you have heard them over and over again, Mr Speaker. The fact that she did not have the courage to stand up and do that and that she just quietly introduced it later on in the day suggests to me she is running scared.

You do not get away with that in parliaments of this sort. When you offend the opposition and you thumb your nose at the opposition, you are in for trouble. I tell my friend the member for Ottawa Centre that her colleague the Minister of the Environment is in for trouble on this bill.

I want to set out to members my position and the position of our party on this bill. We will fight it. We will oppose it. We will urge the minister to separate off and segregate part III so that we can get on even before Christmas with the passage of the rest of it, which is all sweet and honey and offensive to no one. It does not really do very much. They are nice words. We will get on with that to sever off this part and withdraw.

On that basis we would be willing to go forward with Bill 143. On the basis that in this sweetness and honey the minister has put forward a bill that contains a poison pill that is deadly when we think about the rights of citizens, I want to let her know now this bill will be debated and debated and opposed by this party and this opposition for as long as is necessary to convince the government it has made a terrible mistake.

Mr Cousens: The previous government has a certain amount of accounting to do. My friend the honourable member for York Centre—they have two or three over there.

An hon member: That's it.

Mr Cousens: "That's it," they say. You are not sure in this business until election day.

The Liberals developed this whole Interim Waste Authority. I am interested in knowing why they call it the Interim Waste Authority. Is there not a better name? There is nothing short term about this thing. It is long, long term and it looks as if this government is following right through and making it even longer term. That is a short question for my dear friend.

Hon Mrs Grier: Let me congratulate the member for York Centre on the impassioned defence of his constituents. I can understand the position he is taking. Nobody, I can agree with him, wishes to have waste disposal in their particular area. It is unfortunately a reality of our system that we have to find somewhere to dispose of waste.

I want to point out to the member when he makes the distinction between the actions this government has taken and the policies of the previous government that the policies of his government were to open new sites on greenfields without a full environmental assessment. The choice I made—not a choice I particularly enjoyed making, let me assure him—was that it was better for the environment to continue using existing operating sites for which there was no evidence of environmental damage, and to order studies to make sure there was no evidence of environmental damage, rather than to open up new sites without due process of which I am very supportive, as he knows.

These are not easy decisions to make but the absence of any decisions over the past 5, 10, 20 years about waste management is what has contributed to the position we find ourselves in today.

Mr Stockwell: I want to correct the record on a couple of points the Minister of the Environment brought forward.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): We are addressing the honourable member for York Centre.

Mr Stockwell: And to comment of course on the comments made by the member from the Liberal Party. I am not here to defend the Liberal Party, but I think the record should be set straight on a few of these issues. I was a member of Metro council when these negotiations were taking place. The suggestion is there were greenfield sites the previous government was going to approve without any environmental assessment hearings or public hearings. That simply is not the case. It is simply not true to suggest there were going to be no public hearings or a shortened environmental assessment process. Those hearings were going to take place.

The minister can ask the member who was elected last election and who was at one of these sites where the hearings were and where the drilling and all the scientific evidence was being assembled by Metropolitan Toronto.

I suggest it may not have been a perfect solution. No one was suggesting at the time it was a perfect solution. But I have not seen a single person come forward and suggest that the minister's alternative of simply expanding sites with not one second of public hearing is an acceptable approach to an environmental assessment process. It sickens me that the minister, who stood for all the goodness that was involved in the environmental assessment process, stands in her place and defends a system that allows two sites in the greater Toronto area to be expanded without a second of public process.

When I sat on Etobicoke council with the Minister of the Environment, she would not allow a basement apartment approval without a process of more than 21 days to be heard. Now she is going to expand dump sites by literally millions of tons with 21 days to write a letter. The minister should not cast stones; she is living in a glass house.

Mr O'Connor: I want to thank my colleague for participating in this debate. One point I would like to bring to the attention of the House is that the regional chairman of York has had an opportunity to meet with the Minister of Municipal Affairs on a number of different issues. The Minister of Municipal Affairs meets with regional chairmen on a regular basis. Meeting with the regional chairman from York, the minister had an opportunity to discuss a couple of different points, one being the 3Rs program and the other one being the 911 system for York region.

There have been things discussed with the government. Maybe the member did not realize those discussions had taken place. I wanted to clear the record and say that the government is aware of some of those problems and has talked about them quite openly. I have contacted the regional chair's office and suggested perhaps we can get together and discuss a few of these concerns in greater detail.

Mr Sorbara: My neighbour the member for Markham is in error. We did not create the Interim Waste Authority. He is right; it is not interim at all. It is a permanent plague on the province of Ontario right now.

I want to thank the member for Etobicoke West for his kind support and for correcting the record in respect of what was happening in Metropolitan Toronto.

I have one final word for the Minister of the Environment. It really saddens me that she would so cavalierly condemn our record and the record of the member for St Catharines on environmental issues. I do not want to give us an A-plus. I rarely talk about our record, but the minister should look at the blue box program which we put into place. She should look at the fact that we increased expenditures on waste management from $800,000 in 1985 to $54 million in 1990.

The minister should look at the fact that it was the member for St Catharines, as Minister of the Environment, who really began the 3Rs process within industry. He put into place home composters. He began to provide financial assistance to municipalities. He began the municipal-industrial strategy for abatement program. He worked harder than any other minister in the cabinet I sat in. For the minister to stand up and cavalierly wipe away the record of the member for St Catharines, the former Minister of the Environment, and say, "All my problems as Minister of the Environment have to do with the mismanagement of Jim Bradley," stands in the face of times when she stood up in this House and congratulated him on his progressive measures. It is offensive. It is the kind of arrogance that is going to fuel us and make sure her bill never passes.

Mr Cousens: Bill 143 has been given the wrong name, An Act respecting the Management of Waste in the Greater Toronto Area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act. It is an act of desperation. That is the real meaning of this act. It is a time when the Ministry of the Environment and the combined ministry within the greater Toronto area have no answers any longer and they are about to bring forward some of the most draconian legislation we have ever seen in this House.

People watching the channel will think, "Oh, those politicians are exaggerating." They will come along and say, "Why would you want to argue with someone as credible as the Minister of the Environment?" The fact of the matter is, once we have looked at this bill and studied the issues, the people of Ontario will hopefully have a sense that this bill will seriously undermine previous legislation which has clearly been written to defend the rights of municipalities and people across this province. It is the exercise of power, but when you start seeing power abused and power misused, it has to do with the exercise of judgement.

I really believe that when we start dealing with this bill, we are going to be looking at an issue where the rule of law means something. It either means a great deal or it does not mean a thing. If this bill is able to throw aside significant pieces of legislation and agreements that have heretofore been made in good faith, you are now dealing with something that is called within the legal network the estoppel doctrine, where you are changing agreements and acts without a firm commitment.

Mr Wiseman: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: This member has used the words "Gestapo doctrine." That is an offensive phrase in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): The member has no point of order.

Mr Cousens: Mr Speaker, estoppel is spelled E-S-T-O-P-P-E-L. I am talking about a doctrine that is accepted within the legal community, and I for one have not used that term. In dealing with the estoppel doctrine, we are talking about quite another form of understanding that is the basis of legal doctrine.

Interjections.

Mr Cousens: This happens in the Legislature.

I would like to touch on a number of aspects with regard to this bill. First, as I watched the monitor and listened very carefully to the presentation by the Minister of the Environment and minister responsible for the greater Toronto area, I have to say there is no doubt that this minister comes across as a very credible person. With her background as the critic for the Environment when the New Democrats were in opposition, there is not a person in Ontario who did not see her as a strong advocate for environmental change and improvement.

The problem we have with opposition is that we are always criticizing, and people see this adversarial system in the Ontario Legislature and in the parliamentary system as something that is destructive. When you look at the comments that were made by the minister, I would like to say that I agree with a great deal of what she has to say when she is dealing with her policy directives and her policy plans.

The minister talks about it being a green government in her opening comments, where every ministry has to begin to have its own environmental policy and its green plan. I have to say that I think every one of us in this Legislature has to have an environmental sense about ourselves. Certainly it is a credit that every ministry is making that effort to show it is into environment, more than just lipservice and words. I have to commend the Ministry of Transportation. I see initiatives there where they are actually trying to plant trees and they are trying to extend the green areas around roads and there is an emphasis on cleaning up. So there are instances within the ministries. I see the Ministry of Correctional Services having a way in which people who are interned have a chance to start getting involved with some environmental projects. The greenness of government is not something that is a special preserve of the New Democrats, but it is a policy I support. I think we had the beginnings of it with previous governments, but the fact that we are saying it is good.

When the minister talks about stewardship, I agree with her. There is not anyone who cannot begin to admit and to say strongly in the presence of this House and to everyone who will listen that we all have a stake in the environment. When the Minister of the Environment says that, I want her to know that when I get negative in a few minutes, I agree with that principle. I think our stake is bigger than many people would ever believe.

When the minister talks about it being a conserving society—I sometimes wonder what the minister means by a sustainable environment. Is she going back to Schumacher, where small is beautiful? Is that one of the documents she goes back to? He is certainly one of the gurus who talks about sustainable development.

I happen to believe there is a truth there. That does not necessarily answer all the questions that have to do with our long-term plan for protecting Ontario's rights, but everything is interactive. There is a sense that if you can work within your own small unit in your own household and do things correctly there, or within your community or within the greater Toronto area or in the Sudbury basin or in any other area, then you have begun to accept responsibility for the environmental mission we all have to have.

That follows through naturally as you reduce, reuse and recycle. All these begin to have more meaning once you have begun to understand that you have to have your own personal house in order, and then as you have that in order, you can go beyond.

I think Canada had a lot of credibility when we went to the United States and worked on the acid rain amendments to the Clean Air Act because we had taken leading positions and moves within our own environment to reduce acid rain emissions. When we went beyond our borders, we could stand with pride and say, "Look, we're doing something about it." The United States bought into it eventually, so we got the Clean Air Act passed. It would not have happened if we had not been setting an example in the first place.

To the extent that the minister talks about a sustainable development and setting an example within your own home and your own place, I see that as one of those fundamental rules of society. I wish the minister had taken on that conservation attitude, because the Minister of Energy and the people in Energy I think talk a merry tune when they talk about conservation and energy. Certainly our critic, the member for Lanark-Renfrew, understands conservation, but he also understands many other areas that have to do with the whole development of an energy policy for this government, which is lacking.

The minister brings forward what I call credible points of view, and if one were to disagree with them, I do not think he or she understands the policy position she is coming from. I just want to go on record as saying I too believe in a conserver society. Any plans and any proposals and any criticisms I have with regard to her policies and this bill certainly do not represent a disagreement on the fundamental principle of conservation as a conserver society.

Then as the minister goes on indicating another policy, this ministry and government are really strongly proposing, that we want to prevent further damage to the environment, I think that is critical. If there is one thing I want to say, it is that I know the Minister of the Environment certainly does believe that. She has always had that sense of evangelical zeal about protecting the environment over the long term.

So when you see the Minister of the Environment stand up in this House and say, "These are policy statements of our government," I too, as the critic responsible for Environment for our caucus—and I am confident as well our critic for the greater Toronto area—would share those very genuine concerns expressed by the minister. I think what comes out of that are strong, consistent policies of a government that says, "We are then going to take strong action on it."

As I listened to the minister with her presentation, she put a very powerful presentation, as she has on previous occasions, about the 3Rs. I am satisfied that the 3Rs are important. Unfortunately, since she has become known as the minister of garbage, she has really become associated with only the 3Rs. There are a few other Rs I would like to see her think of.

One is "recovery," the recovery of waste. There are examples now in Japan. It is not necessarily our system but there is a sorting through of garbage that allows people to find waste within existing landfill sites that they are able to recover and find other uses for. I just wonder. If we look at recovery from waste, there are so many things that can be done. I know there is not universal support for it and I will come to that later in my address, but there is energy from waste.

This summer I visited a site in Minneapolis where they were able to generate enough kilowatts of power from waste—it was a whole special system where they separated out ferrous and iron products and glass. They have an active blue box program in Minneapolis. Through this energy from waste they were able to generate enough power for 30,000 homes.

Though this government does not have a policy supporting that kind of initiative, it is being done in other jurisdictions and is worthy of consideration. I am saying we should recover if there is something to recover. What can we recover from oil waste? There is some of it happening now and more and more should. We see it in garage stations. We see people saying, "What can we do with used oil?" They can come back, clean it up and then reuse that oil.

We can see other forms of recovery that can go on. Tires have many other purposes once they have been used as much as they can be on the roads, and that is not to have them stored in huge tire dumps. If the government could use some of the $200 million that has been collected through the tire tax, then we would begin to see the use of these tires for other purposes.

Recovering useful, beneficial aspects of these products for society is something I strongly support the minister having a look at. We can add another R to the 3Rs, and that is "recover."

"Realism" is my fifth R. What is missing within the legislation before us, Bill 143, and in so much of the quick planning of the ministry, is that it is reactive and does not understand something of the larger time frame required for people to deal with and respond to these issues. It has to do with education. It has to do with getting them to buy into it.

The minister should understand the realism of the cost of land. There is nothing within the Ministry of the Environment that understands the cost of land in the greater Toronto area versus Kirkland Lake. The cost per acre in the greater Toronto area far exceeds the cost per acre at the Adams mine site in Kirkland Lake. The ministry is saying the greater Toronto area must solve its environmental landfill problems within the greater Toronto area and not look outside of the GTA for that. Realistically there are alternatives that can be looked at, that should be looked at and that are worthy of consideration outside of the boundaries which have been struck in the minister's own mind.

I believe the minister needs this R of "realism" because what she is doing is not living up to the expectation that it is going to be difficult to find sites in the greater Toronto area. If we can find hosts willing to take Metro's garbage on a short-term basis, a long-term basis or any basis, is that not something worthy of consideration? Is there not some value in having that included in the minister's thinking?

This government has closed down those options. They have closed down the option of looking outside the greater Toronto area, so if anyone happens to find a landfill site that is a possible opportunity for getting rid of waste but is four feet outside of the boundaries of the greater Toronto area, that cannot be included in the thinking provided by the minister. It is restrictive thinking and it is not realistic when we consider all the implications.

I talked about recovery. Surely we could look at ways of recovering from the waste that is generated as it is. Surely we could have more realism in the policies of the Ministry of the Environment. The other R I would like the minister to look at is "rights," the rights of the people of Ontario. When I call this an act of desperation, I begin to draw in some of the frustration that surely must exist within this ministry because it has not been able to come up with any better solutions than the draconian methods they are going to institute through this bill that will take away the rights of citizens and municipalities.

You do not believe it until you start to see it within the bill, but the fact is that a number of sections within this bill will begin to wipe away previous rules that have been made. I refer particularly to section 17, where the ministry says that any agreement that has been made in good faith with any municipality, any of the agreements that are inherent in the Municipal Act, the Regional Municipality of Durham Act, the Regional Municipality of Peel Act, the Regional Municipality of York Act and the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act are superseded by this bill.

Not only the ones in legislation that has been agreed to previously, but any agreement, for instance, between the municipalities of Mississauga and Peel. A typical agreement they would have had would have been where there were certain contours agreed on for the Britannia landfill site and those contours then became part and parcel of the understanding not only with the neighbours who live next to Britannia but also in the official plan for the region. Now, because of this bill and the plans within it, all those previous agreements that have been developed over time can be pushed aside and not dealt with in any way.

I find that reprehensible. I find that a removal of rights of people that had been defined, delineated and agreed to earlier. It has to do with estoppel and that whole doctrine of rights that are being removed by government. I have to believe that when people elected their municipal governments last week, they gave them certain responsibilities for things in their communities. What I now see happening is that the Ministry of the Environment and the ministry responsible for the greater Toronto area, one and the same, are going to come into those municipalities and bring about changes in the legislation that will take away the level of responsibility those mayors and councillors previously understood they had. It truly makes you wonder whether this whole system of local government is going to work or be worthwhile when so many of the rights they have worked on and developed over time can now be shoved aside without debate. The only debate that will be held on it is the debate held around Bill 143.

As we listen to the honourable Minister of the Environment, I do not think there is any doubt that she comes forward with a mission and is going to do what she can to support environmental matters. What she failed to develop in her opening presentation to this bill was the nature of the way in which this bill is going to have a long-term impact on the people of Ontario. I do not expect that we have all the perfect answers. I believe there is a need for extensive dialogue on the proposals that have been made by the minister. There should be an opportunity for municipalities and the public at large to have some opportunity, through public hearings, to participate in this debate. We in the Legislature will have a chance for the next several days—as long as we are allowed to, I suppose—at least to outline our views.

I will come back and hope that we will be able to persuade this minister to allow public hearings. Hopefully this will be referred out to committee and then there will be an opportunity for the people who came this morning. Some 250 were in front of the Legislature from Maple, Vaughan and the south York region. May they also have a chance to come and talk. Indeed, that is part and parcel of the letter that was sent by the mayor of Vaughan, who is calling on the minister to have those public hearings.

We are talking about a bill that has very serious implications for our future. I would like to comment first of all that I am surprised the bill is not broken into at least more than one part. Certainly, as a minister of the crown, the Minister of the Environment can bring this forward as a greater Toronto area bill. But what often happens is that when a bill such as this includes key amendments to the Environmental Protection Act, there are sections within the bill that someone who does not realize that the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore is not just taking her role as the greater Toronto area minister but is also wearing the hat of the Environment minister might miss.

I know that it sounds small, but this bill does refer to the county of Oxford. It is cleaning up a certain element of the bill, but the fact is, it does not just deal with the greater Toronto area; it deals with issues and communities outside of Metropolitan Toronto. So for the sake of people who are following this process, maybe in the future the minister, when she brings forward bills, might have some way in which she acknowledges the fact that she is dealing with more than just the greater Toronto area. But it is also the Minister of the Environment talking, so the issues that are brought up in the bill that refer to other areas, the people who read Hansard or get copies of the bills will then be able to know.

I also disagree with the Liberals in that I think the minister has every power to do what she wants to do as a minister of the crown. I do not think there is any doubt about that. She is agreeing with me. But the danger that comes out of it is that the Minister of Natural Resources might come along and start bringing in matters that pertain to the environment. But that is true, and that is what will happen, because there is not one ministry that does not overlap with another. When you are dealing with money, they are all spending money. When you are dealing with environmental matters, certainly municipal affairs are involved, and certainly the other ministries have something to do with it.

Why then should the Minister of the Environment not be named on this bill as a key player in it? She is. It says "The Hon Ruth Grier." Anyone who knows that knows that she is the Minister of the Environment. But I suggest strongly that, in the future, the government make it a lot easier for people who do not understand what is going on in this House by indicating exactly how the breakdown is taking place.

I have trouble. It is all in the way one words things. If you want to give someone a bitter pill, you just put a little sugar around it and then they do not realize just how noxious it is. Interim Waste Authority Ltd: What a name. It sounds as if it is something that is going to be here—what is an interim? I did not get my dictionary out. I should get my honourable friend who is so good with words over there to dig up the definition of "interim." He might have one.

Interjection.

Mr Cousens: Oh, no. Do not say that, my honourable friend the member for Simcoe East. You will get us kicked out. Interim. There is nothing short-term about the Interim Waste Authority. The decisions that are being made by the authority are having long-term ramifications on our communities, especially wherever the government decides to place this garbage. To me, how interim is interim?

I will be quite candid with you, Mr Speaker. I have got enough other amendments to this bill that I am not going to try to change the name of the Interim Waste Authority Ltd, because I know it is not going to go anywhere. But I want to at least go on the record. There is nothing interim about the Interim Waste Authority. Its time limit could go for a long time, and the people who are looking at this government for solutions, maybe it is only going to be good at short-term solutions. I do not know, but it certainly has a long term ahead of it as we deal with this agency now known as the Interim Waste Authority, a crown agency which is granted the power to expropriate lands for the purposes of establishing a long-term landfill site.

What I see happening here—and there will be an opportunity to touch on it throughout the deliberations of this bill—part I of the bill deals with this whole business of expropriation, and it goes on further in the bill. I wonder how a Minister of the Environment who talks so much about people's rights and the right of the public to be protected can start to bring in the Expropriations Act and put it into the words of this act without necessarily bringing in extra protection for the people whose properties are going to be expropriated. I mean, you are talking about the New Democrats who have always articulated so clearly the importance of having people's rights protected. Well, I tell members, by bringing in the very wording of the Expropriations Act to this bill, it removes the rights of people to challenge what is really going to happen with regard to neighbouring properties.

To me, what we are seeing is a certain amount of confiscation of rights of the public through the introduction of expropriation-right principles of the government on those whose rights might be interfered with. That has to do with injurious affection. What I want to deal with at some point is the effect of injurious affection as it is now understood under the Expropriations Act. Though I am not a lawyer, I have enough understanding to know that you really have only one year during which you can apply for some kind of settlement or recover some lost moneys through injurious affection. If in fact you are only limited to a short period of time when you are dealing with some of the environmental issues that will come out of landfill sites, you are not just talking a short period of time; you are talking about damages that could have, over a longer period, quite a significant impact on neighbouring properties.

It may not be right away that the rats start to appear at the landfill site. It may not be right away that some of the pollutants begin to leach through and become lume underneath someone else's property. It may not be immediate that you begin to see the effects of those things. That is the case, what we have really got to make sure of is that we do not take away everybody's rights. This government is going to assume the right to be able to go on someone's property when it wants and for whatever reason through a warrant, but you are not going to be able to stop it. You are not going to be able to stop this government from saying, "Look, that property that belongs to whom-ever is going to be analysed and assessed for this landfill site." Whether or not it is—that is yet to be proven—they will get on there and they then have the right to do test holes; they can do just about anything on that property.

I think there is going to be a way for restitution, where the government returns the property to its original state. There are a number of questions that come through on that. What I see as a problem, though, is that there is a sense in which the government is gaining power to go on to people's properties and do surveys and assessments and tests far beyond anything that has ever happened before. Certainly this bill is going to give that power to the government.

I see the Interim Waste Authority now having the power to acquire land outside other areas of jurisdiction within the government and having all the same powers it had before, yet not giving any extra compensation to the people who are involved in the neighbouring areas.

Part I of this bill raises some questions, certainly not as many as the other parts of the bill. As I begin to look at the other parts of the bill, we deal with part II, which concerns waste disposal sites and where we see the Interim Waste Authority. The minister then says, "Three landfill waste disposal sites are required: one in Peel-Durham and then Metropolitan Toronto and York." What she is looking for is something that is going to last for 20 years.

Indeed we all know there has to be a long-term solution to our problems around the whole problem of disposal of waste. The human being seems to be very good at developing it. We are not the conservative society that we dream about, so we have got to come up with practical, real solutions. But the way the minister starts to go about it is that she has developed a policy, and this bill will put into a sacred trust the policies that are developed by the minister in her own wisdom over a period of time. They then become part and parcel of government policy and this bill.

When you start asking, "What are those policies going to be?" they have to do with the minister who says here in section 14, "An environmental assessment...is not required to contain...any description of, or statement of the rationale for...any description or evaluation of any matter relating to"—and here is where it comes to—"an alternative of waste reduction or reuse or recycling if that alternative would involve incineration of waste or the transportation of waste from the primary service area to another area."

What I am concerned about is that the minister has, without regard to an environmental assessment, without discussion of other jurisdictions that have not accepted incineration—which is a bad word in the minds of many environmentalists—as an alternative. I have to be careful on this, because I do not think there is anyone who says incineration is perfect. I happen to believe there has to be something right, though, when you see other jurisdictions finding ways in which incineration is at least an option worth looking at. You will see that in Japan, in Sweden, Switzerland, Bermuda. I do not think Detroit is a good example, there are some pretty bad ones out there.

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): Order. The member will address the Chair. I should also add, we will have no interjection from the minister.

Mr Cousens: I did not hear it. When we have this person in the chair, we just have to behave ourselves. I am not going to make any comments about the Speaker because he has ultimate authority and I am not interested in starting a war with the Speaker.

As we look at this issue of incineration, I wish there was some way the ministry—probably just the minister—could at least look at options so that there could be some consideration, rather than just saying within the bill that there will be absolutely no consideration of incineration.

I respect the fact that there are certain members of my own caucus—there has not been a perfect consensus around incineration and I do not want to say whether it should or should not be something we do, but I would like at least to have the option explored that incineration could be considered if it becomes something where there can be a recovery of energy through waste. Is that something that could be looked at?

All I would like to do is have the opportunity of considering, rather than having a decision made by the minister that does not explain her position or where she is coming from. She may well be dealing with incidents that go back many years when, if you had an incinerator and were putting anything in it, then you were going to get something out of the chimney. But if you know it is going into the incinerator and you have scrubbers that control the emissions coming from it and you know what is going in, you can tell what is coming out. It would be cleaner than coal, I am told. In that case, why not look at it?

If you were to look at that, it might be that you could see methane created in a landfill site. I have a paper I want to refer to before I am finished that deals with the issue of methane and the energy that could come from it. Could that methane in some way be harnessed for energy for other purposes?

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): The member for Durham West has interjected. I have counted five interjections since I have been in the chair. Interjections are never appropriate. Sometimes, if they are relevant and witty, they may be accepted. I have to inform the member his interjections are neither relevant nor witty.

Mr Cousens: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I just hope I can behave as well as you are expecting him to behave when I am sitting down listening to someone else. I appreciate where you are coming from, Mr Speaker. I will go back to the issue and talk to you on the issue. I was dealing with this bill and, oh my goodness, I know what is going to happen now. But I would at least like to review some of the concerns I have about incineration.

There are at least three incinerators in Ontario right now which accept solid non-hazardous waste. We have Victoria Hospital in London, we have the solid waste reduction unit in Hamilton—

Mrs Marland: Which has problems.

Mr Cousens: Obviously. There are three facilities recovering energy from waste here in Ontario. Ford in Oakville and General Motors in Oshawa operate their own incineration facilities and do not accept waste from other sources.

What we have to deal with is the technology available to deal with this as an issue. Whether a well-operated, state-of-the-art incineration facility could meet Ontario's air emission standards and regulations is something I would like to see explored, discussed and reviewed by an environmental assessment. That may not be the one that says, "Hey, that's the way to go." I am not what you would call a technical person who is able to develop these issues, but I am at least saying, if other jurisdictions have done it, is it not something that could be done in our area?

I am asking the minister, rather than making a policy decision which is buried right in the bill, whether we can begin to look at some other options that allow recovery, as a possible argument, and whether landfilling and the 3Rs cannot be considered as the only methods for municipal waste disposal.

Are there other technologies we should look at for waste disposal and resource recovery opportunities? Certainly one of those has to do with the way methane can be taken from a waste site and something developed from it.

The minister has gone on record regarding this. It concerns me that the point she has made has not allowed the total subject to be analysed and assessed. If it turns out that she is correct, then the environmental assessment will confirm that. If she is wrong, it opens up another option that might reduce some of the bulk of the waste. It might find energy from waste that could be considered. All I want to do is allow certain things to be decided, rather than the technopeasant approach which just excludes consideration because it is a policy that has been developed.

A friend of mine has just returned from Nuremberg. Greenpeace sponsored and supported a very large energy-from-waste facility in Nuremberg that it has endorsed. If that has happened there, it would be worth while looking at other examples across the world that might allow us to consider this.

Another issue implicit in the minister's plans and where this bill gives the Minister of the Environment tremendous power over waste disposal sites is regarding the transportation of waste from the primary service area to another area.

First of all, this minister has been inconsistent with that position because she has said Kirkland Lake cannot be considered as a willing host, even though it is. She has said Kingston can ship its garbage to Carleton Place, even if it is only for a short time. She has allowed Kingston to ship its garbage to Carleton Place, yet will not allow the greater Toronto area or Metro Toronto to ship its waste to Kirkland Lake, even though we are talking about a host that has looked at the subject and given consideration to it.

It is going to have a number of impacts on Kirkland Lake. In December 1990, Kirkland Lake agreed to convert a closed mine into a centre for sorting, recycling and dumping Metro garbage with the ability to handle something like 30 million tonnes. The deal was worth approximately $450 million to Kirkland Lake. It was going to bring millions of dollars to Kirkland Lake and provide jobs in an area that is extremely hard hit by this recession. Yet the Minister of the Environment killed the proposal in April 1991, even though Metro and Kirkland Lake politicians condemned her decision.

Environmentalists applauded the minister's decision not to allow the transportation of garbage to Kirkland Lake, yet the issue has been played out again in the elections that just took place last week. In Kirkland Lake the incumbent mayor, Joe Mavrinac, supports a new proposal to bring Metro garden waste north to Kirkland Lake for composting. A plebiscite question was placed on the municipal ballot in the election last week. It asked whether or not voters favoured an environmental assessment hearing for the plan to import Toronto garbage. The Metro garbage issue did not play as large a role in Metro's elections as it did in Kirkland Lake because the mayor was re-elected to that post, and the voters were overwhelmingly in favour of having an environmental assessment to hear about the benefits or disadvantages of importing Metro garbage.

What I am really saying is that the mayor hopes the result of that plebiscite will cause the honourable minister responsible for the greater Toronto area and the Minister of the Environment—one and the same person—to rethink her position on the shipping of Metro garbage up north. Why should the ministry force Metro to get rid of its garbage in a highly populated area within Metro and York region and the greater Toronto area, where land prices are among the highest in the country, if in fact we have a willing host, where property values are not the same as they are here, that wants to have it?

Metro Chairman Alan Tonks has stated that the Minister of the Environment's decision will cost Metro Toronto hundreds of millions of dollars. He has said her approach is crisis management as opposed to managing the issue. I challenge the minister to rethink this whole position on the shipping of garbage outside Metropolitan Toronto. Kirkland is a willing host. Many residents support the proposal because they feel it will boost their failing economy through an infusion of capital and jobs.

We come up to the other side of the issue. I, like my former colleague in this caucus, Jim Pollock, was very concerned. He was concerned about Madoc, which was a site that was being considered at some time, an unwilling host. I do not think there—

Mrs Fawcett: It was Marmora.

Mr Cousens: Was it Marmora? Yes, it was Marmora and I thank the member for Northumberland. It was armora that was being looked at as an unwilling host. Then let it not be there. But if there is a willing host, then say that be something that is at least allowed to circulate through the mind of that minister. Why not at least hold an environmental assessment hearing to see if the proposals are at all feasible? What I am saying is, should not the minister of the Environment and the minister responsible for the greater Toronto area pay attention to what the residents of Kirkland Lake are saying?

As we look at this bill—we are talking about Bill 43—I have great concern that the minister is bringing to policy positions that have not been subjected to a detailed analysis and evaluation. What I would like to see, if possible, is the minister open up those issues so that they can have a full environmental assessment on it.

Then we come to another part of the bill, probably the most dangerous part, that really has offended so many people who are just beginning to understand what is happening. First of all, they have not had much of a chance to respond to it. The minister tabled the bill on October 24, 1991. She tabled it less than a month ago and did it without any fanfare and announcement. It just sort of came in, slipped on the table, and now we are into a position where the minister would like to have this bill passed and in law before we rise for Christmas. I find that extremely fast acting, especially when we start looking at the rights of the municipalities that are going to be impacted by the bill itself.

The bill goes on, and here is what it now begins to do. As we look at part III of the bill, the regional municipalities of Peel and Durham and the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto are required to implement reports made by the minister under section 29 of the Environmental Protection Act. These reports state that the Keele Valley and Britannia Road landfill sites will require one lift each, an increase in the height of the garbage; also, that a transfer station be built at the Brock West landfill site. That is Durham Region's waste, which can then be moved to the Keele Valley site via the Brock West transfer station.

This bill, as we look at the details of it, will remove all legal impediments to the implementation of the reports that are referred to in this bill. I reiterate that. This bill removes all impediments. The funny part of it is that I do not think there is anyone who does not want to see the process streamlined and speeded up.

If there is any way in which we are able to move more quickly in determining where landfill sites are going to be and how we are going to do it, it has to do with the good with that takes place when you are a politician. It has to do with the Premier, who was then Leader of the Opposition, who was within a short distance of the Keele Valley landfill site and said that site would never be expanded without there being a full environmental assessment. No one has disputed that fact. I raised the question to the Premier in the last days of the House before we rose in June: Did he or did he not say in the situation as Leader of the Opposition that he would not expand Keele Valley without a full environmental assessment? He has not disagreed with it and I have enough witnesses to prove that he said it.

When he said that, there was a sense in which the people said: "That's what he's saying before he goes into office. When he gets into office, I'm sure that a man as honest and credible"—anyone who has gone so far as to call the previous Premier of Ontario a liar would never be called a liar himself, so there would not be any sense that the person who was calling the kettle black would do the same thing himself. But the Premier, who was then Leader of the Opposition, made it clear there would be a full environmental assessment for the Keele Valley landfill site before there would be any kind of change to that site. That was implicit as well as what would happen with the Britannia Road site: no expansion without an environmental assessment, absolutely none.

Now, a year and a half later, this same government, led by the Premier, is bringing forward changes in the law that will allow it to expand and change the contours and configurations of those dumps without so much as a full environmental assessment. When we see the draconian measures now in this bill that are going to give the government the right to forget about all previous agreements it has made regarding those sites, they in themselves downgrade the whole importance of previous agreements, previous laws and previous arrangements that have been made in those communities.

It is serious. That is why we had some 250 people out here this morning and that is why I think the government is going to get thousands of letters, not just from one community, not just from south York region, not just from Peel, but from those hundred other communities where landfill sites are just about full. It has to do with a breach of promise.

On the grounds of what this man who is now Premier said, he and his government are retracting that to such a degree that the future rights of those municipalities and the people involved will be removed by this legislation. All legal impediments to the implementation of these reports will be removed through this section of the bill. The designated municipalities are required to carry out the reports even though doing so may require the consent of another municipality or may contravene a municipal bylaw, agreement, statute or regulation. In other words, anything that has been done historically in the past, agreements that have been made, now means nothing. They are thrown out, and that speaks to the larger issue.

There is a solution and it does not have to be in the removal of those rights. We could do it through changes to the Environmental Assessment Act. The government should change the way in which people can protest or disagree with what the government is doing. They should allow it to be streamlined. The member for Nipissing, my leader, brought that up as a major issue in the last election.

What he was calling for was that there be some way in which environmental assessment is allowed to proceed over a shorter period; let there be the full opportunity for anyone who wants to disagree with it to explain that view, have it heard, but not allow it to be protracted over a long period of time, the way it is now through the Ontario Waste Management Corp, an example where the environmental assessment laws in Ontario are wrong.

What we really need to do now is see within this government another approach to it, not a matter of just taking away rights of municipalities, but instead another approach to allow us to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): Order. The member will have the opportunity to continue the debate.

REFERRAL OF BILL 126

Hon Mrs Coppen: Earlier today Bill 126 was ordered for third reading. I would ask for the consent of the House to have Bill 126 referred to the committee of the whole House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): Is there consent that Bill 126 be sent to the committee of the whole House?

Agreed to.

Bill ordered for committee of the whole House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): Pursuant to standing order 33, the question that this House do now adjourn is deemed to have been made.

TEACHERS' SETTLEMENTS

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): The member for York North has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Minister of Education concerning transfer payments and teachers' salaries. The member has up to five minutes to debate the matter, and the minister may reply for up to five minutes.

Mr Beer: The reason I asked to have this slotted for the late show is that when one looks at the statement made by the Treasurer earlier today and then looks at the meeting which the Minister of Education—perhaps I should say the part-time Minister of Education and the Chairman of Management Board of Cabinet—attended yesterday, one recognizes that a tremendous load is about to be shifted once again to school boards.

I think the minister has a responsibility to answer in this House and to the people of the province exactly what is going to happen in terms of transfer payments to school boards and how those boards are going to be able to meet all the pressures they are currently facing.

I would like at the outset to read what the Treasurer said in his statement today. He said: "In addition, we have been speaking to all our major transfer payment partners about the need to implement similar measures in their organizations," meaning wage controls. "We are also asking that consideration be given by all to the seriousness of the fiscal situation and the importance of negotiating lower wage settlements throughout the public sector."

Yesterday the Minister of Education met with representatives from the Ontario Public School Trustees' Association. In that meeting what the public school trustees said to him was that if the provincial government is not going to pay a greater share of education costs—we know that this government, with its last budget, lowered the percentage it is paying; it is now just 40% of total educational costs—then the school boards were saying it should lower its demands on the local taxpayer. But what the minister is suggesting, and it was also reflected in his meeting with the trustees and in the discussion with the media afterwards, is that the government is looking at providing the school boards, through transfer payments, with 3% or less for next year.

We already know that the demands in terms of salaries that the school boards are facing are running at an average of 6.1%. What the minister has to make very clear is: How is it, with all of the various things he is asking the school boards to do, he can simply say, "By the way, for any of those salary settlements, you simply pick it up through the property tax base"?

If there is a message school trustees have received during the last several months leading up to the elections for the new school boards, it is that the property taxpayer already has had more than enough. People are saying "We're not prepared to accept double-digit rates of increase." I think that message has come through very clearly. If the minister had attended any debates within his community he would have heard that.

Now, as the school boards come, saying, "What are we going to be receiving for next year?" what has been indicated to them is that they are going to have very little money. Unless the government is prepared to lift some of the pressure from them, we are going to see a great number of boards with even more difficult situations where they are going to have to go into a deficit position, which legally they are not allowed to do, and where then the ministry is going to have to find ways of helping them more directly.

The relationship here is simply this: The minister in his comments does not seem to understand the seriousness of the situation. He talks about being concerned. He talks about, "We don't want to be too firm in the directions that we're giving." Again, what the public school trustees said was very clear. Their boards request the minister to be tougher, to really set out some clear public sector wage guidelines, that the minister is going to have to get directly involved, "using all the moral suasion he can" to convince teachers—not just trustees, but to convince the teachers' organizations—"that they must scale down the demand that they are making."

This is a serious matter of public policy, because the provincial government cannot sit back and simply tell school boards, municipalities, other transfer agencies—we have seen it with hospitals—"It's up to you to do this." We're going to look after ourselves by providing a lesser rate of grant."

I say that the government is failing in its obligations to protect the property taxpayer. We need a clear statement from this government as to exactly what it is going to do with school boards and how it is going to ensure that the property taxpayer is not hit again next year with double-digit increases.

Hon Mr Silipo: I want first of all to wish the member for York North—the part-time member for York North, to pick up on comments that he made at the beginning—I wish him well in the leadership race that he is involved in—that being what I think makes him, to some extent, a part-time member here. I know that he believes very clearly the things he has said to us today, although I am, quite frankly, little bit surprised that the leadership race would bring us to the point of having to stay here past 6 o'clock for me to give an answer that I think I gave this afternoon.

The member complains about the responsibility we have as a government and I have as a minister to deal very directly with the fiscal problems we have and in ensuring that we tell school boards and teacher federations and others the reality we are facing. I thought that is exactly what I said I have been doing and will continue to do. It is incumbent upon this government, and certainly incumbent upon me as Minister of Education in this particular area, to be as clear as I can be with school boards, as the local municipal level partner in the governance of education with us, as to what fiscal realities we are facing. That is exactly what I did in meeting with the representative of the Ontario Public School Boards' Association yesterday. It is what I did this afternoon in meeting with the representative of the Ontario Separate School Trustees' Association. It is what I intend to keep doing in meeting with other representatives of the trustees' organizations and it is certainly what I have been saying to teachers' federations and what I intend to continue saying to teachers' federations.

Within that, the member opposite and people in this House need to understand that we as a government are committed to the collective bargaining process. We are also committed to the local level of governance in education. Those two principles, side by side, indicate very clearly to me, as Minister of Education, as a minister of this government, that we believe therefore very clearly that we have to allow the latitude at the local level for negotiations to continue and for negotiations to be carried out, however, in the kind of fiscal framework we are living in. I think it is therefore my obligation, my duty, my responsibility, which I think I have been carrying out and will continue to carry out in a reasonable fashion, to say to all the parties involved what the kind of fiscal reality is and what they can expect from us a government in this next year and over the next couple of years to come.

I hope that over the next number of days and weeks we can get a little clearer about that. The member opposite would know, as a former minister, the kinds of processes we go through in setting budgets and setting the process of establishing the transfer payment amounts. As a relatively new minister, while I understand that process and the kind of secrecy all of that has to be shrouded in, I am also quite frankly a little bit puzzled as to why all of it has to be shrouded in quite the amount of secrecy it is. I have said clearly to the trustee organizations and to my officials that I also want to look at ways in which, over the next few weeks and months, I can be working much more closely together as a minister with the local people, the people who are responsible for the local governments, the trustees and other people involved in education, to see how we can demystify this whole process.

Within all of that will be very clearly the recognition of our responsibilities as a government towards not only the local level of government and the collective bargaining process but also our understanding of the fiscal problems the school boards face and the pressure it puts on local property taxes.

The member opposite knows my position as a former school trustee on the inequities that exist through the present funding structure. As I have been saying also to people and have been working away at, I am very committed to the kind of restructuring of the financing of education that I think we need to bring about. That is not going to happen in the short term. It is going to take us a little bit of time to do.

Quite frankly, in the short term we do have some major problems to deal with. The only way I think we can deal with them is by being very upfront with people and very direct about the nature of the problems we are facing. That is what I have been trying to do and that is what I will continue to do. I think that approach is bearing some fruit and that is exactly what I intend to continue doing.

The House adjourned at 1812.

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Table des matières

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi qu'à celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Wednesday 20 November 1991

The House met at 1330.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

RETAIL STORE HOURS

Mrs Caplan: I believe my constituents in Oriole must have a say in legislation and what is happening in their community. The previous Liberal government's Sunday shopping legislation allows municipalities to say if they want stores in their communities to open on Sunday.

On November 12, voters in the city of North York and the riding of Oriole responded to the following question on the ballot: "Are you in favour of North York city council requesting that Sunday shopping be permitted in North York?" More than 60% of the voters said yes to Sunday shopping.

The people of North York and the people in my riding of Oriole have complied with today's laws. They have spoken and participated. The municipal option means all municipalities are allowed to decide what is best for them. Under the NDP's proposed legislation, that democratic right would be taken away.

The Association of Municipalities of Ontario and the Ontario Border Communities Mayors' Task Force on Cross-Border and Sunday Shopping have asked this NDP government not to remove the municipal option. They have also said that this proposed legislation's message is misguided.

As the government proceeds with its legislation on Sunday shopping, it must listen to the people of Ontario. I hope it will listen to my constituency, the people of the riding of Oriole, and the people of the city of North York. It must allow the municipal option to remain in order for democracy to prevail.

LABOUR LEGISLATION

Mr Villeneuve: As my party's critic for Agriculture and Food, I find it necessary to express very serious concern about the recent NDP labour relations proposals.

First, there seems to have been no co-operation between the government, food producers and food processors of the province. The paper completely ignores the seasonal characteristics of the food industry and has decided that something called industrial/factory-type operations must be unionized. There is an admission that no one even knows what an industrial/factory-type operation is.

There is real cause for worry when labour, bureaucrats and union officials decide they will sit down and they will decide the definition of a family farm.

Even when we talk about relatively simple industry examples such as fruit and vegetable processing plants, this government fails to recognize that these are not Fords and GMs. These plants receive their raw products during the space of a few short weeks in the summer. If they cannot process at that time, they will likely be closed for the rest of the year.

If these plants are not open, what will happen to the farmers who have contracted with these plants? Have the Premier's bureaucrats forgotten about them? The government cannot legislate dates for harvesting a crop. If a strike happens to come along, the government cannot pass a new regulation postponing the ripening of a crop. Has anyone considered what will happen to marketing boards if, for example, milk cannot be delivered? These are important issues. Food and cars are not the same at all.

CARL HAMILTON

Mr Fletcher: It is my pleasure to pay tribute today to a political veteran at Guelph city hall. Alderman Carl Hamilton has served his community for 21 years with a level-headed, honest and hardworking approach to municipal politics. On election night last week the voters of Guelph thanked Carl by sending him back to city hall. That comes as no surprise when you look at Carl's list of accomplishments.

Carl has chaired Guelph General Hospital's financial campaign. He has served on the board of Wellington Family and Children's Services and also on the board of Stonehenge Therapeutic Community, a treatment centre for drug addicts. Carl has served on virtually every committee at one time or another during his city hall career. In addition to these civic duties, Carl has found time to practise law in Guelph for the last 24 years with the firm of Moon Heath.

Carl's political career goes back even further. He has the distinction of being the only person to serve as national secretary of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation and the NDP. Carl was also the national organizer for the CCF from 1955, at the age of 17, to 1957. He first met the Right Honourable Edward Schreyer while doing some work for the New Democrats in Winnipeg. At that time the future Governor General of Canada was about 10 years old.

Carl joins seven newcomers on city council; they are Walter Bilanski, John Carere, Frank Maine, Bill McAdams, Gloria Kovach, Jim Sinclair and Theresa Stafford. I welcome them all.

Part of Carl's campaign message was that his experience would promote co-operation between the new municipal councillors and the old. I know Carl is doing that right now. It is a benefit to have Carl as a colleague.

ABANDONED MINES

Mr Micalash: The previous Minister of Mines, the member for Lake Nipigon, announced a program called the abandoned mine hazards abatement program last May. The program pledged $10 million over three years to the rehabilitation of approximately 3,000 abandoned mine sites currently in existence throughout Ontario. According to a ministry official, about $2.5 million of this money is dedicated towards the actual rehabilitation of old, abandoned mine sites.

It does not take a genius to figure out that $2.5 million for 3,000 mines works out to about $833 per mine site. Ministry officials estimate it will cost $80 million to $100 million to deal with problems on crown and municipal lands alone. The $2.5 million becomes even more insignificant when one takes into consideration a recent 40% reduction in the program budget caused by the withdrawal of $1 million by the present Minister of Mines. This is a prime example of the government's approach towards the concerns of citizens of northern Ontario.

Should I tell my constituents in the Red Lake area and throughout my riding that abandoned mines such as the old Howey Bay mine site, some 20 metres from a school playground, as well as many others are problems that the government has now left for them to deal with? Was the whole program just a sham? How do the people of Red Lake get what the previous minister announced, the safe closure of existing abandoned mine sites? Can we get a commitment from the Minister of Mines that adequate financial resources will be allocated to deal with this very pressing problem?

DRINKING AND DRIVING

Mr Harnick: Yesterday marked the beginning of the third annual province-wide red ribbon program, entitled Tie One on for Safety, designed to reduce impaired driving. This year, People to Reduce Impaired Driving Everywhere and Mothers Against Drunk Driving will distribute over one million red ribbons to motorists across Ontario. The red ribbon is a symbol of support for safe, sober driving.

This program, in concert with other initiatives such as the Lifesaver Agreement between teenagers and their parents, is an effort to increase awareness of the fact that driving while impaired is socially unacceptable. Drunk driving kills. I have personally dealt with individuals who have suffered the life-shattering devastation that results from drunk driving accidents. I applaud the work of organizations such as PRIDE and MADD in their lifesaving public awareness programs.

Red ribbons will be distributed with the help of the Ontario Students Against Impaired Driving, Shoppers Drug Mart, the Allstate Helping Hands Committee, the Ontario Community Council on Impaired Driving, the OPP, the Bank of Montreal, local police forces and many more private organizations and volunteers.

This year, Willowdale native and Indy car driver Scott Goodyear will be the guest of honour at SkyDome for a reception designed to educate the public on the reasons why you should not drink and drive.

As the representative for Willowdale I would like to take this opportunity to wish the people of my riding and the people of Ontario safe and sober driving in the holiday season.

FREELTON LIONS VILLA

Mr Abel: It is with great pleasure that I inform the House of the near completion of the Freelton Lions Villa, a 29-unit, geared-to-income home for seniors. The units are self-contained and totally wheelchair-accessible. The project, spearheaded by Jerry Maloney and the Freelton Lions Club, received good community participation from the 500 citizens and various local groups in the area.

The Freelton Lions Villa was made possible by various fund-raising drives, donations and a $2.5 million grant from the Ontario Ministry of Housing. The community-driven project will be completed some time this January and is already 50% to 60% rented.

In this hustle and bustle, fast-paced world we live in seniors always seem to have time: time to tell of the many changes that have taken place over the years; time to share with us the experiences of their long and full lives. Stories of their accomplishments and woes tell us of the great contributions they have made to society. With the effort and hard work displayed by the citizens of Freelton, the seniors in the area will be able to retire in comfort and dignity.

I ask the members of the assembly to join with me in congratulating the citizens of Freelton and its local Lions club, not only for their dedication and efforts but for the fine example they set in providing affordable housing for our seniors.

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr Phillips: It was a year ago today that we heard the speech from the throne. The people of Ontario put their faith and their future in the hands of the NDP. The NDP members were fresh from their election victory. They said they had a clear vision for Ontario and they headed us down that road.

It is now obvious that the people of Ontario have been let down terribly. The government jumped behind the steering wheel and drove off in a new direction. It is clear the government had no idea where it was heading and now finds itself hopelessly lost in a fog of confusion.

To make matters even worse, the province's economic engine, which supports our quality of life, is sputtering very badly. Yesterday's budget announcement was the latest example. The Treasurer has chosen to delay the tough decisions that are required now and in so doing has pushed these problems into next year. We see an additional $1.5 billion to $2.5 billion in cuts required in next year's fiscal plan. We all know the Treasurer now has to go, hat in hand, to the very federal government he has been blaming to help him out of this fiscal mess.

We all know that the key to solving our fiscal woes is truly to get the economy rolling. However, the economic renewal plans they have announced—conveniently on the eve of the Ontario Federation of Labour convention—are actually fostering bitter divisiveness rather than getting the economy rolling.

The people of the province are rapidly losing confidence in this government. The result is that we are going to see more pain and suffering for the people of Ontario rather than true solutions.

DEATH OF FORMER MEMBER
FOR WELLINGTON-DUFFERIN

Mr Arnott: I rise today to honour the memory of a former member of this Legislature who passed away on Sunday, November 17. John Root served as a member of the Ontario Legislature for over 20 years, representing the riding of Wellington-Dufferin.

First elected to the Ontario Legislature in 1951, John Root was a cabinet minister under Premier Leslie Frost. He also served as chairman of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, which was the precursor of our present Ministry of the Environment. In 1977 he was honoured by Premier William Davis for 15 years of service to the Commission.

Born on October 17, 1908, in the township of Erin in Wellington county, John Root grew up on the family farm and exemplified all his life those fine characteristics of a true son of rural Ontario, dedicated to the interests of the community and love of the land.

On a personal note, I would like to mention that immediately after my own election on September 6, 1990, John Root was the very first person to telephone me to offer his congratulations, and I was absolutely delighted. He was a good friend of my grandfather's, and I am very well acquainted with his son, George.

It is my firm belief that the good work done by John Root, and more recently by his successor, Jack Johnson, laid the foundation of our party's great strength in Wellington and certainly helped to pave the way for our electoral success last year.

I will remember John Root fondly and I know the members of the House will want to join me in extending sympathy to his wife, Lillie, to his children, Bennett, Evelyn, George, Robert and Clayton and his entire family on the loss of a husband, father and friend.

COMMUNITY SERVICES

Mr Farnan: The Community Opportunities Development Association in Cambridge has made a significant impact in fighting the recession in our community. Originally founded in 1984 by the labour council, they are now an independent community-based charity serving more than 5,000 economically disadvantaged individuals and families yearly.

Through the Ministry of Labour, businesses and unions, CODA has helped more than 800 people affected by plant closures in Cambridge this year. In addition, through the Ministry of Community and Social Services, they have developed an innovative and effective approach in helping more than 120 social assistance recipients start small businesses. CODA also offers transportation, housing and children's programs to families in need.

CODA's reputation in the Cambridge community is based on delivering cost-effective, quality services by competent and dedicated professionals.

I applaud the foresight that results in developing and funding organizations such as CODA. I ask that our government not lose sight of the effectiveness of such programs during these times of fiscal restraint. We must remember that community-based agencies such as CODA are a vital component in moving the people of Ontario towards a strong economic recovery.

DEATH OF FORMER MEMBER
FOR WELLINGTON-DUFFERIN

The Speaker: To the member for Wellington, the kind remarks which you made will be sent along to Mr Root's family along with the expressed sympathies of all the members of the assembly.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

The Speaker: Yesterday honourable members will remember that I ruled on a point of order that had been raised during question period by the honourable member for Carleton regarding the right of a minister to reply to a question that had not been asked. Following question period, the honourable House leader of the third party, the member for Parry Sound, asked me if I could look into this and report back to the House. At that time the honourable member for Renfrew North also contributed to the point and I did undertake to look at Hansard and I am now ready to report back.

Very briefly, I agree with the member for Renfrew North and I stand by my ruling of yesterday. Even though there might not have been an interrogatory part to the statement made by the leader of the third party yesterday, he had been recognized to ask a question and he had used up the time to make substantial remarks, and therefore it was perfectly in order for the honourable Treasurer to reply.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

SUPERVISED ACCESS

Hon Mr Hampton: This afternoon the minister responsible for women's issues and I are very pleased to announce a two-year supervised access pilot project. On the advice of a community-based board, the Ministry of the Attorney General will provide funding to community groups to establish 10 supervised access centres in various parts of the province.

The community groups will be invited to apply for funding of up to $100,000 per year to develop supervised access services which will meet the specific needs of their particular communities. These pilot projects will provide an opportunity to evaluate different methods of delivering supervised access services and the need for these services across Ontario.

Supervised access centres provide us with an imaginative means to evaluate community-based initiatives that will use non-adversarial approaches to facilitate access for non-custodial parents. Our intention is to recognize the financially and emotionally vulnerable position of women and children during access disputes. We believe that in some form supervised access centres will provide necessary protection while at the same time facilitating positive child-parent relationships.

I know that there are concerns in the community about access issues and that there is some controversy about the best way to deal with these issues. This project will address some of these concerns. The services which will be provided will assist separated families in carrying out access arrangements which have been ordered by the court or agreed to by the parties. Examples include situations where there are concerns about the safety and wellbeing of the child or where visits pose potential safety risks to the mother.

Supervised access visits may be appropriate in a number of situations: for example, situations involving a parent's alcoholism, drug abuse, physical abuse or emotional difficulties; situations where there are concerns about parenting skills; situations where a parent has been absent from a child's life for a long period of time, and situations involving a threat of possible abduction of the child.

In other situations, the parents may not require supervision of their visits, but the level of conflict and animosity between them may make exchanges of the child difficult for all the parties involved. In these situations, the parties may only need a neutral, secure site for the exchange of the child where the child can be dropped off and picked up without the need for parental contact.

Supervised access centres will offer separated families a safe, neutral and child-focused setting in which visits or exchanges of the child can take place. In most situations, parents will be using these services. However, where other family members, such as grandparents, are entitled to child access, they may also benefit from supervised access services.

We will be establishing a Supervised Access Funding Advisory Committee, made up of members from communities around the province, to consider requests for funding from community groups. I look forward to hearing from community groups across Ontario and to funding projects which will provide these important and valuable services to the people of Ontario.

RESPONSES

SUPERVISED ACCESS VISITES SURVEILLÉES

Mr Sorbara: I am pleased to respond to the statement delivered by the Attorney General today and that he is finally getting on with some response, meagre as it is, to the very large question of access that parents who are separated from their spouses have a right to and desperately want to have with their children.

I note that in the statement the Attorney General is calling for 10 pilot projects to be identified through applications from community groups, and I suppose that is an acceptable way to go.

Je veux dire que nous sommes très contents que le Procureur général ait enfin fait quelque chose qui répond à la grande question de l'accès aux enfants des parents de la province qui se séparent après une période de mariage.

I want to tell the Attorney General that although he takes some pride in this announcement, as I guess he should, the fact that he is now, after almost a year and a half in government, announcing a pilot project completely ignores the fact that the previous Liberal government had undertaken a very substantial pilot project in supervised access in the community of Waterloo. It was very successful. The evaluation was done. There was a report coming out of that, a proposal which recommended a permanent extension of supervised access and it is shocking indeed that the Attorney General now, after a year and some months, is calling for yet another series of pilot projects.

The project that was undertaken in Waterloo, as I said to him, had been a success. All parties in the Legislature and anyone involved in the question of access in communities realized that we needed a publicly funded program of access. For the Attorney General now to call for a pilot project simply indicates one thing and one thing only to me, and that is that the Treasurer has said to him that there will not be ongoing funding for these pilot projects and that at most he can have $1 million to respond to the political pressure to get on with it in this year.

It is evident that the Attorney General somehow simply cannot get on with his agenda. When he took office last October 1, or shortly thereafter, he announced that the government would not proceed to proclaim Bill 124, which provided a legal basis upon which parents who were being denied access could have resort to the court. I understand why he did that. He was under a great deal of political pressure from a number of groups to do that. But at the same time, he undertook, I think in this House as well as outside this House, to respond with some other measure to parents, who look to us in these terribly difficult questions of access. He undertook to revisit the issue and come up with a piece of legislation which was better than the Liberal legislation. He undertook to get on with the question of supervised access. Now, a year later, we see the Attorney General can do little more than call for pilot projects.

The Attorney General has let the criminal court system fall into disrepair. He promised that he would end court backlogs in nine months—and he made that promise a year ago—and the courts are more backlogged than ever. The legal aid system in this province is in crisis. Funds have been cut back, tariffs have not been revised, and the Attorney General has nothing to say in response. His program of family support, which he said must urgently proceed while the bill was in committee, has now been postponed for yet another six months. The program has been cut by some $850,000, and the Attorney General has nothing to say in response.

The fact that he comes here today with a $1-million pilot project in supervised access will not be sufficient answer, I tell the Attorney General, for all those areas that are under his responsibility that should have been attended to, that urgently need attention and that he is not attending to in any way whatsoever.

Mr Harnick: I welcome this announcement, because safe, secure access is a benefit to all parties in these stressful situations. However, when you read this statement, it is as though this government is inventing the concept of custody and supervised access and it is as though these things have never existed before. The fact is that they are plodding along, feeling their way in areas that cry out for decisive action, and a pilot project with a limited term of two years is not decisive action.

Everything this government does is done on a hit-or-miss basis. The support and custody orders enforcement bill, which we had before the standing committee on administration of justice for months, is still not up and running. In fact, before it even starts to run, $850,000 is being deducted from its budget. It is doomed to failure before it starts. I am prepared to bet that the program being announced today will not be up and running six months from now. It will be exactly like everything else the Attorney General does.

The court backlog is still there. One of the Attorney General's appointments to the provincial court bench has described the court system as a sausage factory. The Chief Justice of this province has said the justice system is a failure. On the track record of this government, I will bet members that this announcement will not come to fruition. Six months from now they will still be talking about it. They will still be looking for the money or will be cutting the funding by that time, at the rate the Treasurer is running the economy.

We take a look at SCOE, the court system and other areas that have been a failure. The small claims courts? Absolutely no action at all. Masters of the Ontario Court of Justice? Absolutely no action at all. Justices of the peace? Last week we saw 1,700 cases dismissed from provincial offences courts because the Attorney General cannot institute decisive action.

This announcement, I have no doubt, will be a failure because it will never be implemented; and if it is implemented, the scale at which it is implemented will doom it to failure before it even starts.

Mrs Cunningham: The announcement by the Attorney General today gives me this opportunity to give him advice. He is not unused to receiving it from me over a long period of time and he receives it, I think, with gracious good humour.

This is something we have certainly had a lot of experience with in the city of London, with the supervised access program at Merrymount Children's Centre. We have learned a lot over the years as to how to make that program work. At least in that community there are many families that have been well served. I stated to the minister during the hearings on Bill 17 that if in fact these kinds of programs had been a reality in Ontario, perhaps we would not have needed Bill 17 in the form it was presented in. Of course I am hoping, although I share the concerns of my colleague the member for Willowdale, that these centres will be a success.

The Attorney General knows I cannot stand the words "pilot projects." I wish somebody would stand up, having done his homework—I know he has done his homework, but I do not know why he calls them pilot projects—and say, "These will be ongoing programs, subject to review, subject to success, and if you don't run a program that meets the needs of the community, you won't get the money next time."

The Attorney General might just remember me when he uses the words "pilot projects." I just cannot stand it. I say it also in Education and in Health, because pilots have not been successful, and when I was an elected official, the bureaucrats used to make all the good stuff disappear.

I will say right now, in 28 seconds, that next time the Attorney General should put his emphasis on SCOE. Everybody in this House—he should look at all the members nodding—agrees that the long waiting lists are just not fair. We need resources that work in our SCOE offices. The minister should do a review and come up with a quick response to support the quality of family life. That is what this is supposed to be all about.

ORAL QUESTIONS

TAX REVENUES

Mrs McLeod: I have a question for the Treasurer. Yesterday he told this House he was serving up some tough fiscal medicine to deal with the government's mismanaged finances, but to this point the Treasurer has been all talk and no real action.

The Treasurer is now going cap in hand to ask Ottawa for more than $1.4 billion in extra federal transfer money. The federal government the Treasurer is approaching is the same federal government that has already severely limited its transfer payments to the province. It is the same federal government that is staring at its own $30.5-billion deficit.

Does the Treasurer really believe this Oliver Twist act, going to the federal Tories to ask for more gruel, is going to save his government's finances? What in the world makes the Treasurer think the federal government will come to the rescue?

Hon Mr Laughren: May I first of all congratulate the member for Fort William on her entry into the leadership race. As a fellow northerner, I wish her all the best and quite frankly I hope she wins.

Mr Harnick: It's called a mortal wounding.

Hon Mr Laughren: When other candidates ask me a question, I will say the same thing to them.

On a serious note, I wish to disabuse the member and others who seem to think that because there is a formula in place that says we are entitled to that money back, that is going cap in hand to Ottawa. Nothing could be further from the truth. That money is owed to us. Those are offsets that are put in place precisely to look after this kind of problem. It is not a question of whether Ottawa will give us that money back if we are nice. The fact is that they owe us that money in the form of offsets.

Mrs McLeod: All any of us on this side of the House are asking for from the government is some responsible and realistic financial planning. I wonder when the Treasurer is going to realize his government is not just a victim of a recession. They are part of the problem and they are going to have to be part of the solution.

In order to stay within his deficit target of $9.7 billion this year, the Treasurer is putting off up to $800 million of spending until next year. He admits this government's personal income tax revenues will be $2 billion less next year than he had originally predicted. According to my math, that will make next year's deficit approximately $11.7 billion. If the balance of his revenue projections are on target at this point, that is really just wishful thinking.

The Treasurer says he will need to make tough decisions next year just in order to keep his four-year fiasco on track. Some analysts say he has already built foolishness into a four-year plan. Where does he expect to find the extra $2.8 billion in government spending cuts just to keep within next year's budget?

Hon Mr Laughren: I take back those nice things I said in my opening.

Let me make clear exactly what has been put off until next year, because there seems to be a misunderstanding about what savings are in effect this year that will cause us problems next year in the form of extra expenditures. There are some.

First, from the statement made on October 2, the moneys from the wage protection fund that will not be paid this year will be paid next year. That is about $85 million.

Second, the $50 million in pay equity that will flow once amendments to the Pay Equity Act for proportional value, as I recall it, are through will be paid.

There is no question that those numbers do put the problem off, if we can put it that way, to next year, not in order to allow us to meet our deficit number but because that simply could not be done anyway, the way the legislative process moves through here.

As far as the capital expenditures go, those capital expenditures, while they may be delayed or put off until next year, will have to be accommodated within the existing capital budget for next year. It is not adding to the problem for next year. I think we should be clear about that. We are not simply putting off all our problems till next year. That is not the case.

Mrs McLeod: That seems to result in some confusing understanding of next year's budget. Either they are permanent cuts that this Treasurer has announced or they are deferrals to next year and he is telling those people who expected those moneys that they are not going to be in next year's budget or he is going to make significant other cuts, which is all we are asking him to tell us about today. Where are the cuts going to be?

When the Treasurer first presented his budget last spring, he said he wanted to fight the recession, not the deficit. Since then, Ontario's unemployment has hit 9.6% and more than one million people in Ontario are on social assistance. The government has clearly lost its fight against the recession. Now we switch tack. The Treasurer says he needs to keep the government's deficit within the four-year budget plan. He has twice had to bring in spending restrictions to deal with the poor financial forecast. He has lost the war against the recession, he has lost the war against the deficit. Can the Treasurer tell us what battle he is fighting now or whether he has simply thrown in the towel and is counting on Ottawa to save his sinking financial ship?

Hon Mr Laughren: Let us try to put this in some kind of perspective. When we brought down the budget in April 1991, we forecast some numbers for this year and for the next three years. At this point in time, we are fighting very hard to make sure we stay within those forecasted numbers that were in the budget in 1991. How can the opposition members stand in their places and say our fiscal plan is in disarray when we are taking every action that is required to stay within those forecasted numbers? They make no sense whatsoever.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mrs McLeod: Since it seems to be virtually impossible to get any kind of specific answer from the Treasurer, I would like to direct a more specific question about the government's priorities for spending to one of the other ministers of the government. I would like to direct a question to a minister who is prepared to be responsible for long-term care. In the absence of the Minister of Health, I will direct the question to the Minister of Community and Social Services.

Today on the Legislature steps we have seen an example of what government indecision means to the people of Ontario. Today friends and families of nursing home residents were here to tell the government in the only way they knew how that they are in a crisis, that the government's financial solution is a Band-Aid at best and that the care in their facilities is in jeopardy. How does the government justify the delay in implementing its long-term care reforms? What is this government saying to the people on the Legislature steps and thousands across the province who want to be assured that their loved ones in nursing homes are receiving the level of care they need?

Hon Mrs Boyd: I say exactly what I said in the House when the consultation paper was delivered: We are responding to the requests that were made to us by the reference group that was set up, which met in September. The group clearly said that because of the changes we wanted to make in the plan the previous government had put forward, primarily in the areas of co-payment but also in the area of how quickly and to what extent the change would occur, they wanted further consultation on that and they wanted us to undertake that consultation in the way we have.

Mrs McLeod: The reality is that the government's proposals for long-term care reform are essentially identical to the proposals of the Liberal government. The only thing that has changed is that there has been more than a full year's delay in implementing those proposals.

It is also a reality that the Liberal government committed $345 million to implement levels-of-care funding as of January 1, 1992. This money or any money to implement long-term care reforms seems to have simply disappeared from any of the Treasurer's budget plans. I would ask the minister whether she does not feel that it makes sense to invest in other alternatives to relieve the pressure on hospitals which are using expensive acute care beds to provide for chronic care and whether long-term care is not a social and economic priority for her government.

Hon Mrs Boyd: As we said in the announcement, $647 million has been allocated to this and much of that is new money. We changed the date in terms of the levels of care to January 1993, that is quite correct, because v were uncomfortable and distressed about the way in which the plan was formulated. We believe very strongly that we have not taken account of our multicultural communities. We have not taken account of the needs of the aboriginal people of this province in the previous plan. They have been very clear that they want to see a provision for them to participate in this, given their different formulations of family.

I just remind the member there are five major areas of difference in the consultation we are undertaking and the plans we are putting forward. Those are serious areas of difference and we believe the people of Ontario should have the opportunity to comment on them.

Mrs McLeod: The bottom-line reality is that this government is simply delaying implementing any long-term care reforms because it has not yet carried out any real planning for cost-effective delivery of services that people need.

There is a crisis. The crisis is not 20 years removed; the crisis is here, the crisis is now. The crisis is with hospitals that are running deficits and being forced to close beds, the crisis is with nursing homes that are not adequately funded to serve the seniors they care for and the crisis is with this government as it contemplates cutting programs like home care and ending the universality of our health care system.

I suggest to the minister this is not something the government can simply pass on to the federal government; it is something the government can act on. I ask if she would commit to returning to the commitments made by the Liberal government. Will this government implement levels-of-care funding in January 1992?

Hon Mrs Boyd: The member is simply imputing things to the government that are not clear at all from the document. In fact, quite the opposite is clear; we are not in any way cutting home care. In fact, the funding to home care has expanded under this government. We are switching money from the acute care beds in hospitals to this project, and the Minister of Health has been very clear about that. We see the delivery of health care in a different way.

As for universality, there is absolutely no suggestion in our plan that we are destroying universality, although the co-payment in the previous government's plan indeed endangered that.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr Harris: I have a question for the Treasurer. Yesterday I asked him for specifics on his announcement regarding $200 million worth of cuts in capital spending. He did not have an answer. He did not know exactly which projects were going to be cut or which ones were going to be deferred. Yesterday as well, he announced that $70 million worth of assets are to be sold, but other than giving an indication that it would be surplus property that is sold, he did not know which property was going to be sold.

I presume the Treasurer has now met with his colleagues and discussed his flash announcement from yesterday. Could the Treasurer now tell us what projects will be cut or deferred and from which ministries, and could he tell us what government property is going to be fire sold in the middle of the recession?

Hon Mr Laughren: I think I heard a question in the member's statement. I want to tell the leader of the third party that when we were looking at ways in which we could compensate for the income tax shortfall, I and my colleagues on treasury board said to our officials that, first, we were determined to find the $200 million in capital savings this year and, second, that we would find $70 million in the sale of assets such as surplus land and/or some money that is in the coffers of some of our crown corporations, and I used as the example the Ontario Energy Corp, where we get dividends from Suncor.

At this point, that is exactly what we are doing. We are determining exactly which projects will be on the list not to proceed with now in order to effect the $200 million in saving in capital.

Mr Harris: Basically what the Treasurer is saying is, he does not know, but he has asked his colleagues for $200 million. This government came into power as the great party of consultation, saying it was going to share information. Why will he not share with the Legislature the list of potential projects that are available to cut $200 million from? Why will he not share that with the public, with our partners the municipalities, hospitals and school boards and with the Legislature? Why will he not share the list of the assets from which he wants to find his $70 million?

He should truly consult with the people and share with us the information he has so that we can all participate and assist him in setting priorities as to the appropriate things that should be cut or deferred or sold, if any.

Hon Mr Laughren: It is precisely because this government believes in consultation that we are not going through the exercise that other governments have gone through whenever they find themselves with a fiscal problem. Rather than simply saying we are cutting so much out of all programs without consulting with anybody, we—

Mr Harnick: That is what you just did.

Hon Mr Laughren: No, that is not true. If the member would just listen—

Mr Harnick: It is true. Give us the particulars.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Laughren: Mr Speaker, I will wait for the supplementary.

Mr Harris: I did not expect much of an answer, Mr Speaker, so I do not mind his not giving an answer. The Treasurer has not selected what he thinks is appropriate, nor was he prepared to share the list with the Legislature last weekend, yesterday or today, so there is no consultation with anybody other than his own party.

The Treasurer spent a slash-and-burn weekend. Yesterday he would not acknowledge in the House he was cutting jobs; I understand outside the House he admitted jobs would be cut. He still will not tell us how many; however, he did admit that. But basically, I say to the Treasurer, this has all come about because he has lost control. He has no more idea today than he did last week about how he is going to control the deficit, either this year or next.

I want to talk about next year. Somebody has to pay ultimately. With all the deferrals he has made to next year, with all the existing commitments of program announcements, funding, salary settlements that have already been made, and if the economy is still as flat next year as it is this year—gosh, one hopes that is not the case—can the Treasurer tell me how he plans to account in his next budget for the $5-billion to $6-billion to $7-billion shortfall? Will there be $5 billion, $6 billion or $7 billion in new taxes next year, or is he going to run the deficit to $15 billion, $16 billion or $17 billion?

Hon Mr Laughren: The leader of the third party rises in his place day after day with this big black cloud over his head. He and the third party are such nabobs of negativism that it is really hard to understand sometimes why—

Interjections.

Hon Mr Laughren: I was trying to answer this in my previous answer and I got drowned out by the heckling, so I will try again. I want to assure the leader of the third party that what we are doing this year is taking actions that do not fundamentally affect program delivery of essential services in this province. I think all members would agree with that, that we have not cut into the essential services in education, health care and social services. What we are doing is going through a process on the treasury board and examining all the major allocations of government to see where there can be reallocation and, quite frankly, where there can be reductions in programs for next year, because the leader of the third party is quite correct; there is a major problem for next year on expenditures and revenues and we are determined to manage that. I hope he will give us some credit that this year, despite revenue problems, despite expenditure problems, we are staying within our targets that we laid down in the budget, and that is what we intend to do.

Mr Harris: The Treasurer's colleagues laughed at me when I said $5 billion, $6 billion or $7 billion. I am sure they will laugh at him when he tells them that is the problem in cabinet and at caucus next week. He has not cut a cent this year; he has deferred some stuff till next year, so he does have that problem and he is making it worse by deferring it.

My second question is also of the Treasurer. I think most objective observers, of which I acknowledge I am not one—I am biased—will say that yesterday he paid lipservice to controlling government spending, but he did nothing, for example, to put an end to government waste. I have a copy of the report on the audited deputy ministers' expenditures. Let me read a couple of examples from that.

1. Some 27 management staff from the ministry had a one-day meeting in a hotel in downtown Toronto. It cost $1,700; food and beverages, $1,000. In addition, $300 was paid for room rental and $360 to rent audiovisual equipment. I guess the government does not have a projector in all our free rooms.

2. Some 15 staff from the ministry had lunch at a downtown Toronto restaurant that cost $950 for meals and beverages—$63 a person.

3. Another 11 staff from the ministry had an executive committee business luncheon in a hotel that cost $650—$59 a person. I guess we do not have a single room available to accommodate 11 staff.

My question is really quite simple: If the Treasurer is so serious about controlling government spending, why did he not do anything yesterday about this type of extravagance that I have brought up time and again in this Legislature?

Hon Mr Laughren: We did indeed do something about this very problem yesterday in the Legislature when we announced further savings in the operating expenses of every ministry. While I read the comments by the auditor as well—we do have to be careful about those kinds of expenditures—it takes time to get out of the system deeply entrenched modes of behaviour that were encouraged and abetted by former governments for so many years.

Mr Harris: I appreciate very much what the Treasurer is saying. I agree there were some traditions built up over the last five or six years in this province that are despicable, wasting money, and anything I can do to help him get back to a commonsense expenditure of taxpayers' money, I am glad to do.

The report I referred to goes on to say that significant savings would be realized if meetings were simply held in the hundreds of boardrooms in government-owned facilities. For example, they say instead of $63 to dine at a downtown hotel, staff could have a nicely catered lunch for $14. I suggest to the Treasurer that if they bring their own lunch, as most employees have to do, or pay for their own, they could have these meetings for free. Why will the Treasurer not immediately place a ban on all meetings that are now being held in hotels when government-owned facilities are available?

Hon Mr Laughren: I think the Chair of Management Board has sent out directives already, and I believe possibly even the Premier has sent out directives as well, dealing with that very problem. I believe we must be very careful to weed out any excesses involving those kinds of meetings, so I am not really disagreeing with the leader of the third party. I think savings need to be effected in those areas, so I am not disagreeing with the leader.

Mr Harris: The meeting where he decided to do that was probably held at the Park Plaza, but anyway, if he says he is going to do it, we will see.

In the 48 hours since I raised an issue of government waste in the Ministry of Transportation, another civil servant has brought yet another example of wasteful spending to my attention. Not only did the 9,000 Ministry of Transportation employees and the staff receive that beautiful key chain tape measure, but they were also given nice little buttons stating: "I Was There." Here is a nice, fancy pin that all 9,000 have been given. These are to celebrate the 75th anniversary of the ministry.

I would like to ask the Treasurer whether he has the answer today to the question I raised two days ago about the cost of these shanghaied tapes that were given to 9,000 employees and whether he could immediately investigate the cost of a 75th anniversary celebration, including these buttons and pins and whistles, the cost of that program, and tell us why any of our tax dollars are being spent to celebrate a 75th anniversary of a ministry of this government.

Hon Mr Laughren: To answer the first part of the member's question first, I do not have an answer on the cost of the shanghaied tapes, as he refers to them. I will check into the whole question of the 75th anniversary of a particular ministry.

I remind the leader of the third party that at least we have come some way from the days when the Tories were in power and every lunch was at La Scala. At least we are not doing that any more.

TAX INCREASES

Mrs McLeod: Just moments ago, when I asked the Treasurer about his proposals to manage his deficit for next year, he avoided answering any questions about specific expenditure cuts and certainly made no reference to taxation increases.

I have a copy of the Toronto Star which has just come out in which the Treasurer apparently has been indicating to people outside this House that taxes are essentially inevitable. I quote from the Toronto Star. The Treasurer is said to have said, "It would be very difficult to put together a package for next year that kept the deficit within our targeted figures without having a combination of expenditure reductions and some tax increases."

May I ask the Treasurer if that accurately reflects the statements he is making to the media and what he expects to see in his budget next year?

Hon Mr Laughren: I want to assure the member opposite she does not need to get information from me through the tabloids. She can ask me directly in this House and I will respond to her directly.

What I did say outside the House yesterday, and I would say it in here and I will repeat it again, is that as we prepare the budget for next year, given the very tight fiscal situation, I cannot imagine bringing down a budget that did not have a combination of expenditure reductions and some tax increases. I hastened to add when I talked to reporters that absolutely no decision whatsoever had been made on any tax increases for next year. We have not even started that process yet.

Mrs McLeod: The Treasurer and other members of this government are well aware of the frustration on this side of the House with our inability to get information in this Legislature. We are constantly having to look to the media and to statements made in other parts of the province to get the information we need to hold this government accountable in the interests of the people of this province. It is not surprising that we would have to go to the media to get the answer to the question I asked moments ago.

I asked the Treasurer how he planned to manage the deficit in next year's budget. He did not mention even the possibility of tax increases in his answers to those questions. He does not seem to be indicating now that there is any question about whether there will be taxes. He says taxes are inevitable. We are asking this minister to give us some idea whether that is factual and what kinds of tax increases this government is going to be looking at.

Hon Mr Laughren: That is bordering on the nonsensical. I said outside the Legislature, and I said it in here, that next year as we make preparations for the budget I cannot imagine not having some kind of adjustments in taxes upwards. But I said as clearly as I could that absolutely no discussions have been held, no decisions have been made on potential tax increases for next year; none at all. I do not know how specific I can be to the member. She stands in her place and says she is not getting information from us. I am giving her as direct an answer as it is possible to give.

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION

Mr Harris: I also have a question for the Treasurer. He keeps giving this good show about trying to control pointless government spending, but his record is telling a very different story.

I want to draw his attention to his government's decision to start norOntair Dash-8 government-owned air service between Thunder Bay and Kenora. Right now there are five flights a day between Thunder Bay and Kenora, three of them provided by Bearskin Air, a private sector airline, and two by norOntair in a smaller aircraft. The average flight is half full. In total they carry about 35 people a day.

When the government airline, norOntair, has a mandate to provide service where the private sector cannot, can the Treasurer explain to me why he now feels it is necessary to bring on two Dash-8 aircraft accommodating 70 passengers a day when less than half that number are flying on half-full aircraft, effectively throwing Bearskin Air out of business? Can he explain to me why that is a government priority?

Hon Mr Laughren: It is with a great sense of confidence that I refer the question to the Minister of Northern Development.

Hon Miss Martel: I am pleased to respond to the question by the leader of the third party. Let me tell him he should check the entire route and he will find that not only are we moving the Dash-8s through Kenora, as requested by that community in many letters and a very intense lobby to me for increased and better service, but we are moving those two Dash-8s through a number of other communities where he may also have noticed a need to increase the capacity. We will be flying those planes not only through Kenora, but right on to North Bay and Ottawa to allow northern communities and northern municipal leaders to actually go to Ottawa to lobby the federal government rather than having to go to Toronto and back over.

When the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission and I began to look at this, I told them I was not interested in having a flight we would have to subsidize, but I needed them to find a way to be sure that this would pay for itself. The increase in the number of routes and the number of communities we will be into makes us feel certain that in the first year we will break even and in the second year we will make a profit.

On that basis I determined we should allow these flights to have adequate and efficient service not only for Kenora but for other northern communities.

Mr Harris: Here is what the Minister of Northern Development said last December: "I believe Kenora receives adequate scheduled air service from Bearskin and norOntair and we reject that a Dash-8 aircraft is necessary to service that." That is exactly what she said.

Four other private sector airlines tried to run a Dash-8. All cancelled, including Air Ontario, because they could not make it pay. The minister justifies that by saying, in addition to potentially throwing 25 employees out of work at Bearskin, she is also going to throw out the employees of Canadian Partner, which is going belly up now serving North Bay to Ottawa. She is going to run them out of business too.

The minister's mandate is to provide service to communities that do not have airline service: Ignace, Armstrong, Ear Falls, Nakina, Parry Sound. None of them has airline service now. Why is she taking government money, throwing more private sector employees out of work by bringing in government aircraft on the routes that are already serviced, and she still will not service communities that have no air service at all?

Hon Miss Martel: The member referred to the letter in December. It was certainly true that in December when the community asked me for this I told them no, I did not think we could run it at that time. The one thing not in the letter, of course, is that they thought we had an extra Dash-8 we were releasing to Air Ontario so we could put it into service.

I listened to the community, which is a little bit different than the third party usually does for people. They came back to me, they lobbied intensely and asked me to review the situation. I reviewed the situation with ONTC and we determined that by putting the Dash-8 not only into Kenora but into a number of other northern communities that needed additional service we could break even this year and make money next year.

Let me say one other thing about the allegations being made by Bearskin Air and Canadian Partner. Bearskin has alleged they will lose 25 people; Canadian Partner has alleged they will lose 40 pilots by our putting two planes into North Bay and Ottawa. I find it very hard to believe that either Canadian Partner or Bearskin Air will lose a total of 65 people because of these changes.

We have been meeting with Bearskin Air. We have asked them to put on the table where they think they are going to lose 25 employees. They have been unable to give us any evidence at all that there will be 25 employees lost. We have told—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Would the minister please take her seat.

HOME GARMENT WORKERS

Mr Marchese: My question is to the Minister of Labour. Recently, a coalition of workers' advocacy groups in my riding of Fort York released a report on the appalling conditions facing home workers in Toronto's garment industry. It is estimated there are about 2,000 to 3,000 of these home workers in Toronto. Most of them are women and many do not speak English.

These workers have very little protection under the existing Employment Standards Act. They are not subject to the limitations on the hours of work. They are not entitled to statutory holidays or overtime pay. Home workers are entitled to the minimum wage under the Employment Standards Act; however, this provision is violated repeatedly by the employers. Some workers make $3 an hour, some $2 an hour and some $1 an hour.

What steps has the Minister of Labour taken to ensure that existing employment standards are better enforced, and what is he doing to improve the legislation to offer better protection to home workers?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I thank the member for the question. I also thank him for his concern and work with the home workers, and the coalition and its work as well. We are concerned about the health of these workers and their wellbeing and the jobs they have. The Ministry of Labour is in the process of taking a look at the Employment Standards Act. One of the specific areas we are looking at is the protection for home workers and other workers in Ontario.

INVESTIGATION INTO POLICE SHOOTING

Mr Curling: My question is to the Solicitor General. On Monday I asked the Solicitor General to revoke a secret protocol that severely hampers the ability of Ontario's special investigations unit to conduct an independent investigation into police shootings. Instead of answering the question, he said he could not interfere with the workings of the SIU. I presume he is saying he agrees with the secret protocol. What he is also saying is that it is okay for police to investigate police. I would like to ask the Solicitor General today, does he approve of the secret protocol between the SIU and Ontario's police chiefs?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I am not aware of any secret protocol between those groups. Mr Osler, through the review of the Police Services Act under the previous government, established the SIU, which is unique not only here in Canada but in all of North America. It is in its infancy; it has not been in operation very long. From time to time, I am sure it will be reviewed. As a matter of fact, my information is that Mr Osler himself has indicated he is initiating a review with respect to the unit and its functioning.

Mr Curling: This minister does not know one thing that goes on in his ministry. I am very shocked to know he has said there is no secret protocol. Let me bring the minister up to date. Right inside his ministry, on April 16, 1991—this year—his deputy and the assistant deputy and the members of his legal branch participated in developing a secret protocol. In fact, his own legal branch drafted the protocol which now so severely limits the action of the SIU. These officials report directly to the minister. The minister cannot hide from that responsibility. Mr Osler said the ministry asked that this be reviewed, and the minister is saying today there is no secret protocol. Will the minister today revoke that secret protocol so the SIU can continue its investigations?

Hon Mr Pilkey: The member is sincere, but of course he is misinformed. I would like to indicate that the protocol he suggests I am not aware of, I am in fact quite aware of. I am quite aware of how it started. I am quite aware of the participants in that protocol and the contents thereof. I indicate as evidence to the member opposite the fact that it is not a secret protocol. Obviously it is not. He knows about it. He is reading something in front of him and sharing it with the entire House. If that is a secret document, that is a strange way to have a secret.

GARBAGE DISPOSAL

Mr Cousens: My question is for the Minister of Northern Development and Mines. Last week in a referendum in Kirkland Lake, close to 70% of the people in that municipality endorsed the suggestion of there being a full environmental assessment for the Adams mine site to accept greater Toronto area garbage. This indicates that the citizens of Kirkland Lake view this as an economic opportunity and not as the establishment of a huge garbage dump. In fact, they see the Adams mine site becoming a highly developed waste management system. Is the minister going to listen to the people of Kirkland Lake and at least consider this opportunity for economic development?

Hon Miss Martel: I have met with the mayor of Kirkland Lake on several occasions. We have discussed this at all our meetings. I have made it very clear to him that any proposal with respect to moving garbage from the GTA to Kirkland Lake or anywhere else in northern Ontario would not be entertained by myself, by the Minister of the Environment or by this government.

Mr Cousens: It is a matter of record that the people of Kirkland Lake very much want to look at this as an option. The fact is that the government has already spent millions of dollars on economic diversification plans for northern Ontario, something like $250 million for Elliot Lake out of Ontario Hydro's funds and another $260 million for Kapuskasing, and yet her colleague the Minister of the Environment states unequivocally in Bill 143 that transportation of waste outside the greater Toronto area will not be considered as an option under the environmental assessment process. Will the Minister of Northern Development stand up for the people of Kirkland Lake and allow them the opportunity to be proactive in their own economic development?

Hon Miss Martel: We all have different ideas on development. I can tell the member that I was very pleased to meet with the mayor and a number of his council members, along with his economic development officer, about three weeks ago to review a document that our ministry has funded which looks at economic development opportunities in the region, many of them in relation to mining activities. We have made an undertaking with him that we will have the mine staff deal directly with the economic development officer as soon as possible to determine which of the proposals we can meet and fund. But I make it very clear to this member, as I have to the mayor on several occasions both in Toronto and within the community, that I will not entertain this proposal.

The other thing I want to say is that I find it very interesting that when I do listen to the people, as I did in Kenora, I get dumped all over by these clowns on the other side, and I find that very strange.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. I ask the honourable member if she would withdraw that.

Hon Miss Martel: I do withdraw the remark "clowns."

LANDFILL SITE

Mr Wiseman: I rise on behalf of the member for Halton North, who is ill today. He very much would like to know the status of the negotiations—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Interjections.

1450

The Speaker: The member for Durham West, to whom is your question directed?

Mr Wiseman: It is to the Minister of the Environment. I would like to continue. This question is on behalf of my colleague the member for Halton North, who is too ill to ask it today. As he has indicated on many occasions in this House, he has a deep interest in what happens to the Acton quarry and would like an update from the Minister of the Environment as to the status of the negotiations on the Acton quarry.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mrs Grier: I am very glad to have an opportunity to put on the record the status of the proposal by Reclamations Systems Inc that a waste management site be developed in the Acton quarry. I know the member for Halton North is vitally interested in this issue. As people who have read the daily papers will realize, today the government review of the environmental assessment has been completed and released for public comment. It is customary that the period of public comment be 30 days, but given the requests for a longer review period from the residents of that area and from the municipalities in Halton, I have instructed that there be a 60-day period for that public comment. When that comment has been received, then the project can be reviewed by my ministry.

ENVIRONMENTAL LEGISLATION

Mr McClelland: My question is for the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday, in response to my question, the minister took offence at my characterization of Bill 143. With Bill 143, what she has done is to declare war on the fundamental rights of people in Ontario. How can the minister, of all people, in good conscience justify Bill 143, which overrides every single piece of legislation designed to ensure the protection of the environment, including the Environmental Assessment Act, the Planning Act, the Municipal Act and the Environmental Protection Act?

These acts are not legal impediments, as she once characterized them. The people of Mississauga, Vaughan and the rest of Ontario see them as legal rights and environmental protection measures. Can the minister ensure that her actions will not cause permanent harm to the environment, when she has chosen to bypass every check and balance and approvals process that is presently in place?

Hon Mrs Grier: I object to the member's characterization of the actions I have taken in issuing minister's orders to the regional municipality of Peel and the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. Under section 29 of the Environmental Protection Act, I have the power and the responsibility to issue those orders. They have been used by my predecessors on so many occasions in the past.

Interjection: You mean Jim Bradley used them?

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mrs Grier: For example, let me assure the House that my predecessor in office used section 29 of the Environmental Protection Act to order waste from Orangeville into Keele Valley and I do not remember calls for an environmental assessment process in that case. The situation we are faced with and which Bill 143 is designed to address—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Would the minister take her seat.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Would the minister complete her response.

Hon Mrs Grier: The issue that section of Bill 143 is designed to address, as the member well knows, is the immediate crisis we face in the time between the running out of capacity of those sites and the coming on stream of the new long-term sites which are being sought. It is our intention to have that gap be as brief as possible, but for that period it would be irresponsible of me not to plan for the contingency that there would in fact be that gap. That is the kind of decisive action this government is prepared to take.

Mr McClelland: For the minister to compare the issuing of orders to a piece of legislation that wipes out people's rights is absolutely absurd. This is the same minister who said she supported an environmental bill of rights and said she would see to immediate passage of it upon her election. Is it not true that had her environmental bill of rights been in place, the bill would have had to be added to the list of bills that she is ready to wipe out in order to get Bill 143 in?

Hon Mrs Grier: I know the member and all the members of his caucus will be delighted to learn that the preparation of a draft environmental bill of rights is well under way and is proceeding with a broad consensus from a broad range of stakeholders who see the need for this kind of legislation. There is no question in my mind that we will have an environmental bill of rights before this House and that the rights of the people of this province to protect their environment will be protected. That does not change the situation that there are emergencies which occur, and any Minister of the Environment will require to have, as have all previous ministers of the Environment, the power to make orders to protect the health and safety of the people of this province in the event of an emergency.

The Speaker: New question, the member for Mississauga South.

Mrs Marland: My question is for the Minister of Education. Is he here? He was here a minute ago.

The Speaker: The minister is not in the chamber. Is there some other person to whom you wish to address your question?

Mrs Marland: It is very difficult to have question period with so many cabinet ministers absent. We had the same situation yesterday.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr Villeneuve: In the absence of the Minister of Labour, I will go to the Treasurer and Deputy Premier. The Minister of Labour announced that the city of Cornwall and area workers had requested an older and displaced worker centre over two years ago. The Minister of Labour, I think, has left the impression that sooner or later Cornwall will get this help centre. I would like the Treasurer to confirm at this point that indeed the Cornwall area will be getting the help centre, which would be initiated to help workers between the ages of 35 and 50 years who do not have employment.

Hon Mr Laughren: I think the member for S-D-G & East Grenville knows me and the Minister of Labour well enough to know that I would not make a statement on his behalf, but I will speak to him about it.

Mr Villeneuve: I was not aware that the Minister of Labour had been asked to leave early, and apparently he was. He was scheduled to be here all afternoon. However, would the Treasurer please look into a situation where the city of Cornwall has been promised this help centre for more senior unemployed workers, so that it will not go to another city for political reasons.

Hon Mr Laughren: I can certainly assure the member that it would not go to another city for political reasons, at the very least, but I will talk to the Minister of Labour about the very important matter the member has raised.

BREWING INDUSTRY

Mr Mills: My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr Stockwell: He is going to read it.

Mr Mills: I am not going to read it; it is from the heart.

The Speaker: Would the member place his question please.

Mr Mills: In my riding, and likewise in all the other ridings, a lot of small restaurants and pub-type places are having a hard time making ends meet. The final nail is their coffin is the fact that now Brewers' Retail is charging them to deliver beer. I am just wondering what the minister can do about that. This is enough to put them right in the hole.

Hon Ms Churley: I would just like to point out, for those who do not know, that the Brewers' Retail is privately owned and that the government cannot control its policy. However, I do have a comment to make on the question.

I was very concerned about the new costs associated with delivery. I asked to meet with Brewers' Retail. We did meet. I asked if they would consider at least postponing the new charges for delivery and happily they agreed to do that at my request. Since then, they have met at least once with the Ontario Hotel and Motel Association to discuss perhaps other options of dealing with this situation.

Mr Mills: There are beer stores closing down all over the place. I am just wondering what we are going to do with the folks who are faced with this situation: when the beer store closes and they are left without any place to buy their beer. What is the minister going to do about this?

Hon Ms Churley: As I said, the ministry does regulate and control the sale of beer. We cannot stop the breweries from closing down beer stores. However, I have asked the LCBO, in four areas where there is no beer store left in the community, to provide a large assortment of beer in the LCBO stores, and that is happening. I think three of the four LCBO stores in those communities have a large variety of beer for consumers now.

WORKERS' COMPENSATION BOARD

Mr Offer: I have a question for the Treasurer. In the past three weeks, we have watched the Treasurer rail on about the need to cut back programs, freeze expenditures and control expenses in order to keep Ontario competitive.

As the Treasurer is aware, the Workers' Compensation Board is now examining two policy proposals: eligibility and workplace stress. Both these initiatives are deemed to be very expensive by employer groups, and yet the WCB has said unequivocally that it will not do any financial impact studies on these two proposals. If that is not enough, the Minister of Labour has now said that he will not be involved in any way in this process and that all decisions must rest with the WCB.

I ask the Treasurer this question specifically because the proper financial management of this huge enterprise is of vital importance to Ontario's economy. Does he not agree that a proper financial analysis of these two new WCB initiatives is essential? If so, will he, as the chief financial officer for Ontario, ensure today through his ministry and undertake that these impact studies will take place?

Hon Mr Laughren: I appreciate the question from the Labour critic of the Liberal Party. I am aware of the studies that are going on, and I believe there are public hearings being held across the province on these matters. It is my understanding that we wanted to allow those hearings to take place before any parties moved to get themselves involved in an economic impact study. Let's at least allow that process to take place before anything else is done.

Mr Offer: I am quite troubled that the Treasurer was not able to say today that he would at least undertake to provide a financial assessment and an impact analysis of two policy proposals which will affect business and Ontario's economy and its ability to be competitive.

Members will be aware that the WCB has just released its third-quarter financial report. The astounding part of this report is that the WCB's unfunded liability has increased in one year almost $1 billion to $9.9 billion, which the WCB chairman has stated might result in significant rate increases. It is unacceptable that such increases come about because new programs that were not properly costed or analysed were implemented.

The Treasurer's answer to this question is absolutely vital to the backbone of our economy, the men and women who make up Ontario's business community. Will he ensure today that financial impact analyses are carried out on all new WCB program initiatives such as these two new proposals, and will he guarantee that these two crucial fiscal proposals will come before this chamber for full debate before they are implemented?

Hon Mr Laughren: I know that all members in the assembly share my concern about the WCB. I have been here enough years to recall the debates that went on among all three parties dealing with the problems that have bedevilled all of us. I am concerned as well about any major new assessments by the WCB.

The WCB, as members know, is facing a very substantial unfunded liability and is concerned with its assessments on the employer community as well. I assure the Labour critic for the Liberal Party that we will indeed look very carefully at the recommendations that come out of those hearings that are being held. As well, I will talk to the Minister of Labour about to what extent that will lead to an economic impact study.

The Speaker: The member for St George-St David.

Mr Scott: This is rather difficult to explain, but earlier in the day there was an exchange between my colleague the member for Fort William and the Treasurer about the extent to which he was prepared to predict that expanded taxes would occur in the budget. That is an important question, but much more important is that there should be no new taxes.

I want to resolve the problem this way: I will offer to pay each member of the government $200—

The Speaker: Would the member for St George-St David please take his seat.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr McClelland: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: A while ago, I placed a question in supplementary form to the Minister of the Environment. Her answer had absolutely no bearing whatsoever on the supplementary question I put to her. She did not even begin to touch on a response in any meaningful way. Accordingly, pursuant to section 33(a) of the standing orders, I invite the minister to debate with me tomorrow evening that particular response that was not forthcoming today.

The Speaker: I trust the member for Brampton North will file the necessary document with the table.

Hon Mrs Grier: I regret to inform the member for Brampton North that I will be in Vancouver tomorrow evening at 6. I would be happy to have a late show on Monday if that will accommodate his concerns.

The Speaker: As is the custom, the matter can be dealt with by mutual agreement, and I am sure the two parties involved can determine how best to handle this.

PETITIONS

GASOLINE PRICES

Mr Morin: I have a petition signed by 150 people which reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas gasoline prices are significantly higher in the Ottawa area than those in southern Ontario;

"Whereas such a price disparity discriminates against Ottawa-area consumers;

"Whereas the government of Ontario has eliminated provincial licence fees for northern residents to compensate for a similar gas price disparity between southern and northern Ontario."

"The Legislative Assembly of Ontario should urge the Ontario government to correct this injustice to Ottawa-area motorists."

ELECTROLYTIC EPILATION

Mr Morin: I have a second petition. It is from a group of 101 citizens and has to do with the withdrawal of medically prescribed electrolysis from OHIP coverage, which they feel is unfair.

CHURCH OF SCIENTOLOGY

Mr Poirier: I have a petition which concerns the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas, we are clergy and members of many different faiths in Ontario; and

"Whereas, we believe in the fundamental right of all Canadians, under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to have freedom of conscience and religion; and

"Whereas, our country and the province of Ontario are bound by this charter; and

"Whereas, there are many faiths in Canada, both old and new, and these faiths, under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, are free to practise on an equal basis without discrimination; and

"Whereas, it is not the mandate of government to determine religious nature or interfere in God-given, spiritual matters; and

"Whereas, the Church of Scientology has been recognized to solemnize marriages in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and Yukon, is recognized around the world as a bona fide religious body and is long deserving of being registered to solemnize marriages in the province of Ontario;

"We, the undersigned clergy and members, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To instruct the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to end their discriminatory practices and license ministers from the Church of Scientology to solemnize marriages in Ontario."

This petition is signed by 24 members of clergies and different religions across Ontario. I have signed the petition and I submit it to the Legislative Assembly.

ENVIRONMENTAL LEGISLATION

Mr Offer: I have a petition. I will not read it all but will just indicate that it is signed by a number of very concerned residents surrounding the Britannia landfill site. They express their concern to the Minister of the Environment and the Premier and urge the minister to keep promises and to keep those agreements made by the city and the residents of Mississauga and to make certain that the legislation makes certain that all the bylaws will be abided by. I have signed this petition.

GASOLINE PRICES

Mr Chiarelli: I have several petitions addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and signed by residents of Ottawa-Carleton:

"Whereas gasoline prices are significantly higher in the Ottawa area than those in southern Ontario;

"Whereas such a price disparity discriminates against Ottawa-area consumers;

"Whereas the government of Ontario has eliminated vehicle licence fees for northern residents to compensate for a similar gas price disparity between southern and northern Ontario;

"The Legislative Assembly of Ontario should urge the Ontario government to correct this injustice to Ottawa-area motorists."

I have signed all these petitions and I agree with them. I urge the members to take the advice of these residents of Ottawa-Carleton that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario should urge the government to correct this injustice to Ottawa-area motorists.

ENVIRONMENTAL LEGISLATION

Mr Offer: I have a petition signed by a number of residents around the Britannia landfill site who urge the Minister of the Environment and the Premier to keep their promise that any expansion of any existing site would not take place without a full environmental assessment hearing. I have signed my name.

I have another petition, again signed by a number of residents. I think it connotes the great concern held by a number of people around the Britannia landfill site. Again they wish to express their concern to the Minister of the Environment and the Premier of the province, asking them to keep promises they have made with respect to agreements around the city of Mississauga and the residents of Mississauga, and to make certain all present bylaws are abided by.

The Speaker: Another petition? The member for Mississauga North.

Mr Offer: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I do not believe this is out of order. Again it has been given to me by residents in my riding who happen to live around the Britannia landfill site. I will be reading these petitions to them. They are each signed by at least 20 residents who are expressing their concern over the actions of the Minister of the Environment and the Premier of Ontario with respect to Bill 143 which will result in the expansion of the Britannia landfill site taking place without any opportunity for them to have any impact on the decision or to share their thoughts.

I have a further petition, again from residents around the Britannia landfill site, part of a residents' association, expressing their concern to the Minister of the Environment and the Premier of Ontario with respect to their actions which will result in the expansion of the Britannia landfill site without their being able to have any input into or any part in a consultative process in an area that will affect the place where they live.

I have a further petition. I believe this is crucially important. I think it really does signify the very great concern people around the Britannia landfill site have with respect to its expansion without being able to have any input into the process. They are expressing their concern to the Minister of the Environment and the Premier of the province and urging them to keep their promise.

The Speaker: I am not ruling the member out of order, but realizing that all his petitions are the same, I would like to check for a moment to see if there are any other members who have petitions to present today, since we do have a time limit. Are there any other members in the chamber who have a petition to present?

Mr Offer: Certainly if there are any other members who have petitions I will yield the floor for them to introduce their petitions, because I believe they are probably as important as the petitions I have before me, signed by so many people in the area who feel quite aggrieved by the actions of the Minister of the Environment and the Premier of Ontario who stated earlier that there would be no expansion of any existing site without a full environmental assessment hearing.

Indeed there are actions by the minister to extend the Britannia landfill site without any hearing, without any opportunity for them to share with the minister their thoughts, their concerns and their opinions about what this means to them, to their children and to the place they live.

This petition is signed by a number of residents wishing to express their concerns to the Minister of the Environment and the Premier of the province, asking them to keep the promise and make certain that the agreements made with the city and the residents of Mississauga are abided by.

I have a further petition again signed by a number of residents around the Britannia landfill site. They have instructed me and I wholeheartedly agree that this is one opportunity they can use to show they are a very unified, co-ordinated group of caring people who see that a landfill site which has been slated to close—plans have been made for its closure—which will reach capacity probably in the next few months will now be potentially expanded for many years.

This contravenes an agreement made by the city of Mississauga and the region of Peel and certainly contravenes a promise made by the Minister of the Environment and the Premier of the province when in the last election they stood at the foot of the landfill site and said: "Vote for us. If you do, there will never be a new site or any site expanded without a full environmental assessment hearing." What has happened is that the Britannia landfill site is indeed being expanded without any—

Mr White: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I believe the member is making a speech and not reading a petition.

The Speaker: The member raises a point of order. The member for Mississauga North will know it is customary to simply read the petition verbatim into the record or to make a synopsis if it is a long petition, and to indicate perhaps if the member is affixing his or her signature.

Mr Offer: I hope the member for Durham Centre who has objected to the residents in my riding having an opportunity through petition to have those petitions entered will take part in the debate on Bill 143 and certainly try to explain to his residents why it is—

Mr White: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The issue was not my objection to the residents but the way in which the member has flouted the standing orders.

The Speaker: To the member for Mississauga North, I would draw his attention to standing order 35(b) to indicate that it is helpful if the member would simply summarize the contents of the petition and indicate whether he wishes to affix his signature to that petition.

Mr Offer: It is always my pleasure to be as brief as possible, even when we are dealing with a matter which is so very important to the residents around the Britannia landfill site.

I have a petition, Mr Speaker, in keeping with your order, signed by a number of residents around the Britannia landfill site expressing their concern to the Minister of the Environment and the Premier of the province and requesting them to keep the promises made and to make certain the agreements made to the city and to the residents will be kept.

Interjection.

Mr Offer: A member of the government asked how many signatures, I think somewhat imputing that the people around the Britannia landfill site did not sign these petitions. May I invite the member to come to that area. It would be nice for the member to have the Minister of the Environment along.

The Speaker: Would the member take his seat. I ask the member to abide by the standing orders and simply summarize the petition, indicate, if he wishes to, the number of people who have signed it, which is not obligatory, and indicate whether he wishes to affix his signature.

Mr Offer: Mr Speaker, I will in fact do so, but I hope you understand that when someone starts to say that these petitions are not in fact signed by caring and concerned residents, I feel somewhat moved to respond to some outburst by government members.

I have a petition signed by a number of concerned residents around the Britannia landfill site, again wishing to express their concern to the Minister of the Environment and the Premier of the province, urging them to keep the promises made during the election that there would be no expansion of any existing site without a full environmental assessment hearing. Bill 143 does in fact fly in the face of that promise made. I affix my signature.

In the brief time left for petitions, I have a further petition again signed by residents surrounding the Britannia landfill site, expressing their concern to the Minister of the Environment and the Premier of the province, urging them to keep the promises they made in the last election that there would be no expansion of any existing site without environmental assessment hearings. As I am sure all members now know, that is not being kept as a promise in Bill 143.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Mr Runciman from the standing committee on government agencies presented the committee's 18th report.

The Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 104(g)(11), the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CITY OF NORTH YORK ACT, 1991

Mr Farnan moved, on behalf of Mr Mammoliti, second reading of Bill Pr62, An Act respecting the City of North York.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

ARMENIAN COMMUNITY CENTRE OF CAMBRIDGE ACT, 1991

Mr Farnan moved, on behalf of Mr Mammoliti, second reading of Bill Pr68, An Act respecting the Armenian Community Centre of Cambridge.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

House in committee of the whole.

ELECTRONIC REGISTRATION ACT (MINISTRY OF CONSUMER AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS STATUTES), 1991

LOI DE 1991

SUR L'ENREGISTREMENT ÉLECTRONIQUE DANS LE CADRE DE LOIS RELEVANT DU MINISTÈRE DE LA CONSOMMATION ET DU COMMERCE

Consideration of Bill 126, An Act authorizing the Filing of Information in an Electronic Format under Statutes administered by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations / Projet de loi 126, Loi autorisant le dépôt de renseignements au moyen d'un support électronique dans le cadre de lois dont l'application est confiée au ministre de la Consommation et du Commerce.

Mr Tilson: I have delivered to the clerk one proposed amendment I wish to speak on very briefly. I also have several questions and comments I wish to put forward to the minister.

The Chair: To which section is your amendment?

Mr Tilson: I am moving that the bill be amended by adding a section which would follow section 5.

The Chair: Mr Tilson moves that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"5.1 No database used for the storage of information in an electronic format shall be managed by any person or association other than the ministry."

Mr Cousens: Mr Chairman, I hope we can just deal with the amendment but there will be other sections that pertain to this bill. We can deal with them as we go along, unless you are going to insist we go section by section. I would rather we just deal with the whole bill and then come back and deal with other parts.

1530

The Chair: The practice normally is to go section by section unless the House decides to do it somewhat differently.

Mr Cousens: I will ask for permission.

The Chair: So we will proceed in the normal way. Shall sections 1 to 4, inclusive, carry?

Mr Cousens: No. I just wonder if this bill is going to affect any of the registration act or the Polaris project as you look at the event of a conflict between this act and any other act. What implications does it have for the registration system in Ontario?

Hon Ms Churley: I understand, from consultation with the third party, that there is one amendment that is to be moved, which he has moved, and I am happy to respond to that amendment or at the end of the process. The member for Markham has brought in another issue here and I would like the Chair's ruling on that.

The Chair: The amendment has not been moved yet.

Hon Ms Churley: Okay.

The Chair: We are just preparing the debate, in reality.

Hon Ms Churley: Yes. I am happy to allow the member from the third party to make his comments, and after the amendment is moved I will make some comments at the end of that, but I understood that was the process.

Mr Cousens: Since the Chair has insisted that we go through the bill seriatim by section—

The Chair: I would prefer that, yes.

Mr Cousens: —I had other questions on other sections. Obviously the amendment does not stand. Is that not true? If the amendment is not on the floor, then I have asked another question of the minister pertaining to another part of the bill.

The Chair: Correct. Do you wish to bring in your amendment now?

Mr Tilson: Mr Chair, as I understand it, you were asking if there was anything to deal with sections 1 to 5 and I think the member for Markham and I have several questions on that issue. We only have one amendment, but we might have some questions on sections 1 to 5.

Mr Cousens: Numbers 3, 4 and 5; pass 1 and 2 if you want.

The Chair: I wish you could inform the table which section you want to debate, or if you have any amendment. Is there any amendment to section 1? Shall section 1 carry?

Section 1 agreed to.

Section 2:

The Chair: Are there any amendments to section 2?

Mr Cousens: Just a question: Could the minister tell me just what controls are in place to protect information under the—

Mr Hope: I thought you said 3, 4 and 5, Don.

Mr Cousens: There happen to be other ones. Since I am getting a difficult time from the government, and from the Chair, it makes one want to ask other questions, and that is exactly where it comes from.

I want to know what protection there is for data that are going into these systems to be protected from outsiders getting hold of that information, clause 2(b), where it says you are transmitting "information directly to an electronic database maintained for that purpose." Can the minister give us assurance that this information is not going to be in the hands of non-government people?

Hon Ms Churley: Yes, I can give the member an assurance on that. This may help in terms of some of the other questions he wants to ask, which were dealt with rather extensively in committee. Bill 126 is enabling legislation. I hope the member for Markham can hear my answer, because I think it will clarify some of his other questions. I can absolutely assure him it has no connection with Polaris. It deals only with the filing of information, which already takes place. The only thing we are doing here is creating another option for the filing of that information which we receive anyway now in paper form. It has nothing to do with the management of the information whatsoever. Yes, I can assure the member that there is absolutely nothing to fear.

Mr Tilson: I think the purpose of the question is that on the very face of the name of the bill, and as the minister clarified in the resources development committee, the bill says it is An Act authorizing the Filing of Information in an Electronic Format under Statutes—that is plural—administered by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. The minister indicated that it would deal with all statutes administered by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. That includes the Registry Act; it includes all other acts. In fact, she went on to say that it included as many as 50 pieces of legislation. It certainly does involve the Registry Act if it involves all pieces of legislation that are administered by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

I think the question is quite clear. This party has been quite certain that we support the principle of what the government is trying to put forward to make the system run smoother. What gives us great concern is the loss of our freedoms. That is the purpose of the question from the member for Markham as to how the minister can assure us that this bill does not go to Teranet, as do all the other pieces of legislation administered by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. In short, is the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations going to exist any more or is it all going to be operated by Teranet?

Hon Ms Churley: As I said, this question was dealt with extensively in committee. I assured the members at that committee, and I just did again. For some reason, there is some trouble in the third party understanding what this bill is all about. I have to take some responsibility for that, I guess, because I have been trying to indicate—I will say again—that all this bill does is that it does not change the management of this information; it does not change any of the things they have fears about. This system is a filing of information that already exists within the ministry. The management of that information will remain the same. Nothing changes there, and there is nothing in this bill that would indicate there is any connection to Teranet or anything to do with that at all. It just gives people more freedom. It gives people another choice of how to file that information. That is all we are talking about here.

Mr Tilson: I am going to ask a question I put the minister on notice of in an open letter I wrote to her some time ago. I cannot recall the date; it was several weeks ago. What provisions can she put in this bill, or indeed are there some provisions in this bill I have not noticed, that will protect individual privacy?

We have spent a great deal of time in questions in the House and outside the House and in committee and in correspondence to the minister's office asking for that information, referring specifically to Polaris and how it is being operated by an unknown private company called Teranet. We do not even know who the shareholders are. It is that issue the member for Markham is concerned about, as am I.

How does the minister intend to assure the people of this province that their privacy will be protected with a bill such as this when we have seen what this government has done with the land registry system? We have seen what they have done with that. They have essentially given it away to an unknown private company, which is held by unknown individuals, on an unknown contract that is going to go on for ever and be kept secret for ever.

Hon Ms Churley: The information that is being collected through this other means of collection—paper versus computer, or both; people will have the choice—is already public information. Again I say there is absolutely no difference. That information is publicly there right now. It is protected information. In the same way we protect that information now through various means, as to the information that comes through on another system when people make that choice, there is nothing changed in the system. I say again that the information that already flows through this system is already public information. There is no difference here.

On the member's reference to Teranet, which I think is really unfortunate, continuing to bring it into this particular bill, I know he has a great deal of interest in it and that we are going to meet and talk about it. I am hoping I can provide him with further information about that to satisfy some of his concerns.

I too share the member's concerns about privacy, and I share concerns about protecting people's privacy. I want to clarify for the member that even within Teranet, although it is not connected to this bill in any way, the land registry system within Teranet, as part of the master agreement, will remain for ever within government control. The fee structure and all of that, even within Teranet, will remain within government control. So some of their fears about Teranet, I would say all of their fears about Teranet, are in fact unfounded. I will be happy to provide them with more information about that later, but again I say there nothing is changed in this bill in the management of the system, and the privacy of information will be protected the same after this bill is passed as it is being now within the public domain.

Mr Cousens: Part of the question we would like to understand is, what is public and what is private? Therefore, if something is public and is public information, we would like to know that is going to go through systems such that paper documents or any other documents are easy, are available, are accessible and that the whole system is public. What is public and what is private within her ministry? Is there any way in which we in opposition or the public at large can know what information is going to be protected and preserved and have security rings around it and what information is not?

Hon Ms Churley: Privacy is protected by each act that designates the collection of information, so out of all the acts, the privacy is protected individually by each of those. I should point out to the member again that this bill we are hoping to get through this afternoon, as per our agreement, is actually a very simple one and is enabling legislation. As the member knows, today there is just one of the acts that is ready to go into this and this legislation is enabling, and each of the other acts, when they are ready to come forward, will have to go through a process before they are included in this second option of registration.

Mr Tilson: The minister has indicated that each individual bill will protect individual privacy, depending on which area. How does Bill 126 protect the privacy of individuals in Ontario?

Hon Ms Churley: As I have already said, Bill 126 is enabling legislation that allows dealing with the filing of information, not the management of the information, so the ownership and control and security of the information does not change. Every act under my jurisdiction already sets out what can do what with this information. This would add no new protection. Getting back to the member's amendment, there is no difference right now. If he is asking specifically what kind of information comes in and how it is public information under the existing bill—is that what he is asking me?

Mr Cousens: No. Part of what we are asking—

The Chair: Order, please. The question was asked by Mr Tilson. Would you like to elaborate on the question that was raised by the minister?

Mr Tilson: The question has to do with individuals' protection of their privacy, and yes, it does refer back to the land registry act, the Registry Act of the province, because that is one of the statutes that is administered by her ministry and that is one of the bills this is referred to. That is the connection to Teranet, which has taken over the administration of the land registry system according to the contract the minister will not produce. That is our fear, that our individual privacy is being lost as a result of action, and this is even more. We do not know what they are going to do with this information. There is nothing in the contract.

If the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations were administering and controlling this information, then there would be no problem. We would support the minister 100%. But it is not. It is being handed out to unknown individuals, probably not even from this country.

Hon Ms Churley: The personal property security that is coming on stream right now is public information. There are no changes in the information that will be filed right now. All kinds of information come into the ministry that for obvious reasons are filed and then made known to the public. There is no change in that.

I reiterate once again that the allegations the member is making and the connections he is making with Teranet taking over the land registry system just are not so. They are not true. The government retains control over that. But as I said with regard to each of the other acts that will come on over time, there will be different means of protecting the information, depending on what is already in the act and what kind of information that involves and whom it concerns.

For instance, there is no big secret deal with Teranet. There is a master deal. Certain issues, as the member knows, are protected under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act: the third-party information that I believe the member has filed to get. Otherwise there is no big secret deal and there is nothing at all about this bill that is connected and there is nothing about this bill that changes the way we do anything at all. It is another way of filing the information we already get.

Mr Cousens: These rank as the worst answers I have ever heard from any minister. I do not think she knows what she is talking about.

Hon Ms Churley: You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr Cousens: Then I want to ask the minister a question and she can answer it, because she has not come close to answering the questions we are trying to get to. I think the minister is insulting us. I asked her, what is protected? How is the information protected in the files, in the computer system she is bringing forward in this bill? How is that information protected so that someone who is not authorized to get to it cannot get to it?

Hon Ms Churley: With all due respect, it is the member for Markham who does not understand what he is alking about here. This information he is talking about is public information. People can come and get that information. It is as simple as that. It is not secret information.

Mr Cousens: There is no private information affected by this bill at all. Is that what the minister is saying? Will he put that on the record?

Hon Ms Churley: That is right. I will put that on the record: There is no private information in this act.

Mr Tilson: Who is going to manage the information that is being collected? Teranet? Are the banks going to receive it? The minister told us in committee that the large banks and the large law firms would be the only people who would have equipment that would provide this service. The minister is not going to provide the equipment. The little man will have no equipment. They are going to have to go to the banks or the large law firms, which are going to charge outrageous fees to use this equipment.

The minister is not going to provide it. She is going to make it more expensive for people to use it. In other words, the managing of this information, in the same way Teranet is managing the land registry system, is going to be by private sources. The minister is delegating that away. It is a disservice to the people of this province.

The question does get to the amendment. How is this going to be managed? Can the minister assure us today, and if so refer us to the question, that the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations is not only going to be managing this information but all the other information that is going to be accumulated by the sections or bills that are referred to in Bill 126, all of the bills that are managed by the entire Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations? That is how widespread this bill is. The minister gives the impression it is a Mickey Mouse type of bill. It covers her entire ministry. That is how serious it is.

Again, the question to the minister is, who is going to manage this information once it is accumulated?

Hon Ms Churley: The personal property security registration will manage the system as it manages it now. It is as simple as that. There is no change in the management. I think it somehow has not become clear, but there are 49 branch offices the ordinary person can now use and will be able to continue to use. That also does not change. No, I am not referring to this as a Mickey Mouse bill. I notice the member has one amendment today, which I was hoping we could talk about. The member for Markham made a statement that I gave a dumb answer and did not understand the implications of what I am talking about. That is not so. In fact, this is a very simple issue.

This is not all tied up in complicated computer issues. It is a matter that I would say any layperson could understand. It is simply another method of transferring information, one-way information, to the computer, a filing system. It is not two ways. People cannot get into it except to file information that they are already filing to us anyway. It does not change the ownership of the information we collect.

Mr Cousens: Who will be able to get into these files? Will I or any other person be able to dial into these files?

Hon Ms Churley: There is the question of who will get into the files and file the data. Those will be the people who are authorized to do so, with checks and balances put in, who will be able to file their information one way. As of now, this will not change. Anybody can pay $6. That will not change after the information is filed in this way. People can pay $6 and they are entitled to do a search.

Mr Cousens: Can I? Just to ask the question again, can I then get into the files and personally use a computer modem to dial up and get information from those files?

Hon Ms Churley: That is not what I said. It is one-way information.

Mr Cousens: How public is that information? That is what I am trying to find out.

Mrs Caplan: If you pay your $6, they'll give you the information.

Mr Cousens: Then the other aspect to the question is, can the minister give us examples of the files that are going to be on that from the different statutes? Can she give us a number of them? Can she just list them off so that we know exactly what she is talking about?

Hon Ms Churley: This is the Personal Property Security Act. That is all at this point. That is the only act in this enabling legislation at this time. That is the only one at this point. Because this is enabling legislation, the others will come on stream when they are ready to do so. I want to assure the members this is a good bill. This is keeping up with technology. It is going to help people on the street. It is going to help save money. It just eliminates one step in a process that is already in place.

I have to say that members are being unnecessarily histrionic about a simple bill. It is plain housekeeping and I think members know that. It has no connection to Teranet. I suggest we get on with it, pass this housekeeping bill and deal with the amendment today. They have put forth only one amendment, which I would really love to get into discussing and move on with this bill.

Mr Cousens: The minister refers to one bill being affected by this act. Can the minister, by regulation, add other particular parts of her ministry to be regulated by this act in any way?

Hon Ms Churley: No, not by regulation. Hopefully the member for Markham has read the bill. It will show that it has to go through cabinet.

Mr Cousens: All right then; it is by Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Mr Tilson: There is a difference.

Mr Cousens: All right. Will the minister have to come back to the Legislature and pass another bill in order to put any other acts under this bill?

Hon Ms Churley: It may in some statutes. Basically it will be passed by cabinet regulation. In most cases it will not have to come back here.

Mr Cousens: I asked an earlier question: What are the other bills that could then be impacted by such a regulation?

Hon Ms Churley: The ministry has, I think, anywhere from 52 to 58 bills. The honourable members all know about the Bread Sales Act and the Upholstered and Stuffed Articles Act, do they not?

Mr Tilson: How about the Registry Act?

Hon Ms Churley: There is the Registry Act, yes.

Mrs Caplan: The stuffed shirt act.

Hon Ms Churley: The stuffed shirt act, that is right.

The Chair: Order, please. The member for Markham has the floor.

Mr Cousens: Bingo. We just had bingo. I got a straight line from this bill to other bills which allow this ministry to take the legislation we are giving here to the Registry Act and other acts. This minister—maybe the ministry—has not even considered all the implications. What I am concerned about is the security of data and information, security that protects the rights of all people in this province.

I am concerned that it is such an important matter that it has not been fully considered. All I have now found is that there is a direct line from Bill 126, the bill we are discussing here today, right through to some of the most personal data that people have in Ontario. That will now be available through sources. This minister has not even been able to explain whether they are going to have any kind of security around them, security that will protect the people of Ontario. It is on the record. We now know what has happened from this minister. Let's go ahead with the amendment.

Hon Ms Churley: Just for the record, I want to be very clear: There is no problem with this. Any of my acts could use this capability. Hopefully that will happen down the road, but there is a misunderstanding. Again, let's get back to the thesis of what this is all about. Any of these acts will be—I think it will be a good thing for Ontario—able to file electronically what they already file. It is really as simple as that, including, yes, land registry. It has nothing to do with Teranet, but possibly down the road, we hope, a lot—I think it is going to take years for some of the acts to get on stream, and some will never get on stream, but I think keeping up to date with technology is a very good move.

I have heard the honourable member say many times that he encourages this move, that it is important for this government to move ahead and keep up with technology. It makes us more efficient and that is exactly what we are doing here.

Mrs Caplan: Perhaps I could be helpful to the minister and advise her that it is not a good idea to tease the bears. As she has been making some of her comments, I think she may have inadvertently provoked a little response from the other side. Perhaps if I could ask a question that she could respond to simply, it might be helpful to my colleagues.

It is my understanding that in any piece of legislation which could be affected by the statute before us all of the information is going to be public information that is presently available and is protected under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. The ministry is obligated to comply with the protection of personal privacy. Therefore, this legislation or any other pieces that are affected by this statute before us today would protect personal privacy of information that is collected, as required under that legislation. Anything else is considered public information, which is available from the ministry on the payment of a fee. Is that correct? Yes or no.

Hon Ms Churley: I thank the member for the advice. We all tend to provoke each other from time to time. It gets kind of difficult not to in this House. I have already actually answered that question. Each different act sets out the protection of the information it collects. They all are covered by the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, yes, each and every one of them.

Mr Tilson: It is interesting that the member for Oriole has jumped into the debate, because of course it was her government that set up the whole system we are concerned with, and of course it was the present government that signed it.

The member for Oriole completely misunderstands what our party is trying to put forward. The question is, who is going to manage the system? We know who is going to manage the land registry system. It is going to be Teranet. Who is going to manage all the bills of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, whether it is the Bread Sales Act, the Condominium Act, all of these other acts the minister is referring to. Who specifically is going to manage these acts?

Is the minister going to be out of a job? I say that with tongue in cheek of course, but it is a great concern, because I believe that if it is not Teranet, it is going to be a company like Teranet.

What guarantee can the minister give us that the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations is going to manage all of this information it is going to accumulate under this legislation and that it is not going to delegate it to Teranet, which is going to make millions? I am quite sincere. I would like to know how and I am sure we would all like to know how to get shares in Teranet, because whoever has those shares is going to make millions because of the minister's actions.

Hon Ms Churley: My ministry, by statute, will continue to manage the system. That is the proof the member needs. By statute we have to do that. We will continue to manage the system. In fact, I have to point out that Teranet is part of government. Again, I remind the member that the whole land registry and fee structure in terms of Teranet is completely controlled by government and will be, to use one of the member's favourite terms, for ever.

Section 2 agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

Section 4:

Mr Cousens: The only question I have is, will this be Ministry of Government Services computers or will it be other computers that are leased and owned by other people?

Hon Ms Churley: It will be the Ministry of Government Services mainframe computers that will be used in this system.

Mr Cousens: No other computers will be used except government of Ontario computers?

Hon Ms Churley: No, not at this time.

Mr Cousens: Is the minister prepared to accept a friendly amendment that would say that in this bill, that would in some way allow us to have it in there when talking about these information systems, "and all computers will be exclusively Ontario government computers?"

Hon Ms Churley: I am not prepared to accept that amendment today. It has not been part of our legislation for 15 years. It is something I think we could consider, but I do not see any need for it at this time. I really do not. I would need to discuss it and, at this point, I see no need to include that in this particular bill.

Mr Cousens: We will stop hassling the minister. We will go away and let her deal with the bill if she will have that amendment in there. She would satisfy my concern that the data, when under the control of the Ontario civil service in whom I have a great deal of respect and trust, would be under a security system that would permit us to know there is no outside data centre dealing with the data. It is dealing with the data that pertains to the people of our province. Once the minister has that all in big files, she can bring out the information she wants. What a marvellous opportunity to do things that may not necessarily be in the best interests of the province or the people she is dealing with.

Hon Ms Churley: It will always be in the control of my ministry and this government, as I have already stated. I would like to thank the member for his thought and his concern about this, but I can assure him it will remain within this government's control.

Mr Cousens: I find it surprising that, on the one hand, the minister is willing to say, "There will be no outside computer centre involved in this ever." Then when I ask for a friendly amendment to change this act to ensure we are protected, she is not willing to do so. I find that extremely difficult to handle.

If this minister is not prepared to make the decision without checking with someone else, we could defer the whole discussion to another day, but I can assure members that I have great problems. On the one hand, the minister says, "Yes, it's going to be this way," and when I ask for it to be in the law of the land she is not prepared to do it. Either she does it, or if she is not going to do it, there is a chance someone else is going to have control of our information, or the minister needs more time to come back to the House at another day for us to look at it. I would be willing to go with the latter and not force the minister into making a snap decision.

Hon Ms Churley: As I stated before, by statute my ministry and this government has control. There is absolutely nothing to worry about. I want to reassure the member of that. I understand his concern, but there is no way what he is suggesting or what he fears might happen, could happen.

Section 4 agreed to.

Section 5 agreed to.

The Chair: Mr Tilson moves that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"5.1 No database used for the storage of information in an electronic format shall be managed by any person or association other than the ministry."

Mr Tilson: During the hearings with respect to the resources I put forward a number of amendments and I really was not even given a chance to debate those amendments in the committee. This is the main issue our party is concerned with, and that is the loss of freedoms of individuals in Ontario as a result of actions taken by this ministry, as illustrated by delegating the managerial aspects of the land registry system to which Bill 126 certainly applies to a company called Teranet Inc. The government of course will not tell us the terms of that contract which is to go on for ever and from which it has been indicated it will never be released.

The minister said, "You can make your application under the freedom of information act," and we all know what is going to happen. This is a private company, and very cleverly by the ministry, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act does not apply to those companies. We discovered in the standing committee on resources development that there is not one agreement, but a series of agreements. I suspect, for example, there is an agreement with the surveyors of this province which again—I know you are looking at me, Mr Chairman, as if to say this does not apply to Bill 126, but I say it does, because it applies to all statutes administered by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Clearly, for example, it is my understanding that there is a contract with the surveyors of this province, which will not be produced because it is a private contract, which will result in all the lands of this province being fed into computers—the computers under Bill 126 perhaps—which will result in all surveys now produced by surveyors being made irrelevant because of the new system that is being proposed under Polaris. That will keep the surveying industry busy for the next eight years and will give it millions of dollars, all at the expense of the taxpayer.

It is bills like this, the consolidation of the whole system, that lead to our fears about all the information, whether it be the Personal Property Security Act, which is the emphasis that is being put forward by this minister, because that appears to be the only one to date, but it is going to apply to all bills. I do not know how many bills the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations administers. We were told in committee that it was 50, and now I understand it is 58. Who knows? Certainly Bill 126 applies to all those bills.

Our concern is the protection that will be given to individual privacy. This minister is not going to give us any. She simply says, "Trust me." She will not accept the friendly amendment. It is a very innocent amendment proposed by the member for Markham which has been rejected by the minister. Why can government computers not control this information? Why can it not be managed by government computers? Why will it go out to other sources over which the government will have no control?

If the minister were to produce the contracts—and it has now become contracts; it is not one contract but a series of contracts—we would know more about it. We would like to know, for example, the deal that has been worked out with the surveyors. Maybe there is a deal with the lawyers they have been dealing with. They will not tell us because it is secret; it is private. They cannot tell us. It is going to be kept secret for ever. Teranet is big time, but I can assure members there are going to be a lot of other people who will benefit at the expense of the taxpayers of this province.

They did not even do a feasibility study on Teranet or Polaris. They do not even know whether the system is going to work. They have no idea whether it is going to work. There is no feasibility study I know of that was done with respect to Polaris. I was told in committee there was no feasibility study done with respect to the personal property security system under Bill 126. We do not know whether these are going to work. We do not know who is going to manage them, and that is the intent of this amendment. We do not know who the authorized users are going to be.

The problem is a complete and utter disregard for the protection of individual privacy in Ontario by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. They have given us no assurance, none, other than the minister standing up and saying, "Trust me." That simply will not do for our party.

The bill is going to pass. The Liberals are going to support it. They set the whole deal up. Those people only signed the thing. I question whether they read it.

My concern, and one which this amendment seeks to address, is that this information is gathered by the government for legitimate statutory reasons. There is no question that we believe that. But it is not done as a commodity that is going to be sold for the benefit of the private sector—and that is what they cannot guarantee will not happen—at who knows what cost to the people of this province. The member for Oriole says six bucks. Fat chance. It is going to cost a lot more than six bucks, and they know it.

The whole issue they are talking about, which is under the personal property security system, the only people who are going to be able to operate it are the banks and the large law firms. They are the only ones who can afford the equipment. The government is not even providing the equipment. The little guy in the street is going to have to go to these people and pay their outrageous rates, which the government has no jurisdiction over, to use their equipment. The New Democrats, who are supposed to be the defenders of the little guy, are the defenders of the big banks, the defenders of the big law firms and the defenders of Teranet.

The protection of individual privacy is considered to be a primary duty of the government by the people who willingly offer up this information. People willingly do that. If it were not so, there would be a lot fewer people who would be willing to comply with the government statute in this regard.

The regard in which the people of Ontario hold the institution of government is directly related to how well that government serves them. The minister is not going to serve them. She is going to give it to somebody else, as she has done with the land registry system. If it is to be the role of government to sell off the individual privacy of its citizens, it is not unexpected that this regard, which the minister claims to hold so dearly, will be reduced to zero. The minister should think about it when she puts forward this bill.

I will not be quite as strong in my language as the reverend member for Markham, but I suggest the minister think of the implications that have been raised. We have indicated that we support in principle what she is trying to do. We are concerned that she is giving away the individual privacy and the secrets of the people of this province.

Hon Ms Churley: The member has now moved his amendment, which I will respond to. I already have another answer, because it keeps coming back to the same thing. The member for Oriole has given me some kind of advice and has told me I should try not to provoke. I will try not to do that, but I have to submit to the member that he does not understand the difference between Teranet and this bill. That is what continues to get in his way, and once he has become clear on that, I do not think it will be a problem for him.

I want to point out to the member that I found his amendment interesting. I did look at it, and I think if it were needed I would be very glad to support it. But it is not needed and I will remind him again of the reason. Bill 126 is enabling legislation that deals only with the filing of information, and that is where the member runs into problems. This is not a management situation; it is not the management of this information. There is nothing about the ownership, control, security or use of the information changes involved in this bill. There is nothing to do with Teranet involved in this bill. Every act under my jurisdiction already sets out who can do what with this information, so this amendment would add no new protection. It would basically be redundant. That protection is already there.

In closing, I would like to thank the members for their questions and kind, and at times not-so-kind, responses to my answers. I think it is important that members got involved and gave me some advice on this bill, but I point out again that there is no threat to the privacy of Ontarians in Bill 126. There is absolutely no threat. The kind of fearmongering that went on this afternoon to deal with this bill is histrionic nonsense at best. I am sorry to say that the bill put to members today has nothing to do with Polaris and nothing to do with the privacy of information. Let me say again: It is a simple matter of filing information.

The Chair: Are there any further questions or comments on the amendment?

Is it the pleasure of the committee that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Section 6:

Mr Cousens: What other acts could this bill be applied to?

Hon Ms Churley: I would like to rephrase the question. Potential, I think, is the issue here.

Mr Cousens: I am prepared to make it easy for the minister—

The Chair: Order, please. Would you take your seat, Minister, please.

I ask you again to present your question.

1620

Mr Cousens: To make it easier, if the minister would commit to give me a written list of all acts that are potentially covered by regulation changes made by the Lieutenant Governor, then under section 6, I would be satisfied to know all those under present legislation within the Ontario government that could be invoked through the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Then she would not have to read them into the record and we will save the time of the House.

Hon Ms Churley: I would be happy to give the member the information. I should tell him there are 58 acts. He wanted to know and I am going to tell him what they are. They all potentially could come into the system.

Amusement Devices Act; Assignments and Preferences Act; Athletics Control Act; Bailiffs Act; Boilers and Pressure Vessels Act; Boundaries Act; Bread Sales Act; Business Corporations Act; Business Practices Act; Cemeteries Act; Certification of Titles Act; Change of Name Act; Collection Agencies Act; Condominium Act; Consumer Protection Act.

Consumer Protection Bureau Act; Consumer Reporting Act; Corporation Securities Registration Act; Corporations Act; Corporations Information Act; Debt Collectors Act; Discriminatory Business Practices Act; Elevating Devices Act; Energy Act; Extra-Provincial Corporations Act.

Factors Act; Funeral Directors and Establishments Act; Gasoline Handling Act; Land Registration Reform Act; Land Titles Act; Limited Partnerships Act; Liquor Control Act; Liquor Licence Act; Marriage Act; Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act; Motor Vehicle Dealers Act; Motor Vehicle Repair Act; Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act; Operating Engineers Act.

Paperback and Periodical Distributors Act; Partnerships Act; Partnerships Registration Act; Personal Property Security Act; Petroleum Products Price Freeze Act; Prearranged Funeral Services Act; Prepaid Services Act; Racing Commission Act; Real Estate and Business Brokers Act; Registry Act; Residential Complex Sales Representation Act.

Theatres Act; Travel Industry Act; Unclaimed Articles Act; Upholstered and Stuffed Articles Act; Vital Statistics Act, and the Wine Content Act.

Mr Cousens: Could the minister indicate to me, before it is done, whether there will be a cost-benefit analysis made on any act on which this is going to be done, and also what kind of cost-benefit analysis was done on the bill she is doing right now as it pertains to the existing act?

Hon Ms Churley: We actually did not do a feasibility study on this; we did on Teranet. I meant to correct that earlier. Obviously, we did. There is a saving to the consumer on this. We will not be doing a cost study on this, because there actually is a saving. It cuts out a step.

Mr Cousens: What is the extra cost of computers just to institute this one bill?

Hon Ms Churley: There is no cost whatsoever to us.

Section 6 agreed to.

Sections 7 to 9, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill ordered to be reported.

On motion by Ms Churley, the committee of the whole House reported one bill without amendment.

ELECTRONIC REGISTRATION ACT (MINISTRY OF CONSUMER AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS STATUTES), 1991

LOI DE 1991
SUR L'ENREGISTREMENT ÉLECTRONIQUE
DANS LE CADRE DE LOIS RELEVANT
DU MINISTÈRE DE LA CONSOMMATION
ET DU COMMERCE

Ms Churley moved third reading of Bill 126, An Act authorizing the Filing of Information in an Electronic Format under Statutes administered by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations / Projet de loi 126, Loi autorisant le dépôt de renseignements au moyen d'un support électronique dans le cadre des lois dont l'application est confiée au ministre de la Consommation et du Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

ARBITRATION ACT, 1991
LOI DE 1991 SUR L'ARBITRAGE

Mr Hampton moved third reading of Bill 42, An Act to revise the Arbitrations Act / Projet de loi 42, Loi portant révision de la Loi sur l'arbitrage.

Hon Mr Hampton: This afternoon I invite the House to approve third reading of the Arbitrations Act, 1991. The new act will benefit parties to disputes who are seeking alternative means of resolving them, as well as the arbitrators who look to the act to know just how far they can go in controlling the arbitration process.

The House will recall that this act is essentially the product of the Uniform Law Conference of Canada, although Ontario's drafters prepared the Uniform Arbitration Act for the conference. Alberta has passed the uniform act and I expect a couple of other provinces to pass it within the next year. In passing the act Ontario is, therefore, helping to establish a national standard for arbitration.

I appreciate the co-operation of the opposition parties in passing the statute and in assisting my parliamentary assistant in making some technical improvements to it earlier. I invite them now to join me in taking the final step, the passage of third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to.

COURTS OF JUSTICE AMENDMENT ACT
(PAYMENTS TO SUPERNUMERARY JUDGES), 1991
LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LES TRIBUNAUX JUDICIAIRES
(RÉMUNÉRATION DES JUGES SURNUMÉRAIRES)

Mr Hampton moved third reading of Bill 146, An Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act, 1984 in respect of Payments to Supernumerary Judges / Projet de loi 146, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1984 sur les tribunaux judiciaires en ce qui concerne la rémunération des juges surnuméraires.

Hon Mr Hampton: I am pleased to move third reading of this bill, which eliminates an unnecessary expenditure in the administration of justice. The judges of our Court of Appeal and Ontario Court (General Division) are aware that the $3,000 annual stipend from the province is anachronistic, as the services of judges for which it is paid are no longer performed. Judges do not sit on boards and commissions, as that would be incompatible with judicial independence and impartiality. Persona designata jurisdiction is gone. It was abolished by the House in 1984.

However, this bill accepts the principle that the government should not unilaterally remove the $3,000 annual stipend from all judges while they are serving full-time. Therefore, it cuts the payment off only if the judge chooses to become a supernumerary judge, which means the judge will be working part-time and receiving a full salary from the federal government. In those circumstances, the bill eliminates the stipend from the province. Judges remain free to retire and go on pension or to continue on full-time status until their mandatory retirement at age 75, in which case they retain the $3,000 payment from the province. As my parliamentary assistant said on second reading, we intend to proclaim this bill in force in January of the new year.

Motion agreed to.

JOHN GRAVES SIMCOE MEMORIAL
FOUNDATION REPEAL ACT, 1991
LOI DE 1991 ABROGEANT LA LOI INTITULÉE
JOHN GRAVES SIMCOE
MEMORIAL FOUNDATION ACT

Mrs Haslam moved third reading of Bill 73, An Act to repeal The John Graves Simcoe Memorial Foundation Act, 1965 / Projet de loi 73, Loi portant abrogation de la loi intitulée The John Graves Simcoe Memorial Foundation Act, 1965.

Hon Mrs Haslam: By repealing the act, the John Graves Simcoe Association will be free to amalgamate with the Ontario Historical Society. The result will be one large organization that will be able to conserve more effectively all aspects of Ontario's diverse heritage.

Mrs Marland: I am happy to stand in this House today as the spokesperson for Culture and Communications and support the bill of the current and former ministers. Essentially this bill is a housekeeping bill, but I think we all take pride in the recollections each of us has of the associations this bill brings to mind. I know that yesterday we had a number of speakers who made those recollections back into the history of our province and the involvement of Lord Simcoe, so I will not take the time of the House today to repeat what has already been said. I simply say to the current minister that we are glad she has finally been able to get this bill into the House, and this is third reading; I am quite sure the minister herself can hardly believe it at this point also.

Hon Mrs Haslam: I just want to thank the member for Mississauga South. Members have no idea how happy my ministry will be that after three years we have finally been able to bring this to fruition.

Motion agreed to.

Mr Wessinger: I would appreciate the unanimous consent of the House to consider Bills 43 through 64 as one, that is, orders 3 through 24, for the purposes of debate and also with respect to subsequent voting on third reading.

Agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): Bills 43 to 64 inclusive, will be dealt with together.

REGULATED HEALTH PROFESSIONS ACT, 1991, AND COMPANION LEGISLATION
LOI DE 1991 SUR LES PROFESSIONS
DE LA SANTÉ RÉGLEMENTÉES
ET LES PROJETS DE LOI QUI L'ACCOMPAGNENT

Mr Wessinger moved third reading of Bill 43, the Regulated Health Professions Act, 1991, and its companion legislation, Bills 44-64 / Projet de loi 43, Loi sur les professions de la santé réglementées et les projets de loi 44 à 64, qui l'accompagnent.

Mr Wessinger: It has taken many years, but I believe we have finally found consensus that this legislation is ready for passage. We are turning a corner down a better road in the managing of our health care system. The process the bills have undergone at the standing committee has been very useful. Presentations and debate that occurred there have enlightened and guided me and, I am confident, other members of the House and have effected key amendments to the legislation.

The public hearings that were held in Toronto, London, Ottawa, Thunder Bay and Sault Ste Marie gave the chance to members of the public, members of regulated professions and unregulated practitioners to speak directly to legislators about the bills. Their appeals were passionate. "Change this; do not change that," they said. We took suggestions for amendments. We examined them and we have made changes.

Some of the amendments made address sexual abuse, aboriginal concerns, the diagnosis control act, the harm clause. I believe the legislation we are set to pass today best serves the public interest and that this legislation is faithful to these principles: that the public must be protected from unqualified, incompetent and unfit health care providers to the greatest extent possible; that there must be mechanisms in place to encourage the provision of high quality care; that the public should have the freedom of choosing the health care provider it wants within a range of safe health care options, and that there should be the scope for evolution in the roles played by the individual professions and the flexibility in how individual professionals can be utilized so that the health care system operates with maximum efficiency.

I have just pointed out that one of the things this legislation will set out to do is to protect the public. One of the things the public needs protection from with respect to health care providers is sexual abuse. Next week the task force on sexual abuse of patients will present its final report and recommendations to the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario.

I do not believe, however, that sexual abuse of patients by health professionals is an issue that only the practice of medicine need address. All health professionals must respond to this issue. I hope they will; we intend to. We in government do not intend to wait and see what health professions will initiate with respect to combating sexual abuse. With the amendments to this legislation, we are taking a first step towards achieving this government's commitment to zero tolerance, to eliminating sexual abuse from the health care setting.

The Regulated Health Professions Act now requires that each college have a patient relations program and a patient relations committee to advise the college council on the program in place within one year of proclamation. This program must contain measures for both preventing and dealing with sexual abuse. There must be educational requirements for members of the profession, guidelines for conduct with patients, staff training and public information.

Each college's patient relations program will be monitored by the Health Professions Regulatory Advisory Council. The council will report annually to the minister and its reports will be tabled in the Legislature.

An interministerial working group will soon be established to consult with all interested professional and public interest groups and legal experts on the recommendations of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario task force report on sexual abuse of patients. The working group will identify what further amendments to the legislation may be necessary, but to get things rolling now, I am requesting all of the governing bodies that exist under current legislation to develop immediately a sexual abuse plan.

The minister is requesting that the plans be submitted to her by February 29. These plans would be compatible with the Regulated Health Professions Act so that they can form a fundamental part of future patient relations programs.

I also wish to report that exceptional efforts of our aboriginal organizations and the Ministry of Health and Ontario native affairs secretariat executive staff resulted in amendments that create exemptions from Bill 43 for aboriginal healers and aboriginal midwives. The amendments are consistent with the government's Statement of Political Relationship.

The amendments came in response to concerns raised by several aboriginal organizations regarding the possible negative impact of the legislation on aboriginal healers and midwives. For various reasons, concerns about the potential impact of the bills on aboriginal peoples came to be expressed only very late in the legislative process. The Midwifery Act was a catalyst, but the concerns related more generally to the impact on traditional healing. What the exemptions do is allow our aboriginal healers and aboriginal midwives to continue to offer traditional healing and midwifery services to aboriginal persons and members of aboriginal communities.

I am looking forward to the work that will continue to be done with aboriginal organizations in the development of an aboriginal health policy. It is my hope that this work will contribute to encouraging the revitalization of traditional aboriginal health care.

As the committee process got under way, most of the public controversy surrounding Bill 43 related to the diagnosis/controlled act and the so-called harm clause. The controversy was fuelled by an understandable anxiety about the new regulatory model that restricts who may perform potentially hazardous activities rather than creating broad fields of exclusive practice, as is the case in the current model.

There were also differing opinions about the role of government in regulating who may provide health services, and there were varying levels of comfort with the ability of individuals to make wise choices in health care. We believe the amendments accommodate the differing views.

A harm clause has been added that prohibits unregulated practitioners from treating or advising on health in circumstances in which it is reasonably foreseeable that serious physical harm may result. The harm clause does not apply to counselling about social, emotional, spiritual or educational matters. We believe the harm clause provides an added measure of public protection and that it in no way will impede or restrict responsible practitioners.

The health professions acts were also amended to increase public representation on councils to just under half. This will give the public a louder and clearer voice than it has ever had in how the health care system operates. I am pleased to report that the majority of professions are satisfied with the revised composition for their councils.

Among the new choices being offered consumers with this legislation is a choice on how childbirth is conducted. Those who want to be cared for by midwives during pregnancy, labour and delivery will have that option. The inclusion of midwives in this legislative package represents a change in a policy direction set by the Ontario Legislature a little more than a century ago.

It was in 1865 that midwives lost the exemption from the Medicine Act that had made it possible for them to practise midwifery without a licence to practise medicine. The Midwifery Act included in this legislative package gives legal recognition to midwives.

I am delighted to report historical developments within the psychology profession that will bring practitioners with MA degrees under the regulatory umbrella. This will provide the public with the benefits of regulation that currently exist only for psychologists prepared at the PhD level. MAs will use the title of "psychology associate."

I acknowledge that not every issue was resolved to the full satisfaction of all those concerned, but the legislation contains the mechanism for continued evolution, the Health Professions Regulatory Advisory Council.

Finally, I would like to express my gratitude to all those who have worked on the legislation for many years: the professional associations, the governing bodies, the public interest groups, the individual members of the public, members of the Legislature present and past, and Ministry of Health staff who have given of their time and taken the lead in driving this legislation.

I would also like to thank the members of the standing committee for the hard work they put in. I particularly appreciate the non-partisan approach taken by all members of the committee. They were presented with a huge task in just catching up on so many years of debate.

I would like to thank the Chair of the committee, because I think her assistance steered us through very difficult times. Her guiding hand and knowledge of the legislation played greatly in the committee's difficult task of putting the finishing touches to this very complex legislative package.

Mr Conway: I also want to thank my friend the member for York North for allowing me to participate very briefly this afternoon. It was not my intention—in fact, I am to be at another place—but I just happened to open the afternoon mail and there was what I would describe as a blistering letter from the chairman, professional affairs, section of ophthalmology, a certain B. J. MacInnis, MD, from Carling Avenue in Ottawa.

I find it interesting that I should get this letter, because I remember when I attended the hearings of the standing committee on social development—and I must say I have not had the pleasure of being there over the course of the months and years of debate. I am not ordinarily a member of that committee, but I do agree with the previous speaker. On the basis of my very limited experience with the committee in this endeavour, I thought a lot of very good work was done. It certainly is not easy.

I can well remember that when I was an undergraduate in university, one of my very good friends was the son of the then Minister of Health, Dick Potter. What Dick Potter endured 20 years ago in the last round of health disciplines legislation was almost unbearable, and what the Legislature went through in the period of 1972-73 was—I see one member in the lower gallery who will well remember some of those border clashes, the fury of which had to be seen to be believed.

I must say to all members associated with this endeavour that I think they are to be congratulated for the very smooth fashion in which this multi-year project has been completed.

I was there, quite frankly, because I had been approached by a number of optometrists in my community in rural eastern Ontario about this subject. I see some people under the gallery who—I do not want to put anybody on the spot, but I well remember when I was in the midst of my observations, I overheard someone saying, "Conway's going to hear from the ophthalmologists," and Conway has. Boy, it is quite the letter. It really is quite the letter.

I can tell members I have responded, because I am going to want to see my friends from the ophthalmology section of the Ontario Medical Association. When I get a letter like this, I am going to tell you, Mr Speaker, I am really anxious to engage in the debate. I have not had a lecture like this on parliamentary procedure, to say nothing of health disciplines, in a long time.

My point in this connection today is, as it was a few weeks ago, that in rural Ontario we have very few ophthalmologists. I represent a large rural county. In my constituency I think we have one ophthalmologist, a very fine, good fellow. His wife narrowly missed being elected to Beachburg village council last week. They are very good people.

The fact of the matter is that in places like Killaloe, Barry's Bay, Eganville, Cobden and Beachburg, it is the optometrist who provides the bulk of the eye care, and specialists, whether they are in this area or in so many others, are generally found in Ottawa, Kingston or Peterborough in my part of rural central Ontario.

The point I want to make today is the one I made just a few weeks ago in the committee. It is simply that a good number of people, many of them older people living in my constituency, have come to see me and have expressed a real concern about what they interpret as a restriction on the traditional scope of practice that has been allowed to optometrists is going to mean to people in my area. It is going to mean, they believe, that they may not now be able to drive from Madawaska into Barry's Bay, which is 15 miles, to see the optometrist, but rather they are going to have to drive those 15 miles to be told: "No, we can't deal with this. You're going to have to keep going for another 120 miles to Ottawa."

Mr Owens: That's not true.

Mr Conway: My friend opposite says it is not true. It may not be true. I defer to his not inconsiderable wisdom and judgement in this matter. He sat through all of this. I did not. Surely my job as a responsible and representative member of those people I speak for in my constituency is to convey their concern. I think their concern is legitimate. It may not be borne out—it would not be the first time—but they very much believe this. In the committee I simply wanted, as I do here today, to express that concern.

The optometrists clearly have an interest. I gather their participation with our friends underneath the gallery, with my friend the parliamentary assistant and, I dare say, with the now Chair of the standing committee on social development, the former Minister of Health, has been a lively and spirited one over several years. I will not even tell members what I hear about their relationship with the sainted Alan Schwartz, someone I know perhaps better than most people in this Legislature and someone for whom I have a very high regard.

I know all about vested interest. I know all about the turf wars of health disciplines legislation. I am simply saying that a number of people I represent and certainly a number of very good, reputable optometrists genuinely believe that this legislation does not provide what it suggests in terms of care and scope of practice.

The member for Scarborough Centre shakes his head very negatively. He may be right. But when I hear good people telling me what they have been telling me on this subject, I have an obligation, it seems to me, to report that. I am going to read the letter. I cannot resist.

Mr O'Connor: You can't filibuster without it.

Mr Conway: I am not filibustering at all. I am going to read the letter and conclude my comments, quite frankly. This is from our friends of the ophthalmology section at the Ontario Medical Association:

"Dear Mr Conway:

"It is unconscionable that as a politician you would display uninformed, biased and harmful behaviour such as the rhetoric you spouted before the committee on social development about optometry." The members should smile. I do not think they should be at all unwilling to smile. They might even want to laugh or cheer.

"You did not even have the decency to seek counsel of those that have been involved in this process for nine years.

"Your ability to parachute into the committee as a member is a deplorable abuse of process." How about that? I have misbehaved on more than a few occasions. I want to say to my friend Dr MacInnis that I really appreciate the lecture. He says:

"Enclosed is a case history of a constituent of yours treated by myself for a misdiagnosis and delay by a local optometrist."

Gee whiz. If I canvassed the annals of the royal college, I wonder if I would find any cases involving malpractice by an ophthalmologist. I am sure there are none. I see faces grimace in the government gallery underneath the press gallery.

"This is the harm that we speak of. Just imagine what harm they can do now that you propose they can use lasers."

I do not remember specifically proposing that they use lasers, although in the Byzantine world of health disciplines it is like certain kinds of theological debates. You have to be long-schooled in the intricacies of these matters before you can even enter the room, much less open your mouth.

I say in conclusion that I cannot wait. I hope Paul Rhodes and those people at the Ontario Medical Association—I am insulted. I am embarrassed that they did not seek me out to explain their side of the story. I apologize profusely that without their consent I would have opened my mouth to convey the concerns of those older people who came to see me to say they were worried. I apologize to those poor, overworked, underpaid ophthalmologists that I had such effrontery.

I want to say quite seriously that I am quite anxious. I cannot wait for the meeting that I intend to organize and arrange between the ophthalmology section of the OMA and yours truly to pursue this further.

Just so there is no confusion, I do not for one moment withdraw anything I said and I apologize for even less. If there is anybody around this place who had anything to do with this little bit of enthusiasm—I am sure no one did—I hope they have the guts to come out from the bulrushes.

I repeat, rural residents in Renfrew county use optometrists as their front-line eye care providers. Many of those people and many of those very good optometrists believe this legislation is going to restrict their scope of practice in a way that is not going to be helpful.

I say to the parliamentary assistant that I was there when much of this was going on. There were a variety of amendments and I appreciate the work that was done to try to sort out this ongoing negotiation at the 11th hour. But what I heard I heard, and I repeat it now. I will look very carefully over the coming weeks, months and years to see just what develops.

My good friend the very hardworking member of the committee representing the government, the member for Scarborough Centre, may in fact be right, but no ophthalmologist is going to scare me off from conveying to this Legislature or any of its committees what I have heard from people I know to be good, credible and concerned. I appreciate the opportunity this afternoon to make that point on third reading.

Mr J. Wilson: I am pleased to join today in what should be termed a historic debate. The Regulated Health Professions Act and the process of developing those acts and getting them through committee started with our government some nine or 10 years ago. It has been a very long process.

As a new member and as the recently appointed Health critic for the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party, I was very pleased to have the opportunity to work with the government and members of the opposition in trying to fine-tune these acts that have been worked over for the past nine years in terms of trying to come to a consensus on many of these acts that the people of Ontario can live with, that the professions can live with and that would best serve the public interest and protect the public from harm, from unscrupulous practitioners. We have all read stories in the newspapers and seen stories on TV where some unscrupulous quacks out there were practising various forms of medicine and health care. The intent of this act, of course, is to protect the public good, to protect the public from harm, and I think we have done that.

Although in my remarks this afternoon I do not intend to filibuster, Mr Speaker, you will be relieved to know, I intend to spend just a few minutes raising some concerns that I think are still out there.

The member for Renfrew North just did an excellent job, as he did in committee, I must say, of supporting our contention. He and his colleagues in the Liberal Party who spoke at the committee made it very clear that we did feel that in the area of optometry the government really did not do a good job on that particular piece of legislation. I commend the member for once again bringing those concerns forward and I will talk a little bit about them also this afternoon.

I guess it is a good way to spend the summer is what I should say. It is fun being on the road with some seven NDP members, and myself very often representing the Ontario PC Party, and two or three Liberal members. It is quite an experience to spend some four weeks in committee with them during the summer. I came to appreciate their point of view on a number of issues, mainly because I was outgunned and outnumbered on most occasions, but I enjoyed going through the clause-by-clause and the committee hearings with them.

I guess we heard from and received submissions from some 400 groups and individuals, and it was a very time-consuming but well worth while exercise. I, along with some of my colleagues in my caucus, introduced some 50 amendments during the clause-by-clause process. I think that might give the public some idea of the scope of these 24 acts and the complexity of the acts.

I would like to begin by commending and congratulating the Chair, the former Health minister for the Liberals, who really did a very good job of putting us back on course when we decided to get off course. She is the fastest reader I have ever met in terms of flipping through parts of bills we had consensus on, and she certainly allowed for a great deal of time on those parts of the bills where we had concerns to express and amendments to introduce. I commend the member for that.

We will start with Bill 43. I am not going to comment on all the bills but just briefly on some of them. On the omnibus bill, Bill 43, I think there is still some concern out there about the diagnosis clause. I note that the parliamentary assistant briefly touched upon that. Subsection 26(2) of Bill 43, the Regulated Health Professions Act, makes it a criminal offence for anyone except a medical doctor and a psychologist and a few other regulated professionals to communicate a diagnosis identifying a disease or a disorder to their patients or clients.

We share the concern about a number of unregulated health care professionals—religious pastors, health care counsellors, mental health counsellors—who have in the past provided, and hopefully will be able to continue to provide, much-needed services to people who come into their offices or meet them on the street or very often meet them in very informal settings to seek their advice.

The intent of the legislation, the government kept reminding us and kept assuring us, was to make sure that those legitimate unregulated professionals could continue to do what they have been doing so well. Very often they are volunteers, as I said, or they are religious or pastors, but there is still a concern out in that community that in the way the act is worded, a disgruntled client may still be able to get back at them for some advice they may have passed along to that client or patient.

I would really hate to be the first unregulated practitioner who gets hauled through court. I think it could be a very expensive process and a very difficult process, because although the act does contain a harm clause, and we did support that in the long run, the intent of that is to ensure that, as we say, the quacks who have been out practising are shut down and the public is protected from any physical harm.

Although it contains a harm clause in one section, there is the diagnosis section. We introduced an amendment, I and my colleagues, which we did not get any support for, but the unregulated practitioners wanted to ensure that when we were talking about diagnosis in section 26 of Bill 43 we were talking about a medical diagnosis. We brought forward an amendment that inserted the word “medical” in front of the word “diagnosis,” and the intent was to ensure that anyone reading the piece of legislation, anyone picking up the legislation up for the first time, would know that the intent of the legislation was to limit those people who could convey a medical diagnosis. It was to limit that conveyance to very few groups—as I say, psychologists and of course physicians, MDs, and a few other groups—that would receive the ability to communicate a diagnosis identifying a disease or disorder.

There is that concern still out there. What I am saying now to the unregulated professionals and to other health care professionals who very often came to our committee—I had every reason to believe they had been communicating medical diagnoses to their patients, and many of them will be prevented from doing so when the act comes into law—is that if they run into problems in the future—we did our best with the government in trying to convince the government that there is still some more work that could have been done and perhaps it should have adopted our amendment—there is an advisory council or advisory committee that is set up under this bill.

The minister is not sure she will take these matters very seriously in the future. I take the minister at her word as I do the parliamentary assistant. If people do run into problems in their professions and threats of lawsuits, I hope that when the advisory committee is up and running it will be able to deal very quickly with those complaints from people, with complaints from professionals and unregulated health care practitioners to ensure that people who may be innocent, people who were well intended practitioners, do not get dragged through court and have their good names blemished because of disgruntled clients.

The Minister of Health continues to tell us that the courts will be fair to unregulated practitioners. We saw in the background information provided to members by the government and by bureaucrats that really the government is of the strong opinion that the courts will take into consideration how our whole health care system operates and that they will be fair to unregulated practitioners.

I found it a little strange that a minister of the crown would really come out and say she expects the courts will be fair to unregulated practitioners. She was not dealing with a specific case and it was perhaps kind of outside her jurisdiction to comment on how the courts will treat this in the future, because there are certainly a lot of people who have come forward and they are still worried that they may get dragged through court.

Of course, on this same clause, the ability to communicate a diagnosis, we introduced several amendments to the various bills. We thought that audiologists and speech-language pathologists and chiropodists and occupational therapists and physiotherapists, for instance, should be allowed to communicate a diagnosis to their clients within their scope of practice.

For the public out there, as the parliamentary assistant briefly touched upon, what we are dealing with in these acts is a new model of health care. The good part is that clearly defines, for the most part, what each profession can do and, by lack of reference, what it cannot do. That will be very helpful, I think, to a number of professions.

We felt that speech-language pathologists and audiologists and chiropractors are experts in their particular fields of health care, as it were. It still burns us a bit to think that a speech-language pathologist or an audiologist, who is highly trained in communication disorders, may not be able to communicate his final conclusions directly to his patients but may have to refer that patient to a general practitioner, for instance. The speech-language pathologist, for example, would have to phone or write a note to the GP or another person in the health care field who is able, under law, to communicate a diagnosis.

We feel it is a little unfair that a middleman or middle person would be introduced. The government disagrees with us and will continue to disagree with us. I expect the parliamentary assistant will say something when he gets his two-minute rebuttal. We felt these professions should have the diagnostic controlled act. The government continues to be of the opinion that no, those people really do not do diagnosis; they simply do assessments and they can communicate the results of those assessments. We continue to disagree with that. We hope that if there are problems in the future, the advisory committee will look at those quickly and seriously and ensure that people's good reputations and practices are not ruined.

I want to talk for a minute about an issue that came to our attention at the committee. I guess all members of the legislature were probably approached by nurses, speech-language pathologists and a number of pharmacists, health care professionals who had attained the accreditation of PhD at a recognized post-secondary university. There is still concern out there. Although I read just this morning in a health care bulletin put out by the minister's office that there is some vague promise that this matter will be dealt with through regulations after the act is passed—I will get back to that in a minute—the concern is that people with PhDs are not and will not be allowed to use the term “doctor” in a medical setting.

It seems to me, and it was the opinion of my colleagues, that when undergraduate degrees—really, a dentist, chiropractor or optometrist has an undergraduate degree in the hierarchy of academia. When those professions are allowed to use the term “doctor”, why are people who have attained the highest degree possible in academia, a PhD, not allowed to use the term “doctor” in reference to themselves and their colleagues in a health care setting?

On behalf of my colleagues in caucus, I introduced an amendment that would have allowed health care professionals who had attained a PhD to use the term “doctor” in a health care setting. I still believe it is not within the purview of the government to tell PhDs they are no longer doctors. They receive a doctorate in whatever profession their degree is in. We strongly believe that if other groups that have essentially undergraduate degrees are able to use the term “doctor” and all that means in society—the term “doctor” connotes to a number of people someone who is clearly a professional in his field, someone they can trust; and the intent of this legislation is to ensure that you can trust doctors in whatever practice they are in—PhDs should be allowed to use the term. It really was not the right of the Ministry of Health, the bureaucrats there and the Minister of Health, to take that designation away from academia.

That issue is still out there. There is always hope in the future. When my party comes to government—in about four years, I expect—it is an issue we may be able to correct very quickly, as are a number of the other points. I have a very good memory and I intend to keep the notes I made up late last night. When we get to power, we are going to redress some of the wrongs contained in this bill.

I should say, because I have been negative for about five minutes, that we are going to support the legislation. We are realists in my party, unlike the members across the floor. I introduced some 50 amendments on behalf of my colleagues, some of which were accepted, most of which were not. We thought they were pretty commonsense amendments that were very helpful. We will support the legislation because, overall, we are pleased with it. Overall, we think it is the proper type of regulatory framework that the professions needed and that it does, in the final analysis, give adequate protection to the public.

No piece of legislation is perfect. I agree with the parliamentary assistant, who said that in committee many times. The minister has said that. It is true that no piece of legislation is perfect. This one could have been a little more correct, though, had some of our amendments been accepted. None the less, we will support it. It has been a long time coming, as I said at the beginning of my remarks. We are realists in the sense that we know those guys are going to be in office for another three or four years. To not support it and to try to delay the legislation over that period of time I do not think serves the public interest. So we certainly will support it.

I want to talk for a minute also about the ministerial powers contained in the act. A number of the older, established professions like the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Ontario Dental Association brought to our attention some concerns about the overwhelming powers contained in this act, new powers the minister acquires. Again, I introduced amendments to Bill 43 designed to restrict the ministerial powers contained in the government's proposal. We believe the ministerial powers granted under the legislation have the potential to erode the principle of self-government or self-regulation by the various colleges or professions.

As it now stands, the government has the power “to require a council”—this refers to a council of one of the professional colleges that are supposed to have self-regulatory power over each profession—“to do anything that, in the opinion of the minister, is necessary or advisable to carry out the intent of this act, the health profession acts or the Drug and Pharmacies Regulation Act.” These are pretty sweeping powers. The minister can actually direct councils—there are safeguards in the act, but they are very limited—to do essentially anything.

I always had a problem, and still do, with the concept of self-regulation, which we support, but at the same time this little clause written into the act gives the minister essentially sweeping powers, so that if a particular profession is not doing exactly what the government of the day wants that profession to be doing, within a time frame, the minister can sweep in and do what he or she likes.

It seems to me that you either believe in self-regulation, which I guess socialists have a hard time with, and trust the professions to be self-regulating and to look after their affairs in the public good or you do not. This act says: "We don't really trust you in the long run. We'll give you a chance with some time periods of 60 or 90 days"—whatever it is in the acts; I forget at the moment—"to do things that we think you should be doing. But if you don't do them, in the long run we're going to do them anyway."

It is a very strange concept. It is not precedent-setting; there is tons of legislation around this place and in Ontario that gives the government the final kick at the can. But in terms of the new scopes of practice and the controlled acts that are being set up, the new system will not work unless the government really does have a great deal of confidence in the principle of self-regulation. The day a minister starts fooling around with the activities of these supposedly self-regulating colleges is the day I think the system will start to fall apart, where professions will say, "You really don't trust us to look after our own affairs." Goodness help us if the colleges give up. We will be in real trouble.

We believe the ministerial powers are excessive. We introduced an amendment to strike out this clause totally. Of course that amendment did not fly. We were disappointed the government did not support that particular amendment.

Sexual abuse: The parliamentary assistant, in his remarks, spent a fair bit of time discussing the whole issue of sexual abuse. What the government ended up doing was really in response to pressure from my party. My party, through my colleague the member for Parry Sound, has made it absolutely clear that I and my caucus colleagues are committed to the principle of zero tolerance in terms of sexual abuse of their patients by health care professionals.

My colleague has introduced a private member's bill. Long before we got into the discussions on the regulated health acts, he had introduced a private member's bill to really bring forward and advance the cause of zero tolerance. We are firmly on the record and committed and I expect the member will continue with his private member's bill.

With that pressure, and with the pressure from Marilou McPhedran and the preliminary report from the Task Force on Sexual Abuse of Patients that was set up by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, and with pressure from me and my caucus colleagues and from a number of groups, the government finally decided to do something about sexual abuse, which it had not given any thought to prior to the introduction of the draft legislation.

We ended up with the government voting as a block, as the NDP always does in committee. It is a pretty interesting exercise if the members of the public ever get to watch the NDP in committee, because when they are not quite sure how to vote they call a 10-minute recess. They run down the hall. They find out how they are supposed to vote and then they come back in and all six or seven of them vote as a block. It does not matter what the witness said to them in committee. It is irrelevant. They have already made up their minds. The bureaucrats have helped cook up the idea in the back rooms. The Premier's office has a heavy hand, we know, at all committees.

In the area of sexual abuse, we had introduced an amendment that would have really looked after victims of sexual abuse, because there was a great deal of evidence presented to the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario task force that some health care professionals, and in particular medical doctors, in very rare cases perhaps profited from sexually abusing their patients. There was one case brought to our attention where the patient had complained that she had been sexually abused by her doctor over a 25-year period. Of course every time that doctor saw that patient he billed OHIP. He got money for seeing that patient and sexually abusing that patient, as it turned out.

Our amendment would have said that doctors and all other health care professionals should in no way ever profit from sexually abusing their patients, and if convicted of sexual abuse be required to pay into a fund which we called a survivors compensation fund, any money they would have received during the period they were sexually abusing the patient. This is upon conviction. It is consistent with what my colleague the member for Parry Sound has brought forward in his private member's bill.

What we ended up with, with the government, was a patient relations program and a patient relations committee. The good news is that the government does recognize there is a need there for prevention. But our problem continues to be with the program as now set up under this legislation by the government, which by the way is very vague. It is all going to be done in regulations, but the government members tell us the intent is prevention and maybe they will do something to help victims.

Our party said there was a real problem out there. We are committed to zero tolerance, and in order to have real teeth you must have a compensation fund to deal with and compensate victims of sexual abuse. We know through experience now that this issue has come to the forefront in our society. Victims of sexual abuse do not want to go back to the medical profession to get counselling because they are very often, obviously, suspicious of doctors—they have had a bad experience—or back to another health care professional who may be covered under OHIP.

They have been going to other people, other professions that are not currently in our OHIP scheme of things. They have been paying out of pocket. The compensation fund would have given these people some redress, some money to pay the bills that we know they are incurring because they are seeking counselling from other professions that are not covered under OHIP and hence they are paying out of pocket.

Bill 46 was the Chiropractic Act. I know my colleague the member for Mississauga South will want to say a little bit and perhaps recognize our distinguished guests who are here today from the Ontario Chiropractic Association, so will not get into it except to say that I think the chiropractors are generally pleased with the way their particular piece of legislation turned out.

I know there is still some concern out there about some new powers that were given to massage therapists. We introduced amendments to ensure that chiropractors could continue to do what they have already been doing all the way along. In no way would we hinder their current practice. Their current scope of practice, as defined in the legislation, would ensure that they can continue the great work they do.

We had a lot of patients of chiropractors appear before our committee telling us of the very great things their chiropractors had done for them, and my colleague the member for Burlington South, as members will remember in some of the humorous points in the committee, very often had different appendages that had been looked after by chiropractors and always made a point of telling us what a great job his chiropractors had done. My party has, I think, always supported chiropractors. We think they are an essential part of the health care team in Ontario, and as I say, my colleague the member for Mississauga South will perhaps say a few more words about that.

Second, my colleague the member for Mississauga South will also, I think, touch upon some of the concerns in the dentistry profession. There were four bills dealing with teeth, as it were: Bill 47, the Dental Hygiene Act; Bill 48, the Dental Technology Act; Bill 49, the Dentistry Act, and Bill 50, the Denturism Act. All I will do is remind the public and remind dentists and remind people that we are very concerned about the end product that we now have before us in terms of legislation, and that on behalf of my colleagues and with the backing and consensus of my colleagues, I introduced an amendment in the committee that would have prevented denturists from performing partial dentures.

As the act now stands before us today, the government has given the okay to denturists who, prior to this legislation, could only fit full dentures. If there was a tooth still left in either upper or lower jaw, the patient, prior to this legislation, was always required to see a dentist to have bridgework or partial dentures done. We believe the dentists proved sufficient harm could result if an other than fully qualified practitioner fitted partial dentures.

The denturists, I imagine, are not too happy with us and these remarks, but they do not have the medical knowledge and training that a dentist receives as part of his schooling to do a complete diagnosis of the mouth. What we are still concerned about and afraid of is that, say in my community of Collingwood where I have some denturists, after this new legislation is in place, if people begin to go to their denturist for primary dental care, we do not feel that the denturist is fully qualified to really give primary dental care.

We believe people, as was the practice up until the passing of this legislation, should go to their dentist to have a complete oral examination. We had evidence, for instance, of the necessity of having a complete oral examination. We had a slide shown to us one day by a dentist who specialized in the early detection of AIDS. He showed a slide of a patient who was not aware that he had AIDS until he went to his dentist. The dentist was able to recognize a very small scarring in the oral cavity and recommended that this person see a specialist.

The worry would be that if I go in off the street to my denturist, perhaps I am not receiving the complete oral examination. Things like the early detection of AIDS—we are finding it is very common that dentists are the ones finding this and referring people to specialists and to testing. Denturists may miss that because they are not as fully qualified as dentists.

None the less, the government sided with denturists on this one, as did the review committee that did the study leading up to the formation of the draft legislation, and I guess we begged to continue to disagree with the government on this one. But my colleague the member for Mississauga South, if there is anything more to be said, will elaborate on that, because she has personal experience with the dental profession. In other words, she is married to a dentist and a very good one at that.

In regard to the Medicine Act, Bill 55, the area that still concerns us was brought to my attention again a couple of nights ago in a meeting with some members of the OMA. It was an informal setting, a cocktail party. Some members of the College of Physicians and Surgeons were still very disappointed that the Medicine Act reduced the number of faculty representatives from five to three.

There are five major medical schools in Ontario and, prior to this legislation, each one of those medical schools had one representative on the College of Physicians and Surgeons council. After some jiggering with numbers, the government arbitrarily decided that three representatives were enough to represent the institutes of higher education in this province.

There is a fight going on now between the medical schools as to who will sit on the college council. It is important when we talk about educating the public, and it is so very important now with the new health care models the province is moving towards, that people be fully educated about health care and preventive medicine. I could not see and still do not see the reason for taking two of those educators who help develop the College of Physicians and Surgeons programs for educating the public off the composition of the college.

I think it is detrimental to the profession and I never did really understand the rationale behind it, nor did I get a complete response from the minister or the parliamentary assistant with regard to that issue. It seemed to me the number three was thought up and they would go to three rather than the current five.

We share the disappointment of the medical community that the NDP again in this case voted against the Conservative amendment, which would have maintained the five members representing the medical schools on the college council.

In the Nursing Act, Bill 57, we recommended that the phrase "promotion of health" be included in the nurses' scope of practice in accordance with the profession's intervention strategy. Nurses do more than provide the bedside care they are so well liked for in hospital settings. There are of course a number of public health nurses whose major role is to educate the public.

We were pleased that the amendment inserting "promotion of health" as part of their scope of practice carried. None the less, we have some other concerns with the Nursing Act that we were not able to convince the government to change its mind on.

The first concern was that nurses now under the new legislation will have to take orders from midwives and chiropodists, foot doctors. The government sold this legislation all the way along as a new movement in providing health care services that would no longer make just medical doctors, College of Physicians and Surgeons members, the prima donnas in the health care system.

The idea of this legislation was to recognize that the public wanted and is using alternative forms of medicine and clearly is voting with its feet and using chiropractors—a bad example, because they are now well received—but a number of other health care professionals in terms of seeking the remedies they require.

We felt that with nurses now having to take orders from midwives and chiropodists, adding two more to the list of people that nurses have to take orders from, which included dentists and MDs, the government, contrary to its own public pronouncements, was reinforcing the old hierarchy in health care that we have been trying to get rid of.

I leave that point there but I still do not understand. I asked the minister on October 28 in this Legislature during question period why she would not change this part of the legislation which nurses find to be very demeaning. They now have to take orders from another couple of health care professionals.

The other thing we very much want referred to the advisory council that did not get solved at committee was the whole issue of the fact that registered nursing assistants really should have their own separate college. All other provinces recognize the need for registered nursing assistants and recognize that they should be a self-regulating profession. Currently, and under this act, they continue to be under the control, as they tell us, of the college of registered nurses and would like their own college.

I am pleased that the government made some strong statements that this matter would be referred at the earliest possible convenience to the advisory council. I hope that is done because the Ontario Association of Registered Nursing Assistants surveyed its membership, and twice over the past eight years has conducted a similar survey. Of those who responded, 19% were in favour of establishing their own college and allowing them to get on with what they do so well from under the umbrella of registered nurses and the registered nurses college.

We remain concerned under Bill 59 that dispensing is not defined in the Opticianry Act. We proposed an amendment defining "dispensing" that appropriately identified and controlled the limited risk involved in the dispensing of eyeglasses and eyewear. Our amendment also recognized the role of the optician in this process. We believe that without a definition of dispensing in the act, there is no certainty as to what the government intends to be controlled, and therefore to be limited to the profession of opticians, and what is permitted by their unregulated assistants.

We were extremely disappointed that there is no definition of dispensing in the legislation and again I ask the minister—perhaps the parliamentary assistant could respond to this, but I would ask the minister through the parliamentary assistant—to also refer this matter to the advisory committee when it is up and running, because there is a great deal of confusion. I ran into it again this morning with some phone calls on what dispensing means exactly and who can do what in terms of the practice of opticianry.

Bill 60 is the Optometry Act. Mr Speaker, you brought to my attention, as the Health critic for the party, a number of concerns of optometrists in your own riding of S-D-G & East Grenville. I brought those concerns to the committee in a very forceful way and through the amendment process tried to get some of these things changed so that optometrists would be more comfortable with their scope of practice.

I want to read what the outcome is because I know I am taking up people's time. A fax just this morning to my colleague the member for Waterloo North, who of course represents that area of the province where the school of optometry at the University of Waterloo is located, states:

"The school of optometry, University of Waterloo, is unclear as to the nature of the upcoming process to determine prescribed disease and we would hope that this process is carried out such that"—and here is the crux—"graduates wishing to remain in Ontario will have scope of practice enabling them to provide at least the same level of care as that generally found in other provinces; and, secondly, that by giving responsibility to the College of Optometrists to make this determination, professional self-government will continue to assure a proper level of public protection."

They write on the bottom that "the profession of optometry requires assurance from the minister that the process for defining regulations will ensure that optometry continues to hold equality as a self-governing health profession."

This is pretty strong language, and there is quite a concern there. Of course, we introduced an amendment that would have seen diseases that optometrists could properly diagnose and communicate and those diseases would be prescribed in the regulations.

In committee we had a lengthy debate on whether our amendment meant anything different from the government's amendment, and the government's amendment was missing a couple of words at the end. It said "diseases as prescribed" and ours said "diseases as prescribed in the regulations." Those three words, "in the regulations," caused quite a bit of commotion.

As I was saying earlier when I began my remarks when we talked about the amendment, we brought forward the term "medical diagnosis" to help clarify any confusion. I would say it is important—and the government should listen to this—when we bring in legislation that regulates people are able to read that legislation and not have to consult a lawyer as to what it means. Our amendment imply clarified that the diseases to be prescribed would be prescribed through regulation. There would be a consultation between optometrists, ophthalmologists, the ministry and the public as to what diseases optometrists should be able to identify and treat and when they should refer patients to ophthalmologists. There is confusion out there, and I hope the minister will clarify that confusion in the coming days and weeks since these acts will probably be passed into law tomorrow.

Finally, members will be relieved to know, we have Bill 63, the Psychology Act. I have skipped a whole pile of bills. I think I have only touched on about six and there were 24, so that should be a relief.

On behalf of my caucus, I want to say we are very pleased that the Ontario Board of Examiners in Psychology, the Ontario Psychological Association and the Ontario Association of Consultants, Counsellors, Psychometrists and Psychotherapists were able to come to an agreement on the extension of regulation to additional groups of providers qualified at a level other than a doctoral level of training.

I say hello to the group in the gallery, which I guess we are not allowed to do, but I just did. Sorry about that, Mr Speaker. No disrespect intended.

I really have to give some credit to the former Liberal Minister of Health, the Chair of our committee, the member for Oriole, in terms of advising me personally on how to deal with this issue. I think she provided some personal advice to the government.

By being persistent, by ensuring that psychologists did not get exactly what they wanted upfront from all members of the committee, I think we were able to advance the cause and help to close the rift that had developed between psychologists, those with a PhD, and psychometrists, etc, people who had studied psychometry but had gone to the master level. We had this rift that had developed over the years. Thankfully, as a result of some level heads around the committee and certainly level heads in both the MAs, the master level people, and the PhDs, they have come to an agreement under the new legislation that enables the master level practitioners to be part of the College of Psychologists of Ontario. Hopefully there will be a harmonious relationship there.

I think all three parties recognize that in many areas of the province, master level psychologists, associate psychologists, were practising, doing a very good job and serving definite community needs. We in no way wanted to inhibit their ability to continue that good work. I commend the government and all parties for coming to an agreement on that.

I have taken far more time than I intended. I want to thank the members of the NDP and the Liberal Party whom I had the pleasure of working with over the summer for the agreements we were able to come to. As I said, I have taken the opportunity to put on the record some of my concerns and concerns of my caucus colleagues. It is a historic day. We are pleased to be able to support the legislation in general.

I remind all groups that continue to have concerns that the real battle is not what we debate today; it is in the regulations. This legislation, probably like no other legislation, puts a lot of faith in the bureaucracy. It has a lot of holes in it that are to be filled by regulation. I detest bureaucrats cooking up regulations and those regulations simply going through cabinet. I do not think all cabinet ministers would totally understand this legislation, not because they would not be capable of doing so, but it does take a few months to get a handle on it. None the less, that is the way it is.

The advisory council that is set up under this legislation has a great deal of work ahead of it. As Health critic, on behalf of my colleagues, when the committee is up and running, I personally will be monitoring its activities. I will be checking the Ontario Gazette to see the regulations that are being made under this act. I encourage members of health care professions to be sure to give their MPP or myself a call if they run into problems down the road.

Mr Conway: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: This will just take a moment. I want to correct the record and I want to thank my colleague the member for Mississauga South. In my remarks some moments ago I thought I said the "overworked, underpaid ophthalmologist," but I may have said something other than that, so I want to be absolutely clear that the record should show that I meant to say the "overworked, underpaid ophthalmologist."

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): The honourable member's point of order is quite in order. He is correcting his own record.

Mr Owens: I would just like to congratulate the number of groups that we have here. We have had some historic decisions made. We have representation today from the midwives, from the psychologists, from the chiropractors and from the speech-language pathologists. I think the kind of work we were able to accomplish on this legislation is landmark and, contrary to some of the comments made by the member of the third party, that we not only maintain the status quo but we also enhance the scopes of practice of many specialities.

I would like to comment on a couple of things that the member for Simcoe West said. First of all, his comments with respect to the RNAs: If the member for Simcoe West recalls, if his memory stretches that far back, we did tell him on the last day of committee that the RNAs had in fact been referred to the interim advisory council and that we agreed it is an issue around whether or not the colleges should be separated.

The last issue that I would like to address is the issue of sexual abuse and the member's comments with respect to the third party being the discoverers of sexual abuse in this province. I take offence to that. This is a member of a party that was in power for 42 years, and sexual abuse did not begin within the last number of years. This is a member of a former government that allowed the practitioners to do their own thing without the kinds of interventions we are talking about.

The issues of the patient relations committee being vague, they were left vague for many reasons, and the primary reason is that Marilou McPhedran's report is not out yet. We want to leave time for her to comment and to make appropriate recommendations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): I thank the honourable member. Further questions and/or comments?

Mrs Marland: The member for Simcoe West referred to the fact that I was going to introduce someone during my comments. Since I am quite respectful of the fact that many of the people who are here today viewing this process probably wonder how we ever got even this far in terms of the amount of time it takes for us to achieve the final debate on very significant legislation, which obviously this is, I am sure that all the representatives of all the health care professions hope not to have to come down and take time away from their practice of providing health care in this province next week to hear us deliberate these bills further.

In any case, I want to identify the representatives of the Ontario Chiropractic Association, since the member for Simcoe West said that I might. One of them is Peter Waite, who is the executive director, one is Dr Lloyd Taylor, who is the immediate past president, I think, and who is known to most of the people in this House, and also David Chapman-Smith, who is the counsel to that association.

Rather facetiously, I had to cross the floor to speak to these members who now sit in the government gallery, whereas it seems a very short time ago they sat in the opposition members' gallery. As members will notice, I still did go over and welcome them warmly, which I do most sincerely. I know what a lot of work for all the representatives of all the professions the hearings have involved, and I congratulate also the chairman of this committee.

Mr J. Wilson: Since the only member who really said anything in addition to accolades was the member for Scarborough Centre, I would say to him that, yes, my memory does stretch back that far. I would remind the member that I am the one who at committee pressed this issue of registered nursing assistants having their own college.

The idea had not come forward to the government, but it is so very interesting when you are on committee with these folks how, if you have a good idea, after their 10-minute recess of phoning the minister or the Premier's office and finding out what to do, they are so quick to come back and grab your idea. They get the typewriter out and they get a new amendment in and it suddenly becomes their idea. Well, a number of the good amendments brought forward were not totally their idea. All members of the Legislature worked very hard in advising their critics and advising the members of the standing committee on social development on what was best for the legislation.

Sexual abuse: A good point was raised by the member for Scarborough Centre. It has been going on for years, but I would say in defence of my colleagues in the past, I suppose, that we certainly were not aware of the issue as we are today. Today is the time to do something about it, and as I said in my remarks, we are not pleased. We do not think the government went far enough in addressing this very serious issue. The government has paid lipservice to the issue in terms of the program it is setting up. We will be continuing to press them on this issue, as I know that when the final report of the sexual abuse task force is presented next week there will be a great deal more pressure on the government to actually put some teeth in this legislation so we can deal with this very serious problem in society.

Mrs Caplan: I am particularly pleased to have the opportunity today to rise in the House and debate third reading of a historic package of legislation. I think most members of the House are aware of the opportunity I have had to participate in the framing of the legislation, and I spoke on second reading quite extensively.

I would note that here today in the visitors' galleries are representatives of most of the professions that are covered in this package of legislation. I would like to take an opportunity, as the chairman of the committee that held public hearings and studied the package of legislation in depth, to congratulate them all on their presentations before the committee and their participation in that process.

I also want to compliment all the committee members from all of the caucuses. I think the committee hearings were productive. I think there were some significant changes brought forward. I also want to compliment the members of the committee because the issues contained in this package of legislation are very complex and relate to extensive issues of health policy. I think it is important for the public of Ontario to know that it is my opinion that the members of the committee were very well informed when they made their judgements and their decisions on the important and often complex issues contained in this package of legislation.

As I think everyone has heard over the last few minutes, this package of legislation is about how the professions are going to govern themselves and how they will regulate themselves. The framework is one which I think replaces an outmoded and outdated approach. This new package sustains both self-governing and self-regulation as a model. It encourages greater public accountability by all the professions and I believe that is in the public interest.

I know there are many outstanding concerns and I would like to be on the record as saying I do not think the package of legislation is perfect. I said on second reading that I hoped the committee process would improve what was presented in this House. I think it has. Many of the outstanding issues that have been raised by those people on behalf of organizations, and members of the public, consumer associations and others, I think, presented cases which the advisory committee to be established under this legislation will find appealing and attractive. I predict that we will see amendments to this legislation, and changes by regulation as well, in very short order.

I do not intend to speak at length. For those who are here today to view third reading, hopefully the legislation will be completed tomorrow here in the Legislature. It is a significant package and I know many members of the House wanted to have at least a few minutes to have their say about how they feel about this. I think that is appropriate. This began 10 years ago. It has been a full decade nce the HPLR, the Health Professions Legislation Review, was established. I am hopeful this will finally be proclaimed within the very near future. My prediction is that it could be up and functioning as early as next fall if the government proceeds as expeditiously as it should.

I want to compliment as well the ministry staff, who served the committee well, certainly served me well in my former life, and who have served the new government and the new minister and the parliamentary assistant who carried this legislation ably through the committee very, very well. My compliments to the ministry staff for their hard work and their dedication to serving the public interest as well.

I believe it was a very productive use of my time. I believe, on behalf of my constituents in the riding of Oriole, that they have been well served. This package of legislation will, I think, better protect the public. I was particularly pleased that the government saw fit to reinsert the harm clause. They knew how strongly I felt about that, and I think it was done in a way which will allow for choice, going to unregulated professionals, while at the same time protecting the public from physical harm and holding accountable those who deliver health services to the public. I think the government made a wise decision in accepting the amendment to reinstate the harm clause.

I am not going to get into any of the specific details of the legislation. I think this is just the beginning of a package of living legislation that will be seen as a significant reform in health policy, a significant reform in a legislative package that will serve the public interest well. I am pleased and proud to have had an opportunity to serve my constituents and the people of Oriole in the development of this legislation over the years that I have been here in this Legislature.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): I wish to thank the honourable member for Oriole for her comments. Questions and/or comments on the member's participation?

Mr Beer: In the short few minutes that are left, I would like to rise and pay tribute to our colleague the member for Oriole, the Chair of the committee and the former Minister of Health.

I think everyone can recognize that, as I believe the parliamentary assistant mentioned earlier, there were many hands in this legislation that go back to the previous Conservative government, the Liberal government and now the New Democrats. In terms of the way this legislation came forward, I think the member for Oriole was minister at a particular time when all of the various parts were coming together, and I think we all recognize, in a non-partisan way, that her role in developing that legislation was very, very important.

I think some of the groups that felt very strongly about particular changes were aided and indeed persuaded by the arguments of the former minister in terms of where the public interest lay and how we could both protect the various individual professions and ensure that the public interest was protected.

While the member for Oriole is here and we are here, I think it is only fitting to pay tribute to all the time and work she put in. This is not to say there were not many others who were very closely involved, but I think to have had her as the Chair of the committee was particularly helpful.

It was noted on a couple of occasions that some of the further changes that came about were a result, quite frankly, of our discussions as members of the committee with her and of her discussions with people from the different professions. Out of that, as she says, has come something which, while not perfect, certainly has moved us a great deal farther down the road in having a health professions act that more adequately and more strongly protects the public interest and also provides much greater access to different health professions. So I would just like to state at this time that we do owe a debt to the former minister, the member for Oriole, and thank her very much for all her work.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Thank you. Further questions and/or comments on the member for Oriole's participation? Seeing none, the honourable member for Oriole will have two minutes in reply.

Mrs Caplan: I would like to move adjournment of the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): A motion to adjourn the debate is not necessary. It is my understanding that if we have unanimous agreement, we can continue for a short period of time beyond 6 of the clock to finish. Agreed?

Some hon members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): No? Therefore, it now being 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 10 of the clock.

The House adjourned at 1801.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Subscriptions

Subscription information may be obtained from: Sessional Subscription Service, Publications Ontario, Ministry of Government Services, 5th Floor, 880 Bay Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone (416) 326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1 (800) 668-9938.

Table des matières

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi que celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

PORNOGRAPHY

Mrs Marland moved resolution 32:

That, in the opinion of this House, recognizing that violence against women is a serious problem which all governments have a responsibility to prevent; and recognizing that there is a body of research which shows a causal link between pornography of a violent nature and violence against women; and recognizing that there have been conflicting court decisions on whether publications in various media, depicting various sexual activities, are obscene; and recognizing that the Ontario Film Review Board is guided in its classification decisions by principles outlined in the regulations under the Theatres Act which are based on community standards; and recognizing that the Ontario Film Review Board, following recent court decisions, has decided that community standards are such that explicit sexual acts between consenting adults should no longer be censored so long as the films do not depict sex involving violence, coercion, degradation, bondage, minors, bestiality and necrophilia; and recognizing that section 163(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Canada prohibits people from knowingly selling or exposing to public view "any obscene written matter, picture, model, phonograph record or other thing whatever"; and recognizing that section 163(8) of the Criminal Code defines "obscene" publications as being dominated by "the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely, crime, horror, cruelty and violence"; and recognizing that in recent months, police have charged video store owners under sections 163(2)(a) and 163(8) of the Criminal Code for renting or selling adult sex movies which had been approved with a "Restricted" rating by the Ontario Film Review Board; and recognizing that action must be taken so that the enforcement of the Criminal Code does not conflict with the decisions of the Ontario Film Review Board; the Attorney General should consult with the federal Minister of Justice and all provincial attorneys general to develop a more workable definition of "obscene" which can be applied consistently by law enforcement authorities and film classification agencies, and should encourage the federal government to introduce a bill amending the Criminal Code of Canada to replace the old definition of "obscene" with this revised definition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Pursuant to standing order 94(c)(i), the honourable member for Mississauga South has 10 minutes for her presentation.

Mrs Marland: I stand in this House this morning to discuss what in my opinion, I respectfully suggest to the members of this House, is the most grave and serious matter I have discussed in my six years as a member. My private member's resolution proposes that once again the legislators of our province and our country open discussion on the subject of pornography, including its effect on society and appropriate action to control its distribution and consumption.

Pornography is a subject about which we all have strong feelings. It is a subject so controversial that Canadians and their legislators cannot agree on what is or is not pornographic, but we all know that pornography involves sexuality and the abuse of power—men's power over women and adults' power over children.

In order to provide a framework for our debate today, I will use the definition of pornography from a fact sheet on sexual assault called Pornography: The Links, which was published last November by the Ontario women's directorate. It defines pornography as "sexually explicit material that portrays or endorses degrading or abusive sexual behaviour."

The starting point of my resolution is the extremely serious problem of violence against women, and research which shows that there is a causal link between pornography, as I have defined it, and violence against women.

Consider the cover of Maclean's news magazine last week, which read:

"Women in Fear: Abductions, sexual assaults and murders of women are causing growing alarm among Canadians. A campaign to end the reign of terror has begun."

This campaign must not only help women to protect themselves, but also determine and work towards eliminating the causes of violence against women. Given the disturbing conclusions of research linking pornography to sexual assault, we must reopen this debate.

At this point I have to emphasize that although I am standing in this Legislature this morning as a woman, this is not a woman's issue. It is an issue for every human being in a position of responsibility in this nation, and in so saying, I challenge anyone in this House this morning who has a mother, a sister or a daughter to not support this resolution.

In any discussion of pornography, the controversial subject of censorship arises. Because Canada's provincial governments have responsibility for film and video classification, our government must be a strong voice in the debate on censorship and pornography. I have focused my resolution on a situation which has caused the censorship debate in Ontario to heat up in recent months. The police have been charging video store owners for renting or selling adult sex videos, even though these videos have received the approval of the Ontario Film Review Board with a "Restricted" rating.

How could such a situation arise, and what can we do to resolve it? These are the questions I asked the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, who is responsible for the Ontario Film Review Board, in a letter last spring. In her reply, the minister said:

"In reaching classification decisions, board members are guided by specific principles, outlined in regulations under the Theatres Act, which are based on community standards.

"Being a citizen agency that is restricted to working within the parameters of provincial legislation, the board does not have the authority, nor is it qualified to determine whether the material it classifies violates the Criminal Code's obscenity provisions."

While the board reaches its decisions based on community standards, the police enforce the Criminal Code of Canada, which states that it is a criminal offence to sell or expose to public view "any obscene written matter, picture, model, phonograph record or other thing whatever." The Criminal Code defines obscene material as being dominated by "the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely, crime, horror, cruelty and violence."

The problem is, what is undue exploitation of sex? There have been conflicting court decisions in this regard. Generally, though, the courts have held that Canadian community standards will determine what is undue exploitation. This is still problematic, since there is little agreement on what constitutes Canadian community standards. In short, the Criminal Code's definition of "obscene" is unworkable.

The present situation wherein the Ontario Film Review Board's ratings conflict with the police's interpretation of obscenity in the Criminal Code cannot be allowed to continue. We need a revised definition of "obscenity" that can be applied consistently by law enforcement authorities and film classification agencies.

In the same letter I quoted from moments ago, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations agreed, saying:

"As you indicate in your correspondence, a clearer definition of 'obscenity,' that could be applied consistently by law enforcement authorities, and film classification agencies, such as the Ontario Film Review Board, would be very useful in eliminating conflicting interpretations of what is obscene or pornographic."

The government of Ontario does not have the authority to amend the Criminal Code, of course, but we can be a catalyst for change. If the Attorney General of Ontario requests that the federal Minister of Justice and her provincial counterparts develop a new and workable definition of "obscenity," this will send a strong signal to the federal government and to Canadians that changes to our pornography laws are urgently required.

In developing a new definition, it will be essential to have broadly based consultations with the residents in each jurisdiction. While the government of Ontario cannot dictate what consultations other governments should undertake, I believe we can safely assume that the attorneys general and the Minister of Justice would not develop a new definition of "obscenity" in a vacuum.

At this point I will turn to some of the factors we must consider in our efforts to develop a workable definition of "obscenity."

First, we must ensure that the new definition protects the rights of Canadians as enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We must also consider a broad spectrum of views on what is obscene. At one end of the spectrum are people who are offended by any explicit portrayal of sexual activity, even nudity. At the other end are people who believe adults should have the right to view, read or listen to any material of their choice. In between are people who believe that erotica, the portrayal of sexual expression between two consenting people, should not be censored for adult audiences but that we must have controls on materials that depict degrading or abusive sexual behaviour. Even among this middle ground there is considerable disagreement over what activities are within the range of normal sexual behaviour.

If we are to recognize the dignity and worth of women, as well as women's rights to security and freedom from cruelty, we have to impose certain limitations on freedom of expression. These limitations already exist for hate literature; they must also exist for pornographic materials which induce hatred of women.

As I will discuss in a few moments, there is substantial evidence that pornography is a causal factor in many cases of sexual assault. Members of this House who do not believe in the censorship of pornographic films and videos should view the film about pornography called Not a Love Story, produced by the National Film Board of Canada in 1981, which included a wide range of actual pornographic footage. As well, they should contact the Ontario Film Review Board and ask to view its out-take films which consist of the materials that have been censored from movies and videos.

When I was a councillor for the city of Mississauga, I viewed the out-takes and was so angered, sickened and frightened that I insisted my fellow councillors also see these films. Several of my colleagues, all male, joined me for another screening of the out-takes. To give members an idea of how violent and degrading these films were, one councillor left after five minutes saying he could not stand any more, and the remainder of the men did not complete the total viewing.

This is an opportunity to send a strong signal to Ottawa and the other provinces that it is time to revisit the difficult issue of pornography. The security and dignity of Canadian women depend on it.

Mr Fletcher: I want to congratulate the member for Mississauga South for introducing this resolution. I think it is going to go a certain distance as far as the causal link between pornography and violence against women is concerned.

Throughout society right now, what we are seeing are some of the effects of what has been happening at universities in this province. I know at the University of Guelph emergency poles have been put up which flash and ring bells if there is an emergency. I know these are not just meant for women who are being attacked, but that was the primary reason for having the poles there.

We have women marching in cities throughout the country calling to take back the night. Again it is just more evidence of the violence that is coming out. Surely if people in this country can band together to try to stop smoking, they can band together to try to stop the violence that is being directed towards women.

As far as the Ontario Film Review Board is concerned, it is an agency made up of citizens who represent a cross-section of the Ontario population. Its role, as outlined in the Theatres Act of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, is simply to classify films for commercial distribution. All films and videos except educational, library or film festival material must be submitted to the board prior to public distribution. Over the years, the film board's role has changed, along with society's changing attitudes. Life is far more complex now than it was in 1911 when the board was known as the Board of Censors. Back then, a greater emphasis was placed on censorship, whereas today it is classification.

There is still some material, however, that the board will not classify. For instance, it is very sensitive to and will not classify films containing violence, degradation towards women, minors involved in sexual activity, brutal violence with sexual connotations and animal abuse. If a film does not meet the board's classification criteria, the board will not allow the film for distribution. But only the courts can decide whether materials are obscene. I agree with the member for Mississauga South that the Attorney General should consult with the federal people and other provinces to try to get a certain definition of what can be obscene.

The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations did meet recently with members of the board and did encourage their efforts to seek dialogue with community members to try and determine the kind of behaviour that is acceptable in their home towns and in their own neighbourhoods.

We also want to assure the people of Ontario that the classification set out by the board is a classification that the people on the board are trying to establish through community standards, and the standards are changing all the time. These standards are reflected and upheld in the movie and video industry.

Not only is the violence being directed towards women just from films that we can rent in a store or see in a theatre; it is also on television today. It may not be as graphic, but you do not have to be a rocket scientist to understand that the violence being directed towards a woman in a TV show is just as dangerous as anything else we can view.

We have to start somewhere. I agree with the member for Mississauga South that this is a good starting point, trying to find out what obscene is and trying to stop some of the material. I am one of those people who will say no to censorship, but in some instances censorship has to be used in order to stop the exploitation of people in our society. I believe the member for Mississauga South has really hit it on the nail with her resolution. I will be supporting it wholeheartedly.

Mrs Caplan: On behalf of my constituents in the riding of Oriole, I am pleased to participate and speak today to this resolution by the member for Mississauga South regarding a matter which is really outside the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. As the member for Mississauga South clearly stated, the Criminal Code, under which the definitions of "obscene" fall, is within the federal jurisdiction, and it is in the federal Parliament that these issues will ultimately have to be decided.

However, the resolution of the member for Mississauga South does give us in this House an opportunity to speak about an issue affecting our quality of life and our feeling of having safe and secure communities within Ontario, and that is the increased violence we are seeing.

I believe we are quite fortunate in this province. I think we are fortunate because, compared with any other community in the world, Ontario is one of the safest. Certainly against any city of comparable size, Metropolitan Toronto would be considered one of the safest. Having said that, I am also aware that the increase in crime, particularly violent crime, and the increase in violence in our society, particularly domestic violence which is occurring in the home, are things we must be very aware of if we want to learn from what other major cities of the world have experienced and ensure we take preventive actions now to maintain a safer, more secure community for the people of Ontario.

Safety in our streets and security in our homes are, I think, non-partisan goals, something we all share as parliamentarians and members of this Legislature, regardless of political stripe. They are things we all want. I think we are all distressed at the increasing rates of crime across this city, this province and this country.

Particularly during times of economic downturn and recession, we know it is extremely important that we are aware of anything we can do to assist those people who are troubled, who are suffering because of job loss and who perhaps lash out in their despair at those they love most, their spouses and their children. Our programs and policies in Ontario must reflect our commitment to a safe and secure community and environment.

I thank the member for Mississauga South for giving me as a provincial legislator the opportunity to discuss my concern about increasing violence and abuse and my concern about safety on behalf of my constituents and my community, particularly in Metropolitan Toronto, the city of North York and the riding of Oriole.

The member for Mississauga South referred specifically to the Attorney General working with or requesting federal legislators and the federal government to come up with a new definition of "obscene." Some of the most obscene things I have witnessed in my time as a member of government and in my time in public life before I was a member of this Legislature had nothing to do with erotica, had nothing to do with the beauty of sexual nature. Many of them had to do with exploitation of women, violence against women and children and the kinds of unacceptable behaviour that we would find obscene by any community standard.

As a former chairman of the Ontario Liberal Women's Perspective Advisory Committee, I know we spent a great deal of time discussing the pulls and tugs we had, because nobody likes censorship. We value our freedoms in society. We want the greatest freedom possible for ourselves, our families, our friends and all the people of Ontario. As legislators, we know lawmaking is always defining the rights of society and the rights of the individual, and as a Liberal my principles and my concerns are that we consider the rights of the individual as well as the collective rights of society and we balance those interests in a way which reflects the public interest.

When I discuss with my constituents the issue of pornography and definitions of obscenity, there is much confusion. Many of them do not realize this is a matter which is wholly within the purview of the federal Parliament. There is very little the province can do regarding a new definition of obscenity. I think we all agree a new one is needed and would help to clarify the role of the Ontario Film Review Board.

I have been able to share with interested constituents the history of the film review board in Ontario, the important role it has played and how its role has changed. During this debate it might be helpful to the people who are watching this discussion to be aware that things have evolved and changed since 1911 when the original board of censors under the Theatres and Cinematographs Act consisted of three persons. They had the right, on behalf of all the citizens of Ontario, to censor films. All films had to be stamped by the board when approved. That has changed dramatically over the years.

In 1914 it was stated that children under 15 had to be accompanied by an adult; in other words, an adult member of the household. That was very clear, and there was a requirement under the act that children had to be accompanied before they could attend films.

In 1918 the board was given a completely free hand to permit or refuse any film. An appeal committee of three persons—the minister, his secretary and one other—was established to make those decisions on behalf of all the people of Ontario.

In 1919 women's groups advocated more freedom and more rights for their gender. The press criticized the censor board's reluctance to have women appointed on a permanent basis and the minister was deluged with applications. Finally, at the end of 1919, a woman was appointed to the Ontario Board of Censors.

In 1920 the board was changed and reconstituted and the new board contained two women. The former chairman in fact was Mr George Armstrong, and he was reappointed to oversee advertising. By 1921 the board had adopted a set of standards and copies were sent to distributors, who were asked to examine and censor their own films before submission. Despite the precautions, the board usually made further eliminations, and in 1921, 67 films were rejected and 825 had eliminations. Over the years 1926 and 1927 there were again many changes.

In 1930 the Theatres Act was amended to include film exchanges. Operators were graded, fixed fees established for censorship and so on. Rules said, for example, that alterations were recommended by inspectors and leases could be revoked for non-compliance. Matinees on Saturdays and holidays between 10 am and 6 pm were introduced and, for the first time in Ontario, children under 16 were permitted to attend movie theatres unaccompanied.

In 1931 there was enabling legislation that brought about a quota system for British films because of the influence of American gangster films. For the very first time, in the early 1930s we saw concern about violence in our society.

I could go on far beyond my 15 minutes. I just want to say that from the 1930s through the 1940s, 1950s, 1960s, 1970s and well into the 1980s the classification system evolved and developed. I am very aware of how the Ontario Film Review Board works, the important role it plays in our society and its commitment to development of ongoing community standards as attitudes in our society change.

I know they are very sensitive, because they come from all parts of this province. They are now selected to reflect the communities they live in, and I think that is a very important step. I believe that in this society, where we see the levels of child abuse, family violence and domestic abuse, where we see cartoons on TV that are extremely violent, where we see the kind of violence on TV—sometimes even in advertising but certainly in TV programming—what has happened within our society is a desensitization of what we find unacceptable and our tolerance unfortunately has led us into an era where violent behaviour and acting out is all too common and is seen as acceptable.

I believe the debate that has been initiated in this House today goes far beyond a discussion of simply a definition of "obscene" that discusses pornography. I am very concerned that we see an attitude towards violence, all kinds of violence. A few years ago we had the terrible example of snuff films. They were not sexual in any way. They had nothing to do with sex. Most violence, most pornography and most of that which is truly obscene in our society has very little to do with sex and certainly nothing to do with erotica.

The challenge of Project P, the police enforcement unit within Metropolitan Toronto, and of legislators is to look for ways to improve our quality of life and to ensure the safety and the security of women and children, especially in their homes and communities, so that women and children can walk safely on the streets. We have a goal to work together. If we can discuss in open forum how we can achieve that goal so that men and women and children will feel safe in their communities and in their own homes and so that disputes can be resolved in alternative ways rather than through violent behaviour, then I believe we are making progress not only towards a more sensitive and humane society but towards building the kind of life in Canada that we want for our children and our grandchildren.

I know that here in Ontario there are many programs which are supportive and that encourage this kind of self-help for people who have experienced violent behaviour. I know there are very few opportunities for members of the Legislature to speak on a topic which is primarily under federal jurisdiction, that is, looking for a new definition of "obscene."

In 1984 the Ontario Liberal Women's Perspective and Advisory Committee recommended a new definition and sent that definition to the federal minister of the day. I want to express my own personal disappointment that there has not been any action taken on what I think was a very reasonable and reasoned proposal.

I encourage support for the member for Mississauga South's resolution which suggests that discussion take place in the appropriate forum of the provincial Legislature. I commend to the Attorney General and to the government of the day the work done by the Ontario Liberal Women's Advisory Committee, and I will support this resolution.

Mrs Marland: Just to resume where I left off, we must consider the growing body of research on the relationship between pornography and violence against women. The fact sheet on sexual assault entitled Pornography: The Links, which I referred to earlier, notes some of the research which has been studied by the Ontario research directorate. This fact sheet cites a study of sex offenders which found that 56% of the rapists and 42% of the child molesters in the sample said pornography did play a part in their offences.

Another study of video pornography, adult videos and highly restricted triple X videos, found that 13% of all scenes involved sexual violence, including rape; 35% involved sexual harassment; 17.5% involved sado-masochism and 6% involved sexual mutilations. This Canadian study raises an obvious question: If film classification agencies like the Ontario Film Review Board say they censor out sexual violence, why and how are these videos slipping through the cracks?

The fact sheet also cites a national survey of Canadians' use of pornography, which indicates that young people aged 12 to 17 years are the primary consumers of pornography. If we are not concerned about anything else, we must be concerned about that statement, that the primary users of pornography are between the ages of 12 and 17, and 35% of these young people expressed an interest in watching sexually violent scenes—rape, torture, bondage, etc. These are very frightening statistics. What effect is the consumption of pornography having on youths who are reaching sexual maturity and forming values about relationships between men and women?

The fact sheet also raises many issues to consider. For instance, males commit most sexual assaults, and studies have shown that males are also the biggest consumers of pornography. The fact sheet also notes: "Violent and dehumanizing pornography has been shown to increase acceptance of rape myths, increase acceptance of violence against women, decrease sensitivity to the suffering of rape victims, increase sexual callousness, increase male willingness to rape." Studies indicate that pornography undermines internal inhibitions against rape. It presents women as objects and perpetuates the myth that women enjoy rape and find it sexually exciting.

In an experiment on desensitization, researchers showed men 10 hours of R-rated movies with sexual violence over a five-day period. On the last day, the men watched a documentary re-enacting a real rape trial. The men blamed the rape victim more for the rape, rated her as significantly more worthless and saw her injury as significantly less severe than did a control group of other men who had not viewed the R-rated movies. We cannot and must not ignore this evidence which is piling up in support of a causal link.

I would now like to quote from an eloquent letter to the editor of the Globe and Mail by the former minister responsible for women's issues, the member for Scarborough West, Anne Swarbrick. This letter appeared in the Globe and Mail on July 25 of this year, and I will say with great pleasure that Anne Swarbrick is a member of this Legislature whom I personally admire and respect very much. She is an extremely bright, capable young woman. Responding to some criticism of the fact sheet produced by the Ontario women's directorate, the former minister wrote the following five paragraphs:

"The relationships between sexual assault and pornography are not simple. Studies' conclusions range from strong connections between pornography and sexual violence to none.

"Our publication Pornography: the Links does not state that pornography causes violence. Rather, it shows through annotated statements from a number of studies that pornography creates and supports a climate in which sexual violence against women is rationalized, minimized and even made acceptable.

"That climate, in turn, supports the myth surrounding sexual violence that women are first and foremost sexual objects, that women secretly enjoy forced sex, that women, unbeknown to ourselves, desire to be sexually assaulted, and that women need to experience pain to experience pleasure.

"Pornography designed to degrade women or show abusive sexual behaviour reinforces these myths. That is the danger of pornography, and that is how it is linked to sexual violence against women.

"Sexual assault is an act of violence, power and control. Sexual violence against women is rooted in, reflects and reinforces the inequality between men and women in our society."

Before concluding my remarks, I should stress that my resolution will fill just one of several gaping holes in our pornography laws, which require a major overhaul. However, within Ontario's jurisdiction, responsibility for the control of pornography is limited to the work of the Ontario Film Review Board; hence by necessity the rather narrow scope of my resolution.

I ask all the members of this House to show solidarity on this essential issue of the need to protect society from materials which portray degrading or abusive sexual behaviour. In order to eliminate the confusion over what is and is not obscene, a new Criminal Code definition must be developed which can be consistently interpreted by all parties: by police who enforce the Criminal Code, by judges and jurors who decide court cases, by the Ontario Film Review Board which classifies our films and videos, by theatres which show films, by stores which sell and rent videos, and by citizens who view these films and videos.

Redefining obscenity is a difficult task but one that is vital in our efforts to build a strong society which, in the words of the Ontario Human Rights Code, recognizes "the dignity and worth of every person" and provides for "equal rights and opportunities without discrimination that is contrary to law."

There will have to be compromises to develop a new definition, and as with any other controversial issue, it will be impossible to satisfy everybody. None the less, I believe our Attorney General, together with his federal and provincial counterparts, should be able to devise a workable definition after whatever study, discussion and consultation each jurisdiction believes to be appropriate. We cannot amend the Criminal Code ourselves but we can play a key role in ensuring that it is amended.

I ask for members' support by passing my resolution today and I ask the Attorney General to convey this resolution from the government of Ontario to his counterparts in Ottawa and across Canada. This is an opportunity to send a strong signal to Ottawa and to the other provinces that Ontario believes it is time to revisit the difficult issue of pornography.

Finally, I just want to add a quote from another cabinet minister of the current Ontario government, the Minister of Colleges and Universities, who this week issued a press release headed "Minister Denounces Violence Against Women," dated November 18, 1991:

"I am touched personally and professionally by the fact that women in our society face violence at the hands of men, and that, even more important, many women live in continuous expectation of violence at the hands of men," said Richard Allen, Minister of Colleges and Universities, speaking at the Ontario Campus Men's Conference this weekend."

I think the words speak for themselves. This is a resolution against which no one could vote.

Mr Mills: It is a pleasure as usual and always to rise and speak to an issue in private members' time on Thursday morning, and this is no exception. The member for Mississauga South has brought forward her resolution and I think it would be fair to say there is not a member sitting in the Legislature who does not have a great deal of empathy with what is being brought forward.

In the resolution, the proposal for consultation stems in part from what the resolution calls conflicting court decisions on what is obscene and from the fact that the Ontario Film Review Board has approved some films for release in Ontario that have subsequently been the subject of criminal charges by police forces in Ontario.

The Attorney General is always prepared to engage in meaningful dialogue with the federal government and his provincial counterparts to ensure the continued just and appropriate administration of the criminal law. However, it would be inappropriate to engage in the proposed discussions at this time. The reason, very simply put, is that the matter is before the courts.

The current definition of obscenity was introduced by the Parliament of Canada in 1959 and since that time it has repeatedly been given very careful consideration by provincial appellate courts across the country, and on numerous occasions the obscenity provision has been considered by the Supreme Court of Canada. As a result the courts, working co-operatively with Parliament, have developed an elaborate yet sensitive and ultimately practical definition of "obscenity."

The courts have been careful to ensure that this definition takes account of developing community standards in a restrained and judicial way. It is therefore inevitable that occasionally, as social views develop and change over time, the courts will be called upon to reassess what types of material fall under the definition of "obscenity." That is the situation at the present time.

Every day of the week hundreds of provincial, divisional and General Division judges in the Ontario Court of Justice hear criminal matters across the province. Therefore, it is perfectly understandable that on a very few occasions some of these judges might have very limited differences of opinion when interpreting criminal law such as the obscenity law. When this occurs, lawyers from the Ministry of the Attorney General are apprised of the situation and where appropriate take all steps within their power to bring these cases before the Court of Appeal for Ontario seeking clarification. Indeed, an important part of the function of any Court of Appeal is to resolve these differences of opinion among judges in the trial courts. That is simply a fact of life.

On the issue of obscenity, the limited differences in interpretation at present are entirely limited to the trial courts. Ministry lawyers involved in those cases are doing everything they can to facilitate their hearing by the Court of Appeal. This is the usual route by which differences in interpretation by the courts are resolved. This route of appeals, first to the Court of Appeal for Ontario and ultimately to the Supreme Court of Canada, has served the administration of justice extremely well for decades and there is no reason to assume it will not do so again.

Legislatures depend on the courts to interpret very broad words that must inevitably be used in statutes and to ensure that the interpretation given to a statute such as the obscenity law reflects contemporary community standards. In this respect, the administration of justice has been very well served by the courts. Therefore, it is advisable that we await higher court rulings on this issue so we may benefit from the higher court's wisdom on the proper interpretation of the obscenity law.

There is another reason why it is premature to discuss a new definition of "obscenity" at this time. Apart from the proper interpretation of the obscenity law, its constitutional validity is currently before the courts. As everyone is well aware, Parliament, in enacting criminal law such as an obscenity law, is bound by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which is the supreme law of the land. Therefore, any obscenity law which Parliament might make must respect the constitutional guarantee of free expression.

At present, the current obscenity law has been challenged as a violation of that freedom of expression. This case was heard by the Supreme Court of Canada in June 1991 and a decision has not yet been made. Until that decision has been made, there can be no useful discussion of the obscenity law among legislatures because we have yet to receive the benefit of the court's ruling about how obscenity might be regulated without infringing on that freedom of expression.

Consequently, because of the cases pending before the Court of Appeal for Ontario and the Supreme Court of Canada, there is no point in discussing the current obscenity law. The courts have, in three decades since the obscenity law came into force, effectively provided authoritative guidance in this area of the criminal law. There is absolutely no reason to think the courts cannot assist the administration of criminal justice in this way again.

Mr J. Wilson: I am very pleased today to support the resolution put forward by my colleague the member for Mississauga South and I find it abhorrent that the previous speaker, the NDP member for Durham East, would not be supporting this resolution, particularly in light of the comments and quotes my colleague the member for Mississauga South attributed to members of the NDP government, the NDP cabinet.

It is abhorrent that any member of this Legislature would contemplate not voting to support this resolution. Perhaps the member for Durham East has missed the point of the resolution, that we are trying to send—I commend my colleague the member for Mississauga South for bringing forward the resolution—a very strong message to provincial attorneys general and to the federal government that the definition of “obscenity” and what actually constitutes pornography must be clarified in the Criminal Code because the Ontario Film Review Board, as the member for Durham East pointed out, relies upon community standards.

We worry very much in my caucus and in the Ontario Conservative Party that community standards are slipping. I studied this for a short time in university when I took a theology course. I give credit to Professor Janine Langan at the University of St Michael's College for pointing out the studies that indicate pornography is an addiction. It is an unhealthy, unnatural addiction and unfortunately, with the Ontario Film Review Board certifying and passing pornographic videos that help to feed that addiction, I worry that community standards are slipping, that we are on the slippery slope.

I ask members of the NDP government to review their thoughts on this if certain members are contemplating not voting for this resolution, because when we allow so-called X-rated and triple X-rated videos to be sold, as they are just a few blocks away on Yonge Street—there are some six stores in a four-block strip from north and south of Wellesley and Yonge that sell and rent triple X videos. People have to realize that when you allow those to be sold and viewed and when you consider that pornography is an addiction that we, by not doing anything, are helping to feed to our young people, they grow up with very unhealthy and unnatural beliefs in what the morality of our society is and should be.

If members have ever seen a snuff film—a film where extremely degrading and obscene sexual acts are committed against women, where at the end of the film the victim is butchered and dies, and where very often large segments of the film are explicit in showing what is done with the bodily parts—they would know the slippery slope this society is on.

It is our responsibility as legislators, on behalf of our constituents, to try to bring some high moral standards back to society. By allowing what some members, I am sure, think of as mild pornography to be viewed by our young people and in fact by people of all ages—we are particularly worried about young people because we know that addiction starts as early as their teens—the fear is that some day snuff films will become acceptable and community standards will change to the point where the absolute pinnacle of violence against other human beings becomes the norm and accepted in our community.

I put that out as a warning that may come true some day if we do not do something about it, because it was not too many years ago in Ontario that we found the pornographic material now on the newsstands and in film to be abhorrent. Now we see snuff films coming in, where the police really do not have the tools to do the job. When the Ontario Film Review Board allows pornographic material to come in and be viewed, when the police, as we know from the resolution, have charged some video shop owners with distributing obscene material, and at the same time our own government agency has approved that material, there is something seriously wrong.

My colleague the member for Mississauga South is trying to bring that debate to the Legislature. She has done a commendable job of doing that today and I ask all members to support this because it is the slippery slide of morality in this society. We must stop that trend and do nothing to feed the addiction of pornography, particularly in our young people. I ask for all members' support. It is a worthwhile resolution and I cannot believe anyone would ever vote against it.

Mr White: I rise to speak to this issue without the careful and astute research that the member opposite has demonstrated, but I have had many years of experience in working with victims of sexual molestation and sexual assault, almost all of them women, and I have known the tremendous tragedy that their lives have faced after those assaults and after those molestations.

The tragedy is primarily that this is not an act of sexuality; this is an act of violence, an act of cruelty, an act of power. For them, their sense of their selves, their sense of their sexual beings, their sense of their erotic lives and their sense of being able to connect intimately with others have been often permanently damaged. This crossing between what is violent, what is obscene and what is beautiful and erotic is unfortunately true for all of us, to some perhaps lesser degree, and I want to commend the member for bringing forward these issues of violence that are supposedly of a sexual nature and distinguishing them from what is truly erotic or sexual.

Sexuality, erotic interchange, is something which is intimate. Love speaks to care, to respect and to affection. A loving, erotic exchange is the very opposite of the kind of violence that the member opposite speaks of as obscene. Eros, in Sigmund Freud's terms, is a very creative, vital force and it is opposed and contaminated by the forces of control, violence and power. It is the very opposite of those things.

In our community, those forces of violence, coercion, degradation and the forces of oppression and exploitation are rampant. If we as a community can make an expression of that distinction I think we are helping our community. If we as a Legislature can have this kind of debate, I think it leads the way in terms of the most important and powerful depiction of what is good, natural and affectionate as opposed to what is violent, oppressive and degrading.

That is not a clear message. Certainly the Ontario Film Review Board is making some clarification in that. What is sexual and what is erotic are acceptable, but the issues of violence and degradation, that contamination, are not, they are making clear, and I think this debate helps to do so as well. These will be difficult decisions determining what is obscene. To what degree is something obscene? Is table dancing obscene? Are these kinds of depictions obscene? Especially within the context of a society which has traditionally oppressed women, traditionally oppressed both men's and women's sexuality but particularly women's because they have been the victims of force and rape, their senses of their selves have been tremendously degraded within this overall context.

Mrs Marland: As I think the House is aware, this is not only an extremely sensitive issue; it is also an extremely emotional issue. Since I will not have an opportunity to speak again this morning, I wish to thank the members of all three parties in this House for their support, which I anticipate in passing this resolution this morning.

I know it is a subject that has nothing to do with political parties or partisan politics. It has everything to do with something that all of us, as legislators in this House, share. It is the feeling of helplessness we all share. It is the feeling that we see every day examples of violence in our society that we wonder what we can do about. We wonder what the remedy is. Is there something we can take as our responsibility and take action on?

This resolution this morning is such a small part of the bigger picture, but at least it is a part, and in supporting this resolution maybe this one little part will be the beginning of filling in the whole picture and completing the puzzle that faces all of us to deal with the subject about what is happening with violence against women and children in our society today. We all care, and therefore we do not see this as an intrusion into society's freedom, but rather as a protection of the freedom and the society that we should be able to enjoy.

HEALTH CARE WORKERS' PROTECTION ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR LA PROTECTION DES TRAVAILLEURS DE LA SANTÉ

Mr Morrow moved second reading of Bill 147, An Act to Protect Health Care Workers from the Transmission of the Human Immunodeficiency Virus / Projet de loi 147 Loi visant à protéger les travailleurs de la santé contre la transmission du virus de l'immunodéficience humaine.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): The honourable member has 10 minutes to initiate debate.

Mr Morrow: Before I start my debate, I would like to ask the indulgence of the House because I have a cough and I am stuffed up. I understand that happens with higher altitudes such as we sit in here.

I rise today to lead off the debate on Bill 147, An Act to Protect Health Care Workers from the Transmission of the Human Immunodeficiency Virus. The bill amends the Workers' Compensation Act to remedy three important issues workers have to deal with in today's environment. First, it defines health and safety precautions to try and stop the transmission of HIV when working with blood products. Second, it guarantees that people will not lose their jobs if they are accidentally infected. Third, it puts the onus of proof on the Workers' Compensation Board if a worker gets the AIDS virus doing his or her job as a health care worker.

Statistics from medical journals in the United States confirm that 5% of the cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, AIDS, were exposed to it by blood products. This may seem like a small number, but the most recent statistics from the Federal Centre for AIDS show that there are 2,157 people alive at the present time with AIDS. Of these known cases, 246 were in contact with AIDS through infected blood or blood products; of these, 148 have already died.

I have contacted the Hamilton AIDS Network for Dialogue and Support, HANDS, to get the most recent information available. Most people know what the major risk factors are, but they do not know the percentage of adults who have AIDS as a result. I am reminding members of the House that 78% are related to homosexual or bisexual activity; 1% to intravenous drug use; 4% to both factors; 7% to heterosexual activity; 5% to no identified factor, and 5% are recipients of blood or blood products. It is the last group that this bill will assist.

The acquiring of the virus by exchange of blood may seem like a small number, but when you have a closer look at the data, a completely different picture starts to appear. While 2% of the male cases were infected through blood, 25% of females were infected in the same manner. With the predominance of women working in the health care field it shows that the spread of this deadly disease to women through their employment is substantial. This is an even higher percentage than the substantially high risk the intravenous drug user group has.

Using the 1989 figures, there are 436 people diagnosed with AIDS in Ontario. If 5% received the infection through exchange of blood, this means that there are 22 people in Ontario alive at the present time who are in this category plus another 5%, or 22, who have yet to discover that they have been infected.

Of course, over the past 10 years our knowledge of AIDS has increased, but there is still a substantial number of people who are continually being infected by coming into contact with tainted blood. The Canadian Red Cross Society began testing for the AIDS virus in November 1985 so one must remember that this may skew the early years of reporting, but that does not mean the government of this province must stop being vigilant in our attempts to control the spreading of AIDS. This is what Bill 147 will address.

Some of the workers who must receive this protection include health care workers, morgue attendants, embalmers, laboratory personnel, medical cleaning staff, police, firefighters, prison staff and schoolteachers.

Bill 147 sets out the drafting of regulations by the Lieutenant Governor in Council for such things as gloves, masks, clothing and precautionary equipment for health care workers and also prescribes sanitary measures to protect workers from coming into accidental contact with blood. Just the use of face shields, eye protection, double gloving, waterproof gowns, surgical masks and waterproof footwear will, according to most experts, almost reduce to nil the risk of surgical teams acquiring the virus.

In a discussion with the Hamilton branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society, I was told that it has policies in place that protect workers from coming into contact with high-risk groups and a reporting mechanism if any staff could be infected through the mishandling of blood. This type of health and safety precaution is what should be done by all employers whose staff may come into contact with blood.

This bill recognizes that it is time to look at the different ways that AIDS is being passed. I am still surprised that women are coming into contact with this virus in an almost completely different way from men. With the recent announcements by the Ministry of Health, this government's real attempts to stop the spreading of HIV show me the importance of this legislation.

In sections 3, 4 and 5 of this legislation key protections for workers are outlined. Section 3 reads: "No employer shall dismiss a health care worker who has contracted the virus if the only reason for dismissal is the contraction of the virus."

The subsequent sections guarantee workers who have contracted AIDS through their employment the right to remain at their duties as long as there is no danger to the public and fellow workers. This gives workers with AIDS rights for re-employment and also gives them access to alternative responsibilities with no loss in pay or benefits.

Workers in the province must have health and safety provisions to protect them from death or illness on the job and, at the very least, to give them support if they are infected. The present legislation makes it the responsibility of the workers to prove that they have received the virus during their employment. In some cases it may be many years before AIDS is diagnosed and it would almost be impossible to relate it to an event that may just involve receiving a cut while working with tainted blood.

All our constituency offices that are involved with decisions by the Workers' Compensation Board know that proving continuity with some injuries can be very difficult. To suddenly test HIV positive and have to review employment history, remember duties as far back as three years and show that a specific event with unknown factors lead to the acquisition of the AIDS virus would be an almost impossible task for anyone. Health care workers must receive the benefit of the doubt, and therefore subsection (9b), as set out in subsection 7(1) of the bill, has been included. It is time that workers who could acquire the disease in this manner be recognized and also protected.

Passage of this bill gives health care workers needed guidelines for disposal of hazardous bodily fluids, prescribes sanitary measures in the workplace, defines safety equipment to be used by different classes of health care workers and gives coverage under the Workers' Compensation Act for those infected.

This bill, I hope, will help to remove the stigma that still exists in today's society on those who are HIV positive. The recent announcement by Mr Johnson has helped in some way to bring this issue to the forefront, but there is still more that has to be done and a lot more that has to be understood with respect to caring for those with AIDS.

Mr J. Wilson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I do not believe we have a quorum at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve) ordered the bells rung.

1116

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): A quorum now is present. We continue debate on the motion on the floor. All three parties will have 15 minutes to participate in the debate.

Mrs Sullivan: I was very interested in reading the bill that is being put forward by the member for Wentworth East and I commend him, really, for his efforts to assist people in the health care field. Unfortunately I am concerned about specific aspects of the bill which I believe are misdirected and I will not be supporting the bill.

I do want to say, however, that I really think this is a useful piece of information to be brought forward. I believe there is considerable misunderstanding and misinformation in these fields and that an opportunity through a vehicle such as this to discuss these issues is important. I think people in the health care field and people in the community have concerns about some of the issues we will be discussing, and these are matters where a little bit of light frequently is useful.

There are two reasons that I will not be voting for this bill. The first is that there are established protocols in existence to utilize what are called universal precautions when handling blood and body fluids of all patients or residents, not just of those who are known or suspected to carry high-risk infections or diseases.

The second reason that I will not be supporting this piece of legislation relates to the recommendation with respect to the Workers' Compensation Board and its treatment of health care workers. It seems to me that recommendation would require health care institutions, and particularly hospitals, to require HIV testing on staff before, during and at the time of the conclusion of their employment with that institution. I believe that is a highly problematic situation, one that we would not support under any circumstances. We do not believe that is an appropriate way of proceeding.

I would like to explore both these areas a little more thoroughly and talk about the past approach to infection control and disease control. We can recall that in the past—we have a doctor in the House and I know he will be familiar with many of these precautionary elements—to keep infections from spreading in health care facilities, workers used really two basic techniques which were routine and which were applied in virtually any health care setting. The first was the no-touch technique, which meant that dressings were applied with tongs, for example, and that scrupulous washing up was required. That was one technique.

The second was the isolation technique, which was used when a patient was known to carry or was suspected of carrying a specific disease. That technique was used particularly in instances such as smallpox or hepatitis. In hospital settings, patients may have been placed in an isolation ward. In the home, an entire premise could have been placed in quarantine.

More than 20 years ago, however, the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta set out a system of category isolation for various groups of diseases, depending on how the diseases were spread. Some 10 years ago, those categories were changed to a disease-specific system. In 1985 a Canadian system of disease-specific isolation was introduced by Ottawa's Laboratory Centre for Disease Control. In all those systems there were specific precautions applied for diseases which were known to be transmitted by blood or body fluids.

While those systems were valuable for most situations where the disease was known or suspected, there were some quite specific drawbacks. The disease had to be correctly diagnosed. The timeliness of the diagnosis became a vital issue so that precautions would start quickly, and anyone who carried the disease had to have similar, recognizable symptoms so that the cases could be readily identified.

With some diseases, such as hepatitis B or HIV, those particular systems were less than useful. People with hepatitis B virus develop symptoms in only 50% of the cases and many carry the disease with no symptoms. An HIV infection is almost always without symptoms until the latter stages.

It was clear there was a need for new precautions and for new systems to be put into place. As a result, the Centers for Disease Control published new recommendations for the prevention of HIV transmission in health care settings. This document recommends that health care workers use universal blood and body fluid precautions, or universal precautions, with all patients.

Because those precautions relate specifically to the prevention of blood-borne diseases only, revisions were made to the universal precautions in 1988 and 1989 to provide further definition of body fluids as those that may transmit blood-borne diseases. What was clear was that earlier infection control practices, the no-touch and isolation techniques, were to continue in place.

About three or four years ago, a new system of infection control precautions was introduced and is in fact in place in some cases in the body substance isolation system, the BSI as it is commonly known, which moves the emphasis from the diagnosis to the specific interaction between the health care worker and the patient.

There are no signs on the bed or doors of the patients who have communicable diseases. Instead, health care workers use barriers to avoid contact. We are familiar with those: the gloves, the masks, the goggles, the face shields, where moist body substances of all patients are protected from contact with the health care worker.

While the Centers for Disease Control has not yet endorsed BSI, many facilities, including several dentists' offices, have put those practices into effect. Once again, it is ideally a universal system, with all workers in direct contact with patients interacting with all patients in the same manner. Some Toronto hospitals have adopted the BSI system to meet their internal needs.

Under some of these circumstances, I think I should spend a little time to indicate that precautions for workers not directly in contact with the patient, such as laundry workers, orderlies and cleaning staff, have been similarly developed in laborious detail and to exacting standards and are in place in our institutions.

The current infection control principle is to treat all patients in a similar, safe manner, since all people infected with a disease cannot necessarily be identified.

The Public Hospitals Act requires our hospitals to pass bylaws that establish and provide for the operation of health surveillance programs, including a communicable disease surveillance program for all who carry on activities in a hospital setting. I just want to read from a note from the Ontario Hospital Association with respect to a particular disease:

"This program must, with respect to a particular communicable disease, include the tests and examinations set out in any applicable communicable disease surveillance protocol published jointly by the OHA and OMA for that disease and approved by the Minister of Health."

Clearly, there is already an interaction with the Ministry of Health in place.

As we move from institutionally based care to community-based care, it is clear that specific disease prevention protocols will have to be put into place for health care workers in non-traditional sites. The Ministry of Health, I believe, should be identifying those protocols through consultation with practitioners and others. This particular bill that is being put forward is not the vehicle for doing that.

I know my colleague has important things to add to this debate. As I indicated, I certainly will not be supporting this bill, although I am pleased that some of the issues have been raised and put on the table so that there can be some public discussion of the issues.

Mr J. Wilson: I am pleased to spend a few moments this morning speaking on Bill 147, An Act to Protect Health Care Workers from the Transmission of the Human Immunodeficiency Virus, or HIV, put forward by the member for Wentworth East.

I should say at the beginning that Bill 147 should be commended for its attempt to assist health care workers who contract the deadly HIV or AIDS virus in the workplace. I believe this bill is similar to private member's Bill 68, which received second reading in this House last April, put forward by the member for Simcoe Centre. That bill sought to amend the Workers' Compensation Act to compensate workers who contract a blood-borne disease while in the workplace.

The intent of Bill 147 has a great deal of merit as we struggle in Ontario and around the world to balance the civil rights of people living with HIV and AIDS with the whole issue of public health. As I recall, back in April the member for Simcoe Centre said there were about 200 reported cases of occupational exposure to HIV. He also mentioned at that time that the risk of a health care worker contracting HIV from blood products was up about 0.9%. However, Bill 147, which is designed to assist health care workers who contract HIV in the workplace, may create more problems than it actually solves.

For the following reasons, my caucus colleagues and I join with the Liberal Party, which is a rare thing indeed, in not being able to support this piece of legislation this morning:

The Ontario Hospital Association feels this legislation will create many problems both for employers and the employees or workers that this legislation is designed to protect and help. It is clear that Bill 147 seeks to preserve employment for HIV-infected workers, but what has not been made clear is that while this bill protects an HIV-infected person's right to work, the language and intent of the bill will serve to violate other critical rights of workers.

The following is a quote from the Ontario Hospital Association in a letter dated November 6. It was addressed to the member for Simcoe Centre, who is also the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Health. The Ontario Hospital Association says:

"We have very serious concerns that this could lead in many instances to employers deciding that the only way to limit their liability would be through testing employees before, during and at the termination of their employment. This would be contrary to both the blood-borne surveillance protocol for Ontario hospitals and other surveillance protocols for Ontario hospitals. These protocols explicitly reject the use of testing and screening of staff, yet despite their presence hospitals may be forced to contravene them should your bill"—referring at that time to Bill 68—"be enacted."

Section 7 of Bill 147 would amend section 122 of the Workers' Compensation Act to read:

"If the worker contracted the human immunodeficiency virus and at or before the date of the disablement was engaged as a health care worker, the virus shall be deemed to have been due to the nature of that employment unless the contrary is proved."

1130

As a result, the onus of proof on whether or not a health care worker contracts the HIV in the workplace falls upon the employer. The consequence is that employers will be forced to implement mandatory AIDS testing as a means to monitor whether or not HIV is contracted in the workplace. In order to protect themselves, employers may be forced to factor in lifestyles in determining whether or not to hire an employee, and the result of this could be discriminatory hiring practices by employers. I do not think that was the intention of this bill, but it would be one of the consequences of this bill.

I will also give another quote from the Ontario Hospital Association regarding section 7 of Bill 147:

"We fear the result of this would be that health care employers would begin to screen staff before, during and after employment in order to prove the infection did not result from employment. Employers might also seek to learn about confidential lifestyle factors that would put the employee at risk for HIV infection outside of the job."

In order to protect health care workers, Bill 147 could prevent numerous workers from ever gaining employment in the first place, and I think that would be sad.

Another concern about Bill 147 centres around sections 2 and 6. These sections both deal with universal blood and bodily fluid precautions. The member for Wentworth East should be aware that his bill attempts to legislate something that is extremely difficult to legislate, and that is professional judgement. Enacting Bill 147 runs the risk of pre-empting the work done by the Ministry of Health in this regard. The ministry has spent almost two years developing a position paper outlining and defining its support for universal blood and bodily fluid precautions. By enacting Bill 147, the government would be putting the cart before the horse.

The OHA in a letter also concurs with this: "Putting this proposed legislation into place and drawing up the sorts of regulations suggested in section 6 may lead to conflicts between the Ministry of Health and Labour, and confusion on the part of health care workers and employers."

In the United States, their hospital association has struggled with this sort of legislation for several years and has yet to reach agreement on the kinds of protective practices and equipment that should be required by law.

Another problem with sections 2 and 6 is that no one, not even the centre for disease control, has been able to come up with specific lists of precautions, circumstances and the precautionary equipment needed. The OHA recommendation regarding sections 2 and 6 is, "We think these sections should either be omitted altogether or else a simple reference made to the Ministry of Health document and/or recommended standards of practice published by the Laboratory Centre for Disease Control in Ottawa."

Section 4 of Bill 147 is also fraught with difficulties. Subsection 4(1) reads:

"If a health care worker contracts the virus in the course of his or her employment, the worker is entitled to continue working at his or her position and fulfilling all of the duties and responsibilities inherent to that position as long as those duties and responsibilities do not endanger the safety of the public or of his or her fellow workers."

Subsection 4(2) reads:

"If a worker cannot continue with all or part of his or her responsibilities without endangering the safety of the public or of his or her fellow workers, the employer shall assign to the worker alternative responsibilities that are similar to the worker's regular responsibilities, that require similar qualifications and that have the same salary and benefits."

Once again, while the intent and compassion are commendable, they are not grounded in practical reality. Workers who contract the AIDS virus will put their own lives in danger by continuing to carry out the demanding duties of health care workers. Section 4 does not consider the health and safety of the infected worker whose determination to stay at his job may place health care workers with an impaired immune system at risk.

Going back to section 7, this bill seems to mirror Bill 68 in its attempt to amend the Workers' Compensation Act. I was pleased back in April to join the debate on Bill 68 and I want to reiterate what I said then and relate it to Bill 147 today. Section 7 of Bill 147 is redundant. For example, as is the current practice of the Workers' Compensation Board, if the WCB receives a claim from a health care worker who pricks himself and who is handling blood, the board will handle the costs for the HIV testing. Also, the board takes it upon itself now to do its own investigation into the incident. The bottom line is that workers who contract HIV, be they in the health care professions or otherwise, are taken care of and there is no need for new amending legislation.

Subsections 122(9) and (9a) of the Workers' Compensation Act set out the structure for compensation for employees who contract HIV in the workplace. Subsection 122(16) of the act already gives the Workers' Compensation Board the power to do so. I will quote that section:

"The board, subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, may declare any disease to be an industrial disease and may amend schedule 3 or 4 accordingly."

So it is already possible and is in fact the practice of the Workers' Compensation Board to handle people, including health care workers, who are infected with HIV at their place of work.

It is ironic that a member of the NDP government has chosen to table this, which could be termed a humane and compassionate bill, during the same week the Minister of Health closed the door on assistance for some 375 haemophiliacs in Ontario who contracted HIV through Ontario's blood supply in and around the year 1985.

On Tuesday of this week, in this chamber, I asked the minister a very pointed question as to whether she would compensate those 375 haemophiliacs who are living with HIV, many of whom have developed AIDS and some 55 of whom have died. Many of those, unfortunately, were children. The minister gave, I thought, a rather inhumane, static and legal response, claiming that the government had already discussed this issue with other provincial ministers of health and that they have all agreed their governments do not have any legal culpability in terms of taking responsibility for the blood supply when we were not screening the blood supply in Canada and in Ontario for HIV. We were not screening it properly, and for a short period of time in the mid 1980s were not ensuring the safety of that blood supply to the best of our ability.

It is interesting to note that from 1987, and the decision was finally announced in December 1989, the federal government did take responsibility and did set out a compensation package for haemophiliacs in Ontario who had contracted HIV through the blood supply. I think there is a legal culpability on the part of this government.

There is a case—it is in the Toronto Star today—where a lady out west contracted HIV and eventually full-blown AIDS through the procedure of in vitro fertilization. The courts just awarded her over $800,000 and explicitly said that there is legal culpability in this case in terms of the doctor not fully taking precautions to ensure the lady would not contract HIV.

There is also the case I mentioned on Tuesday where a six-year-old boy in Australia was forced to take the Australian government to court to get the government to live up to its responsibility for the purity of the Australian blood supply. The end result was that the six-year-old boy was awarded $800,000, but he and his supporters were forced to come up with some $15 million in legal costs, which the government eventually absorbed. That government, based on the fact that the courts ruled in favour of the little boy, must now settle with other haemophiliacs who contracted HIV through the blood supply in Australia.

I cannot send a clearer message to the government. I strongly feel, contrary to what the minister told me in this chamber on Tuesday, that the government has a share of responsibility because it is a voting member of the Canadian Blood Committee, which has responsibility for screening blood products in Canada and that it shares in a responsibility that has already been admitted by the federal government, and that the expensive route is the route the government has now chosen to take. There are 18 cases launched this week naming the provincial government, among others, as having a responsibility in this matter, and unfortunately the government has taken the expensive route of forcing this matter to the courts.

I suggested on Tuesday and strongly believe that the fiscally responsible thing for this government to do would be to settle now with the haemophiliacs infected with HIV rather than go through an expensive court challenge, but it is a decision the government has taken and a decision it will have to live with.

As I conclude my remarks, it is ironic that the member for Wentworth East and the member for Simcoe Centre, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Health, agree in this legislation and in Bill 68 that was brought forth in April that people who contract HIV through the workplace should be included under the compensation program provided by the Workers' Compensation Board, but this same government, on exactly the same principle, on exactly the same type of case, refuses to acknowledge responsibility and bring forward a compensation package for haemophiliacs in Ontario who, through no fault of their own of course, simply placed their faith in our blood supply and in our health care system, were let down and mistakes were made. This government has some responsibility. I find it ironic that we see legislation here today where they feel certain workers should receive that compensation but haemophiliacs should not.

Mr Mills: I am pleased to rise and speak to Bill 147, An Act to Protect Health Care Workers from the Transmission of the Human Immunodeficiency Virus, that has been introduced by my colleague the member for Wentworth East.

There is nothing that strikes more fear in health care workers than the possibility of their contracting HIV. This fear is really the thrust of Bill 147. The risk of occupational transmission of the AIDS virus concerns health care workers all across Ontario. The member's bill touches on a very sensitive issue. I commend him for bringing this forward in all its sensitivity.

However, I have some concerns about certain parts of the bill. My first concern deals with section 1, which defines a "health care worker" as "any worker or professional who, in the normal course of their employment, may come into contact with hazardous bodily fluids."

On these lines I would like to speak to public safety workers such as the firefighters. Firefighters' exposure to infectious diseases is a major reason why firefighting is one of the world's most dangerous professions. Firefighters often suffer injuries and cuts and must help victims who have also been injured and may also be bleeding.

As things now stand, firefighters in Ontario cannot find out if a person they have treated carries an infectious disease such as AIDS. I believe that firefighters should have the right to know this information. This should be done not only for the protection of the firefighters' health and safety, but for the safety of the public as well.

I realize some people may be concerned that the privacy rights of an AIDS victim could be violated. I do not believe this would necessarily have to happen. In the United States, Congress has passed legislation that creates a fair balance between the privacy rights of an AIDS victim and a firefighter's right to know. Under the United States legislation, firefighters can find out if they have been exposed to an infectious disease while treating a fire or accident victim. This law does not jeopardize an individual's right to privacy, because all the medical information is kept strictly confidential. The Provincial Federation of Ontario Firefighters likes the United States legislation and wants the province to amend the Health Protection and Promotion Act and the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

That is my first concern, that the member's bill does not cover emergency workers such as firefighters.

My second concern deals with subsection 4(2) of the bill, which says that a worker who contracts the AIDS virus and cannot continue his or her job without posing a risk to the public shall be assigned alternative but equal responsibilities.

I have no problem with the basic thrust of this section of the bill. In fact, I agree completely with my colleague the member for Wentworth East that the jobs of health care workers must be protected if they contract the AIDS virus. Doing anything less or otherwise would be discriminatory and totally unacceptable.

However, the wording of that section of the bill in my opinion opens up a Pandora's box. For example, the bill does not explain how a health care worker would know if he or she is carrying the AIDS virus. This is important because people can carry and spread the human immunodeficiency virus even if they have not developed full-blown AIDS. I bring this up because it has implications for civil liberties. In the United States, legislators are currently grappling with the issue of mandatory testing for health care workers. That debate came about after a 22-year-old Florida woman developed the AIDS virus after being infected by her dentist.

The Florida case illustrates the complexity of the issue. How do we balance the privacy rights of health care workers with the public's right to know? I do not know the answer, but I think the member for Wentworth East should be aware that his bill cannot be discussed without dealing with that question.

Those are two of the concerns I have regarding Bill 147. The member is thanking me. He did not know what I was going to say. Once again I would like to thank him for having the courage to bring this bill forward. It really is commendable. The health and labour issues he raises are important and, at the same time, very controversial. Once again I commend the member, but I have some difficulty with it even though he is a colleague and a friend of mine.

Mr Curling: I want to thank the member for Wentworth East for giving me the opportunity to speak on Bill 147. While I know that the intention of the member for Wentworth East is honourable and well intended, I find this bill a bit hurried, as his colleague just stated. My colleagues the member for Halton Centre and the member for Simcoe West also stated that somehow the bill lacks details and has many redundancies.

When we talk about redundancies, there are many sections of this bill that have already been taken into account in the Ontario Human Rights Commission, which handles the fact of rights at work. Here it is again being mentioned.

I know I do not have a lot of time. I think what the bill is lacking is proper enforcement in place in this province. What we also have, most important, is lack of education.

Because I do not have a lot of time, I will quickly talk about education and read something that was directed to the Solicitor General at that time, the member for Cambridge, by Gordon Youngman, a consultant, specifically in regard to a case in the Solicitor General's area, the Centre of Forensic Sciences. I will read a section of his letter. He is talking about the delay in the Gligor case that the Centre of Forensic Sciences had not proceeded with.

"The information regarding the transmission has not changed over the years since the discovery of the HIV virus almost 10 years ago. Health authorities around the world, but in particular the World Health Organization, the International Labour Office, the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta have issued very detailed guidelines known as Universal Precautions when dealing with body fluids and HIV.

"These guidelines also apply to other blood-borne diseases such as hepatitis A and B. These guidelines apply both to those individuals who are alive and to those that have died. The number of infected health care workers in North America is less than 10% and those that are infected were as a result of"—I would like the member to listen carefully to this—"needle stick injuries because there was a breakdown in the use of the prescribed precautions." It talks about education and understanding of this disease.

"There is a need"—this is the emphasis—"for clear, specific, factual messages regarding the transmission of HIV that have greater applicability and relevance to people's lives and concerns...." This government and the governments of Ontario in the past have spent thousands of dollars to educate people about HIV. It seems to me the government members lack that education and lack that information. Specifically the Ministry of the Solicitor General seems to lack that in giving proper direction especially to areas in the Centre of Forensic Sciences.

As a matter of fact, at the moment there are about 700 backlog cases that have not been investigated because of fear of contracting this HIV disease, although it has been stated that the disease itself does not live very long outside the body after death. People have been generally aware of the modes of transmission but they are less aware of how to protect themselves. I think the amount of money that has been spent in the past has somehow not been effective. I would encourage the member to emphasize the fact of education and things that are in place there and not to duplicate the issue all over again.

Joan Burton from the health and safety association wrote in respect of this bill itself: "We strongly support the intention of this bill, but think that the proposed bill will create many problems for both employers and workers." This has been said not only by my colleague the member for Halton Centre but also by my colleague the member for Simcoe West.

I would encourage the member Wentworth East, although his bill is well-intended, to encourage his colleagues in the ministry to go back and visit much of that legislation and visit the areas in which we can have better enforcement. I think it will then be quite unnecessary to introduce this bill. I had hoped, if I had more time, to elaborate.

Mr Kormos: It should come as no surprise that I stand in support of my colleague's bill today. I am not about to engage in criticism of it because rather than criticism it warrants some sound understanding of exactly what happens here on Thursday mornings. This is private members' morning. Sometimes there are not the numbers of people sitting in the Legislature we would want on Thursday mornings, but members of this assembly, all 130 of them—excluding you, Mr Speaker, because you of course are non-partisan and removed from the political fray. As people who watch this know, on Thursday mornings private members get an opportunity to present either resolutions or bills without the restraint that is so often imposed on government members and government bills. This is an interesting part of the week. I particularly enjoy Thursday mornings because of the nature of the matters that are put forward and the types of debates that are conducted.

I am happy this morning to see that not only are people watching on television but people are here in the Legislature. We have visitors. We should say hello to young Warner Yorgason and Brandon Yorgason, both of them here with their parents, exercising their right to sit in this Legislature and observe what is going on either critically or fondly, however they wish, along with the persons sitting up in the visitors' gallery. It is their right.

I quite frankly wish that more people would exercise that right. This building belongs to the people of Ontario. The sooner the people of Ontario recognize that, appreciate it and understand it, like I am sure Warner and Brandon and their parents do, the better off this province is going to be. I tell members right now that we should be telling people in the province of Ontario to get here to Queen's Park and to use the building, to use the government that indeed is theirs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): I would like to remind the honourable member we are discussing ballot item 46.

Mr Kormos: Of course we are, Mr Speaker, and we are going to keep discussing it for several more minutes.

So that is an important part of Thursday morning. I am also fortunate to be able to speak to this matter today because, among other things, it marks the end of our legislative week here at Queen's Park and it also marks the end of the term of this most recent group of pages, the young women and men from across this province who have served us for the last several weeks: people like young Jay Banerjee from Scarborough East and Janye Lee from Don Mills, just two of the pages among a whole bunch of them who have performed so well.

These are young people who have learned over the last several weeks some of the shortcomings of the members of this assembly. They have observed them. They have seen them live and in the flesh—that is the shortcomings—but I trust they have also acquired a sense of what it means to be a member of this assembly. I trust some of them aspire to sit here in these very seats and that they have learned already that if you are going to be sitting here it is far nicer down in the front row than it is up at the back. It is far nicer closer to the middle than it is closer to the exit doors. There are 130 of us and there are 130 desks, one for each and every one of us. All of us, as members of the Legislative Assembly, have the right and indeed the obligation to speak out on legislation that is presented.

Here we have a bill, and it is no surprise to me that it comes from my colleague the member for Wentworth East. Here is a young man who has served his riding oh so well over the last year and few months. Here is a member whose riding can and should be very proud of because he has been outspoken on issues that have come before the Legislature. The member for Wentworth East has had the courage to stand up and speak about things that others have remained silent on. He has had the courage to be critical when criticism is warranted even on things some take for granted. He has the courage to come forward with a private member's bill that, as has already been noted, has as a part of its nature some very controversial aspects.

There has been something happening with private members' bills not just over the last several months but over the last couple of years. I recall fondly the first, and so far only, time I had been given an opportunity to present my own matters during private members' morning. That was back when I was a member of the opposition sitting among the 19 of us. The members should remember there were only 19 of us.

I presented a resolution at that time which was debated vigorously. It was a resolution that called for the provision of syringes to diabetic seniors, recognizing that the syringe is an integral part of administering the insulin. Seniors should be entitled, and, by God, I do not look forward to the day and I will fight the day when we refuse or when we fail to provide pharmaceutical drugs for seniors under the Drug Benefit Formulary or when we impose such unacceptable things as user-pay schemes.

But recognizing that a syringe is an integral part of the process of administering insulin, I felt it was my responsibility, having been spoken to by so many constituents and persons who are not from my riding from across Ontario who felt it was important, I raised it in the Legislature. Although some time has passed, members will note that the Minister of Health has announced that syringes will now be available to seniors who have the illness of diabetes so that they can administer the insulin. That is a good thing. That means that this private members' morning works. It works for members of the opposition.

The member for London North, whom I respect a great deal, presented as a private member's bill her legislation dealing with helmets for cyclists. That was not only supported but now is in committee being discussed. We are hearing from participants across the province who have things to say about that legislation, and it will unfold as it should.

It is strange that members of the opposition would be concerned about the fact that this protects workers. It comes again as no surprise to me. The member for Wentworth East comes from the workplace to this Legislature. He spent his working life fighting for the rights and interests of working women and men, so it is to be expected that he comes to this assembly with legislation that protects workers.

This legislation warrants the support of every member of this Legislative Assembly. It does not deserve the petty criticism that has been cast towards it when in fact we are talking about second reading. What the member for Wentworth East's private member's bill deserves is to be passed so that it can go to committee for that refinement, that discussion and that debate that is so important. To do anything less is to neglect our responsibilities as legislators. I say we should be supporting this legislation and supporting it vigorously.

Mr Morrow: That is really hard to follow. In wrapup, there are some agencies I would like to thank for all the work they have given me and the research done.

I would like to thank the Toronto board of health for all the advice it has given me, and especially Anne Moon, who is a member of the board. I would like to thank the Hamilton AIDS Network for Dialogue and Support for all the research it has done. I would like to thank the Hamilton branch of the Red Cross, because without it this would not have happened. There are other individuals, especially Chris, Heidi and Bob, and a man by the name of Doug Decker who went out of his way for the last week to really make sure I would be presenting this this morning.

Mr Curling: Bob Rae.

Mr Morrow: Sure, I will thank the Premier, there is no problem. I will thank the member for Welland-Thorold and I will also thank every other speaker who spoke on this this morning. Their criticisms and their support go a long way. I would also ask that everybody in the House support this.

I will tell the member for Halton Centre though that when Bill 68 did come up, hepatitis B was a part of that bill and I did speak to that, just so she knows so that might jog her memory. I think that is all I have to say on this, although again I would ask that everybody do support this bill.

The House divided on Mr Morrow's motion for second reading of Bill 147, which was agreed to on the following vote:

Ayes—19

Cooper, Coppen, Dadamo, Frankford, Hansen, Hope, Jamison, Kormos, Lessard, Martin, Mills, Morrow, Owens, Perruzza, Ward, B., Ward, M., Waters, White, Wilson, G.

Nays—16

Brown, Caplan, Carr, Cunningham, Curling, Haslam, Jordan, Marland, McLean, Murdoch, B., Poirier, Runciman, Sterling, Sullivan, Wilson, J., Witmer.

Mr Perruzza: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to have a bit of a clarification from you. When you asked for the voice vote on the member for Mississauga South's motion, I noted, because I was very close to the member for Leeds-Grenville, that he voted against the motion in his voice vote but when you asked for the standing vote he voted in favour. He voted both ways.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): That is not a point of order. The members are allowed to vote as they please.

Mr J. Wilson: On a similar point of order that I hope you will rule in favour of, Mr Speaker: I note that the member for Durham East in his remarks opposed the member for Mississauga South's resolution.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): That is not a point of order.

The House recessed at 1216.

AFTERNOON SITTING

The House resumed at 1330.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

RENT REGULATION

Mr Brown: It is disgusting that during the middle of a recession, during a time of unprecedented tax increases and government deficits, the NDP government should decide to put people in the housing industry out of work with Bill 121.

We have heard that 16,000 people were put out of work by Bill 4 and that 24,000 jobs are put at risk by Bill 121. This morning hundreds of people crowded the front steps of the Legislature to ask how long they would have to wait to put the Premier out of work.

The crowd heard from John Makuch, whose concrete restoration business died after the NDP brought in Bill 4. He told the crowd he used to have 50 employees, but under the NDP he now has 10. Concrete restoration is an example of necessary maintenance that needs to be done to keep apartments safe. We are not talking about gold-plated lobbies; we are talking about basic maintenance work the NDP is disallowing, forcing tenants' homes to become slums.

Landlords, tenants and construction workers all demanded changes to Bill 121 during the public hearings last fall, but the government has failed to listen in its amendments to the bill.

The Liberal caucus will be putting forward our amendments to make Bill 121 fairer to landlords and tenants and to bring back the necessary maintenance work and jobs destroyed by the NDP. We call upon the government to support our proposals and put fairness and security back into the rent laws of this province.

LAND USE PLANNING

Mr B. Murdoch: I would like to advise the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of the Environment today that their original land use directive is not in tune with the views and the needs of the people of Grey. This was made very clear in last week's municipal elections. Voters elected candidates who believe, as they do, that the land they bought and pay taxes on belongs to them and not to some nameless, faceless bureaucrat in Toronto.

The ministers should examine these results and try to understand the reality of the situation, rather than relying on the Owen Sound Sun Times and the 50 or so malcontents who signed a petition opposing Grey county's policies for the sum total of their knowledge on this subject. The Sun Times and these objectors have led the ministers astray by giving them false and misleading information.

The paper has done the ministers and the people of Grey a serious disservice. In my view, because of the harm they have done and continue to do to the community, the editorial writers ought to tender their resignations, as they do not reflect the views of those they purport to serve. Failing that, they should at least apologize to the people and the elected officials of Grey.

The ministers must begin to depend on more than their few unreliable sources and actually consult with the local officials. By doing this, they should find that they will receive far more co-operation than they are presently getting.

UNITED WAY CAMPAIGN

Mr Dadamo: I am pleased to inform the members of this Legislature that the citizens of Windsor and Essex county have proven themselves one more time. I am pleased to announce, as it was last Friday evening in Windsor at the Cleary International Centre, the raising of over $7 million by the most giving and sharing people in all of Canada. In the last three years, the organizers of the United Way in Windsor have kept a target of $7 million.

The real heroes are all those who gave to the United Way unselfishly even during recessionary times. And how about the hundreds of volunteers who door-knocked and solicited company employees? All those people who gave their time and money merit much applause and praise.

David Armour, area executive director for the United Way, all the labour locals in Windsor and Essex county, as well as business should be applauded for their efforts in yet another accomplished campaign.

A recent survey found that 71% of Canadians volunteered in the past year. That is up from 59% in 1987.

In closing, on behalf of the members for Windsor-Riverside and Windsor-Walkerville and the member for Essex-Kent, I say congratulations to those who worked on the United Way campaign in Windsor and Essex county.

INVESTIGATION INTO POLICE SHOOTINGS

Mr Curling: Police investigating police: I can remember a time not long ago when this would have troubled the NDP. "An outrage," they would have shouted then, "A mockery of justice."

The Premier said that police investigating police was wrong, period. "The independence of the process is critical," he said after the Donaldson shooting. Cynical opportunism? Grandstanding? Or did the NDP truly believe that police should not investigate shootings by their fellow officers? That is what is happening right now. It is happening despite a new law which was designed expressly to prevent it.

The NDP government has allowed the special investigations unit to become a sham, a smokescreen behind which police can investigate alleged criminal acts by members of their own force. This is worse than the previous system, which at least had members of another force carrying out the investigation. Police confidence in the ability of the special investigations unit to conduct an independent investigation into police shootings has been undermined because of a private arrangement between the Ministry of the Solicitor General, the SIU and the police chiefs of Ontario.

The damage done by this Solicitor General is irreparable. What needs to be done now is clear: Revoke this made-behind-closed-doors deal and remove the agency from the Ministry of the Solicitor General, recreating it as a truly independent civilian body with the resources it needs to fulfil its mandate to investigate police shootings independent of outside interference.

COUNTY RESTRUCTURING

Mr J. Wilson: On numerous occasions the member for Simcoe East and I have raised in this Legislature the concerns and resentments held by ratepayers in Simcoe county regarding the plan to restructure their county by amalgamating municipalities.

Simcoe county taxpayers voiced their hostility to restructuring in a loud and forceful manner during the recent municipal elections. Two municipalities in my riding put the issue of restructuring on their election ballots. In Sunnidale township, a staggering 94% of ratepayers voted no to restructuring. In Nottawasaga township, 85% turned thumbs down on restructuring.

There is a lesson in this for all elected members of this Legislature. Several local politicians who supported the restructuring study did so against the wishes of the electorate and suffered dearly at the polls.

On Monday my colleague the member for Simcoe East and I will be meeting with the Minister of Municipal Affairs. We intend to bring to the minister the results from last week's municipal elections and the very real concerns of a great many Simcoe county taxpayers who oppose restructuring and who are frustrated because politicians refuse to listen their concerns. We will ask the minister to put the issue of restructuring on hold for a period of five years so we can have some time to evaluate the amalgamation that has already been forced on the south end of the county. I hope the minister will take to heart the lessons learned in last week's election.

Also, the November 12 elections produced a new name for the amalgamated town of Alliston, Beeton, Tecumseth and Tottenham. I wish to inform all members that the name of the new town is New Tecumseth.

PURCHASE OF PAPER MILL

Mr Wood: Today is the day the people of Kapuskasing and the employees of Spruce Falls were given to come up with the money to have an employee-owned paper mill. In June the people pledged over $13 million for the mill. Despite the economic situation in northern Ontario, I am pleased that the communities have not only reached their pledged goal but have surpassed it. Over the three-week campaign, 980 employees have given $9.85 million and 470 non-mill employees have contributed $4.79 million. Together, over $14 million was raised to buy Spruce Falls.

This effort reflects my constituents' strong belief that their company will survive, given all of today's economic pressures. With everyone working together, almost anything is possible.

All stakeholders—the people in Kapuskasing and the surrounding areas, the government and Tembec—are to be commended in making this sale a success. It is an indication of what can be done when all parties co-operate in a common goal. With this pledge, the people of Kapuskasing show their belief and courage to contribute to the economie wellbeing of their communities. I again would like to express my admiration and congratulations for their support to make this employee buyout worth while.

ATTENDANCE OF PREMIER

Mr Phillips: I am going to do something unusual and compliment the Premier. I would prefer, of course, to say it to the Premier's face, but a person of his importance cannot be spending time here in the Legislature. Fortunately I am told someone on his staff does review Hansard. It would be my hope they might pass on these comments to the Premier.

My comment I think shows the human side of the Premier. Apparently the Treasurer had planned an onerous two-week trip to France, England and Germany, but as soon as the Premier heard of the $2-billion shortfall in revenue, he spotted an opportunity to give one of his cabinet a chance to showcase himself and get some real publicity. In a typically unselfish move, the Premier said to the Treasurer, "I'll do the two-week tour and you can have the spotlight." While the Premier endured cold rides down the Thames, the pressure of a grilling at his old college and having to sit through a long dinner with Labour Party candidates, the Treasurer was able to get lots of publicity.

What a comfort this must be to the rest of the cabinet, to know that the Premier will not steal the limelight. If a hospital has to close, the Minister of Health can be assured that she will have the full limelight. When an environmental crisis hits, the Minister of the Environment knows she will be able to get full credit.

As we look skyward, with the Premier's plane from England circling, just awaiting the end of question period, I hope all of us will celebrate the human side of the Premier that has been so graphically displayed in the past two weeks.

LABOUR LEGISLATION

Mr Tilson: Many businesses in my community have suffered the effects of the recession. They have had to downsize, go out of business or flee to the United States. The businesses that have managed to stay afloat should now be looking ahead to a brighter future as we slowly start to see a turnaround in the economy, but they are not.

The government's proposed changes to the labour laws have small businesses more frightened than ever before, and I would like the Minister of Labour to pay close attention to the comments I am sure are coming to him and other members of his government from constituents around this province.

A constituent of mine writes the following letter:

"My response to increased union and/or government involvement in the day-to-day operations of my business will be to downsize it to two employees, my wife and I. Unfortunately, 48 highly motivated and productive employees who have never indicated a need or want for union help will be job-hunting."

Who knows better how the minister's proposals will affect business than business owners? Their fears and promises of shutting down or leaving Ontario are real, and I hope to God the minister is listening.

EARTH DAY

Mr Christopherson: I rise today to inform members of a bill that will be debated in this House on December 5, 1991. My private member's bill would designate every April 22 as Earth Day. Its purpose would be to encourage participation in community, provincial, national and international activities that share a common purpose with the activities organized by the Earth Day movement.

As members know, Earth Day promotes and celebrates individual environmental action, and in 1991 some 700 organizations, 3,000 organizers and two million individuals in Canada co-ordinated or participated directly in Earth Day.

Positive environmental action begins at home. Each one of us has the ability to make a difference in maintaining and improving our community's, our nation's and our planet's ecological health. It is important to realize that this goal can be reached in manageable increments and that gradual changes in lifestyle will ultimately lead to a better quality of life for us as individuals and, as important, a sustainable global environment.

I believe enactment of this bill would be a small but important step in providing leadership on perhaps the most important issue facing us all. I invite and urge all members of the House to support this bill.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Speaker, just a brief point of order before we move to the next order of business: The point of order actually arises out of the orders of the day which I see here on my desk. I notice the government has placed some 25 orders in Orders and Notices today. It seems to me that under those circumstances, the Solicitor General may have inadvertently not only misled this House but misled the public as well. I heard him quoted this morning on the radio saying that Bill 115, which is going to allow the stores to stay open in December but make sure they stay closed the rest of the year in respect of Sundays, was going to be law as of today, that we were to be debating that bill for third reading in the House today and completing our deliberations.

There are a number of people in our caucus who are prepared to do that. I, as whip of the standing committee on administration of justice and one of the spokespeople on that bill, am prepared to debate that matter today. Apparently the Solicitor General suggested that it would be law today. I cannot see how the government House leader, the member for Windsor-Riverside, could possibly have expected us to deal with that matter, with the number of speakers who intend to speak on that bill, when he put some 24 orders on the Orders and Notices paper before consideration of Bill 115. I invite the Solicitor General—

The Speaker: Would the member take his seat, please. The member may know that he does not have a point of order. Following routine proceedings, the Speaker will call for orders of the day and at that point the government House leader will announce which order is to be followed.

Mr Bradley: On a brief point of order, Mr Speaker: We in the official opposition are prepared to delay the start of the session this afternoon so that the Minister of Agriculture and Food can make the statement he is making outside the House at this very moment.

The Speaker: The member for St Catharines has indeed a point of interest but not one of order. It is time for oral questions.

Mrs Caplan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: As question period is about to begin, there are virtually no cabinet members of substance, with the exception of the Treasurer; none of the important members.

The Speaker: Would the member take her seat, please. The member for Oriole will know that she does not have a point of order. There is nothing in the standing orders to compel the attendance of any member of the assembly.

ORAL QUESTIONS

TAX INCREASES

Mr Elston: I have a question of my favourite storyteller, the Treasurer. The last instalment was given by this gentleman just this week, actually given here in a second phase of an announcement which he made earlier. What the Treasurer did not say is more important than what he did say. He has indicated that he will be raising provincial taxes. He has indicated he is going to stick to his deficit plan by way of ensuring fewer dollars being made available to people who are working in municipalities and school boards. Can the Treasurer confirm that what he has actually announced is not only provincial tax increases but an obligation by municipalities and school boards to raise their levies as well so that they can maintain their services?

Hon Mr Laughren: I am not sure I understood the last part of the question.

Mr Elston: Are they going to have to raise taxes to deliver the services?

Hon Mr Laughren: Oh, I see. I now understand the last part of the question by the former interim leader, the former interim leader who assured us all he would never run for permanent leader, but I will not dwell on that matter.

What I did say was that we know that next year the fiscal situation in which we will undoubtedly find ourselves is going to be very difficult. If there is one message—not just some message but one message with about three parts—I have received from the official opposition it is that (a) it wants us to maintain our expenditure programs, (b) it does not want any new taxes and (c) it does not want us to allow the deficit to go any higher. Having said that, all I can assure the member opposite of is that we will do what we can, in as creative a balancing act as possible, to make sure we do indeed carry out the wishes of the member opposite.

Mr Elston: That was not my question. Did the Treasurer not say, by way of his announcement last week and again this week, that municipalities and school boards would require an increase in their taxes to maintain their services?

Hon Mr Laughren: What I have been trying to signal to everybody across the province, including those people who are known as our transfer partners—school boards, hospitals, municipalities, colleges and universities—is that everyone is going to have to work together to try to cope with this very severe recession we are in. When the transfer announcement is made for funding next year for our transfer partners, that transfer announcement will contain a very small number. I think everyone understands that inflation is going to be considerably lower next year than it is this year and we simply cannot continue to fund our transfer partners at the level we did this year. It is just not possible.

Mr Elston: I asked the Treasurer if his announcements over the last couple of years have not required the municipalities and school boards to raise their taxes to maintain services. The answer is obviously that this is required.

The honourable gentleman will know that for a family of four in Ontario having an income of $40,000, about $8,600 of that is already given to provincial and federal tax officials. Having announced that next year municipalities and school boards will have to increase their property tax, a regressive tax which the New Democrats campaigned against some time ago, as we know, how can the Treasurer stand in his place now and answer a question about fairness in taxation and other things when he is forcing those people he calls his partners to increase their tax burden to those constituents who will have to pay to just maintain the services they require from municipalities and school boards?

Hon Mr Laughren: No announcement I have made so far has required our partners out there to raise their taxes. At the same time, all of us in the public sector, whether we are in what is known as the broad public sector—in education, health care—at the municipal level or in the provincial government, are going to have to manage our affairs smarter, more efficiently and more productively than we have in the past. There is absolutely no question about that, because the money is not there to continue to spend the way the former government did in the last five years.

INVESTMENT FUND

Mr Elston: I have some interest in that last response, but I have another question of the Treasurer, who is finding new ways of spending money that is not his own.

In the Globe and Mail of Wednesday, November 20, there was an article quoting the Minister of Financial Institutions, a colleague of the Treasurer's, indicating they were looking at the Caisse de dépôt et placement du Québec as a model for spending money in Ontario to do the things they want to do but are afraid to confess to the public they are really doing. Would the Treasurer tell us if in fact the Caisse de dépôt model is going to be the one he is going to use to set up the Bob Rae Investment Corp?

Hon Mr Laughren: We announced some time ago—and I do not think it is a surprise to anyone—that we want to have some kind of pension-based investment fund in Ontario. At the same time, I do not believe you can just transpose a model from another jurisdiction to Ontario. I do not think it is that simple.

Second, if we do work out an arrangement with the public sector unions and their pension managers, it will be done in a co-operative, voluntary and collaborative way, not in an arbitrary way.

Mr Elston: I understand there are a number of documents in the Treasury domain and in other places that talk about taking as much as $300 million a year from the teachers' pension plans and from the Ontario public service employees' pension plan, and there have already been some arrangements made perhaps even to go so far as tendering for space with respect to setting up trading areas that might be used for the Caisse de dépôt model the Treasurer is considering.

I would like the Treasurer to tell us what discussions have been held with the teachers and the public servants to get their permission to use their pension money for his expenditure priorities.

Hon Mr Laughren: First of all, they would be the expenditure priorities of all the people of this province, not simply mine. All I can tell the member opposite is that we are working away trying to develop a model for an investment fund, because we think it is absolutely critical, as part of our economic renewal plans as we come out of this recession, to have a fund that is targeted for high value added and very progressive kinds of industries or sectors.

We have had some preliminary discussions with the public sector unions on this. There has been no decision made at all as to exactly what we are going to do or how much money is going to be in it. But the member opposite is quite right, there is paper around. We have had discussions with committees. There is no big secret about it, but at this point nothing definitive has been determined.

Mr Elston: We have seen this Treasurer telling us some stories about his fiscal management and his budgetary plan. He has already put off several hundreds of millions of dollars in capital expenditures until next year. He has already used Ontario Hydro to do the bidding of the government to deal with the Kapuskasing issue, which our friend and colleague the member for Cochrane North spoke about today in the House.

The Treasurer has already indicated that there are now other arrangements by which the pension funds that belong to those teachers and public service employees will be used to do his bidding. In fact, he is now offloading, along with the offloading to the municipalities and the school boards, the requirements to make public expenditures at the expense of those pensioners.

It seems to me the Treasurer should tell us what his full fiscal plan is. He has not yet provided us with a clarification of who is participating in making the expenditures for his government priorities. Will he do that?

Hon Mr Laughren: The member opposite is fundamentally wrong. We are not offloading on anybody. If and when the investment fund is set up—I certainly anticipate it will be, but it is not there yet. I have learned not to count my chickens in this business until the eggs are hatched, or whatever that expression is. I know members of the Liberal caucus are aware of that danger as well.

I do want to say to the member opposite that it is not a case of offloading. It would simply be a case of asking the people in the public sector unions if they wanted to share with us some of the surplus funds in their pension plans to do good work in the province of Ontario. Nobody is taking money away from them. They have to invest their money somewhere. We are just suggesting to them, "Would you like to join with us and invest in Ontario?" That is all.

RENT REGULATION

Mrs Marland: My question is to the Minister of Housing. I know she is aware that the rally held on the front steps of the Legislature this morning clearly illustrates the effects of the NDP government's two attempts at rent control legislation. These misguided attempts have had ramifications far beyond their goal of tenant protection. What should be clear to this government by now is that Bill 4 has been directly devastating to the construction and restoration industries as well as to landlords and tenants.

This morning it was readily apparent that many people in these industries have already lost or will soon lose their jobs as a result of this government. An employment impact study has indicated that as a result of Bills 4 and 121, 25,000 jobs will be lost in this province. It is estimated that as a result of Bill 4, in the restoration industry alone, 63% of the apartment renovation contracts have been cancelled. The result is that thousands have been laid off.

Before it is too late, will the Minister of Housing consider withdrawing Bill 121 and introducing in its place legislation which not only protects the tenants' rights but also preserves our housing stock and promotes a healthy and active construction industry?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The member is aware that Bill 4, to which she refers and to which people at this morning's rally referred, is a temporary piece of legislation. It was put in place by this government in order to provide time to consult around this province on the production of Bill 121, which is now before a legislative committee. I hope the member will understand that whatever holding action has been taken through Bill 4—and indeed it was a holding action which we brought about in Bill 4 in order to protect tenants during that period before we could put Bill 121 in place—will be lifted as soon as we can deal with Bill 121 in committee. I hope we will be able to pass the amendments before us in committee before Christmas and be able to proclaim the bill in the spring.

Mrs Marland: This minister should recognize, if she understands what this legislation has done in this province, that the holding action to which she just referred has in fact cost 25,000 jobs in this province. If the minister is not concerned about the impact of her legislation on 25,000 jobs, with the pink slips in here that were signed this morning by the people outside in the rally, then I wonder how she can profess to be interested in protecting jobs and the rights of workers. Frankly, to say it is a holding action is not acceptable.

The numbers get worse. For every $100 million worth of renovation or repair work that does not proceed, almost 3,100 person-years of employment are lost. These job losses are a direct result of this government's initiatives. What does the minister intend to do to stimulate the construction industry so that not only are jobs restored but the rental housing stock of Ontario is properly maintained?

I would like to send these pink slips over to the minister, through the help of one of the pages.

Hon Ms Gigantes: The member has brought to us, in a colourful way, her point. The rally this morning was impressive because it represented concerns of people who have been employed in construction, who have gone through a lot in this past year. There has been a serious recession which has seriously affected employment in the construction industry.

I am pleased to report that because of some of the actions of this government, particularly in terms of our production of assisted housing through co-operative ventures at the community level and also through non-profit housing, we have stimulated the construction industry at the local level and employment is beginning to rise. It is not good enough yet, but we believe when Bill 121 is in place no landlord or construction worker will have any reason to suggest—not just to feel but to suggest—there is any problem with rent control legislation in this province as far as employment is concerned.

Mrs Marland: I think it is worth noting the appropriateness of this minister's attire today. I would be wearing black too if I was responsible for these bills and this loss of jobs.

Hon Ms Gigantes: You are.

Mrs Marland: Exactly. These bills are not about protecting tenants. These bills are about taking away the rights of property owners and destroying jobs in this province. We can talk about the recession, and yes, I suggest to the minister respectfully that it is because of the recession that she should be even more concerned about the job losses directly as a result of her legislation. Surveys have indicated that more than 25,000 jobs were at immediate risk due to the government rent legislation and that by 1992, 52,000 person-years will be lost as a result.

How does the minister's caucus respond to these figures? They claim construction layoffs are a political ploy by landlords. I will tell the minister that if there is a political ploy here, it is not the landlords, it is the NDP government that is guilty.

Finally, I simply ask the minister, have she and her cabinet colleagues made any attempt to assist the industries to recover from the blows that will be dealt to them by Bill 121, or does she not care?

Hon Ms Gigantes: I hope the member will take time, as she sits in committee dealing with Bill 121, to read it, because as she does she will understand that this will provide a system which will not only protect tenants against unfair and unjustified rent increases, but also provide landlords in this province with the mechanism to look for capital increases if they need them, thus stimulating the renovation industry to which she refers and for which we have grave concern.

The member has to recognize that in a recession there is a responsibility on government to make sure that the 1.1 million tenant households in this province are not unfairly gouged by rent increases.

WORKERS' COMPENSATION BOARD

Mrs Witmer: I have a question for the Minister of Labour. His white paper on reform of the Labour Relations Act said that his objective was to protect workers, increase labour-management co-operation and foster economic renewal. If these are indeed his goals, and I would certainly agree with them wholeheartedly, then he should shelve his labour law agenda and deal with an issue that is genuinely in the interests of all—and I stress all—workers and businesses across this province, and that is the Workers' Compensation Board.

Is the minister prepared to withdraw his white paper? Is he prepared to set up a consultation process that involves all three partners and puts labour law in the context of competitiveness, and would he agree to get on with the extremely important job of solving the mess at the WCB?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I am not sure just what the white paper is. There is a discussion paper, I am sure, that the member refers to. But I want to assure her that the purpose is to try to involve workers in Ontario a little more closely in the decisions that affect them, and I think that is one of the most positive things we can do.

Mrs Witmer: I would like the minister to focus on the question I asked. I tell him that the third quarter report of the Workers' Compensation Board puts the unfunded liability at a staggering $9.9 billion, up from $9.1 billion in 1990 and far above the June projection of $9.4 billion—yes, billion.

The chairman has said he will not be able to retire the unfunded liability by the year 2014, as planned, without significant rate increases in 1993. This is something businesses and employees across Ontario cannot afford. The Treasurer has indicated he is committed to holding his deficit at $9.7 billion. I would like the minister to tell employees across this province what he is going to do to make sure they have jobs. What is he going to do to hold the unfunded liability at $9.9 billion?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: It would seem to me the question has been changed a bit. However, I will respond to it. The situation at the Workers' Compensation Board is one that started in 1972. The first actions to deal with any unfunded liability were not taken until 1984, when the plan was set out to try to deal with that unfunded liability by the year 2016. We are aware of what the current economic situation is doing to the Workers' Compensation Board as well, and the board is currently in the process of coming up with a number of options and suggestions that it may be able to use as the answers to see whether or not we can still meet the unfunded liability by the year 2016 or whether there will be any change in that. That is under active consideration right now and when the board has its suggestions, it will raise them with us and we will have a joint discussion on them as well.

Mrs Witmer: I am sure the people of Ontario are finding the minister's answers totally unacceptable. His government has an obligation to attract business investment and to create much-needed jobs in this province. The employer-financed unfunded liability is escalating at such an incredible and unbelievable rate that no one will want to invest in this province. The Workers' Compensation Board has a 14% decline in accidents, yet a 14% increase in benefit costs. Its revenues are down 5% and its administration costs are up 26%. If a business in this province were faced with these numbers, it would have to place a freeze on hiring and new policy development or it would go bankrupt.

Why is the minister now considering the inclusion of workplace stress? I can tell him the stress that is being created in this province by his workplace stress hearings is going to push business over the edge. Is the minister prepared to put these workplace stress hearings on hold and deal with the real problem at the WCB—the financial crisis?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I am sure, at least I think, the member understands that the Workers' Compensation Board operates on its own; it has an arm's-length relationship with the government.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I am doubly sure, having listened to the question that has just been asked, that the opposition members would not want us directly running the Workers' Compensation Board. But I can tell her also that the stress study that is currently being done is one that the board itself has initiated because of the concerns and problems that workers have with stress situations. They have not decided where they are going as yet, but they have initiated the study on workplace stress, and I think that is a good move.

Mrs Sullivan: The Minister of Labour does well to blush.

ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME

Mrs Sullivan: On Tuesday of this week, the Minister of Health indicated to the media that the previous government had made a decision not to participate in a fund to compensate haemophiliacs who contracted HIV through contaminated blood supplies. In fact, as we have heard, the previous minister had indicated to Hemophilia Ontario—

The Speaker: Order. Would the member take her seat, please. Would the member identify to whom she wishes to place the question? The Minister of Health is not in the chamber.

Mrs Sullivan: You are correct, Mr Speaker. I am addressing my question to the Treasurer of Ontario because, as the previous minister had indicated, this is a government-wide issue relating to compensation to victims of injury who suffered as a result of decisions made by the Canadian Blood Committee. The issue had in the past been referred to the Treasurer for action.

We have now seen in the response yesterday in a case before the Canadian courts how the Canadian courts themselves respond to questions of compensation to people who have contracted the AIDS virus, HIV, through medical procedures. Why then has the Treasurer said no to a compensation plan for Ontario haemophiliacs and others who contracted HIV through blood products, the security of which is vested in part with Ontario through the Canadian Blood Committee, when the federal government has urged provinces to participate? Why is he willing to accept court-induced settlements rather than being at the table right now and negotiating a reasonable and cost-effective solution to this matter?

Hon Mr Laughren: It is indeed a serious matter that the member raises. I recall the Minister of Health's response was that, first of all, Ontario was not acting alone in this regard, that other provinces were acting in the same way and that the real question was delivery of services to people, not compensation, the way the member is suggesting.

Mrs Sullivan: This is not a question only of delivery of services. For example, one of the first actions, if we are talking about delivery of services, was to arbitrarily remove from the formulary drugs that were used to treat AIDS patients. If we are talking about delivery of services, we are talking about arbitrary cuts made in health care delivery and I can provide a list of them. They seem to have been made for reasons imposed by the Treasurer in terms of cost cutting. They include arbitrary cuts in the drug benefit program, no flowing of funds yet to announced levels for funding for nursing homes, removing the billing cap for southern doctors who practise in the north, cutting laboratory fees without having any consultation with the laboratory association of whether those arbitrary cuts will indeed provide the savings he is asking for.

The Treasurer has been telling people—his decision has been leading to these cuts in services—about what services people will not longer get. We are very concerned about what steps he is taking to ensure people get the health care they need. Where is his plan for a cost-effective and universal health care system in Ontario that is not driven by the Treasurer and treasury board?

Hon Mr Laughren: I think the member opposite should appreciate the fact that what we are trying to do, for the first time in the history of this province, is to bring the growth in health care spending under control in a rational and sensitive way. I do not think any government or any party in this land has more credibility on the question of universal medicare than this party does. There is historical evidence of that.

I simply say to the member opposite that it is not possible to control the growth of the health care system without making some decisions that are going to offend some people, but I can assure her that it is our intention to make sure the health care system is managed in such a way that essential services will be maintained.

Mr Cousens: Mr Speaker, there was an understanding that the Minister of the Environment would be here by now and we have an important question for her. Is she coming or what is happening? Everybody else seems to be away.

The Speaker: Do you wish to stand down your question?

Mr Cousens: Is she going to be here? We have a question on Keele Valley and the environmental issues and we have no one else to ask.

Hon Mr Laughren: On a point of order, if I could treat it that way, Mr Speaker: It was my understanding that the minister would be here about two o'clock, but perhaps you could stand it down.

DRUG OFFENCES

Mr Runciman: In view of the absence of the Minister of the Environment, I am going to pose a question to the Solicitor General. To acknowledge Drug Awareness Week, the government this week distributed a booklet in French and English detailing a rather costly exercise that some of its parliamentary assistants engaged in to inform us of all the wonderful things it is doing to deal with illicit drug use in the province. Today we open up the newspapers to read that Metro Toronto has chalked up a record 331 bank robberies so far this year and the head of the police holdup squad puts the blame on drug abuse.

Other than this expensive little make-work project for parliamentary assistants, can the Solicitor General tell us what his government and he, as the province's chief law enforcement officer, are doing or proposing to do to assist police in their fight against illicit drug use?

Hon Mr Pilkey: We received the document that came to my desk just yesterday with great interest. I believe the work that members of Parliament and the broader community placed with respect to this very valuable document will act as a guiding light as to how we might improve the circumstances of policing and the community towards attacking this very unfortunate circumstance that pervades our society. We will, as a ministry, review that particular document to see how we might enhance the very strong efforts the police are already undertaking to combat that type of crime.

Mr Runciman: Other than patting themselves on the back, it does not appear the minister is doing much that is positive, or at least he does not know what he is doing. I am going to advise the minister of what his government is doing. It has cut back the OPP budget when crime is going through the roof. It has produced a self-congratulatory and probably meaningless report on drug treatment. It has undermined police morale by re-laying charges against PC Brian Rapson, by police board appointments like Susan Eng and the Peel region appointee who believes police consistently lie in court. That is what this government has done. It is not a very impressive record.

When is the minister going to do something positive—read my lips, positive—to meaningfully help our policemen and policewomen in their fight against escalating crime and drug abuse?

Hon Mr Pilkey: The men and women of the law enforcement agencies of this province are, every day they are on duty, combating crime in the streets and making our communities safer. We have indicated on previous occasions—

Interjections.

Mr Ruprecht: It's not them; it's you. Number one, it's you. You're so sickening. Do something.

The Speaker: Order, the member for Parkdale.

FISH AND WILDLIFE MANAGEMENT

Mr Jamison: My question today is for the Minister of Natural Resources. The minister is aware that the commercial fishery on Lake Erie has been confronted in recent years with increasing pressures on the industry through the quota system. This is the time of year when my constituents are looking to the ministry for indications as to its 1992 allocations. Would the minister please advise the House where we are in the allocation-setting process.

Hon Mr Wildman: The member has raised an issue of very great importance to the constituencies along the north shore of Lake Erie, to all members and their constituents. He is quite right. Next week we will be meeting for discussions with the industry and with the sports fishery interests to gather information and have their involvement in setting quotas and allocations on the basis of the assessments.

The smelt advisory committee that was set up has been very helpful. The field work was done in late summer and fall. The data collected is being analysed by a biologist who was chosen in concert with the commercial fishing industry. Further to that, we have expanded the partnership index gill net fishing to assess stocks in other areas of the lake. This is a very difficult process. You have to balance biological sustainability with the economic viability of the fishing industry, and that is why we are proceeding and trying to involve as many of these interested parties as possible.

Mr Jamison: For some time now the criticism has been that the people fishing commercially in Lake Erie have not been full partners in the allocation process. I realize the minister has made steps through the establishment of the smelt fishing advisory committee to involve the people fishing commercially in that process, and I thank him for that effort. However, has the minister been able to make any progress in expanding the role of other resource users?

Hon Mr Wildman: As I said, we have expanded the gill net assessment and we will be looking at how we can expand the process. The initial allocation meetings will be held next week and the commercial liaison committee will be in Aylmer on November 25. The east and west groups of the commercial fishermen will be meeting there together for the first time, and we will also be meeting the sports fishing liaison committee on November 27. We are going to share both the groups' initial quota allocation of 1992 and allow the commercial fishers to plan for the first few months of the next year.

AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY

Mr Bradley: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. The government of Ontario obviously continues not to understand the plight farmers are facing financially in this province. Indeed, the member for Lincoln had to be held hostage by a number of his constituents before he could get a meeting with anyone of significance on that side. But as the farm community prepares for the annual convention of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture next week, farmers are voicing their concerns about how the government now wants to tax back some of the assistance it has provided and force new costs on farmers in Ontario.

They are upset about the government's plans to increase farm labour costs through changes to the Labour Relations Act, and are upset about a leaked report which also recommended that the government place new taxes on pesticides and fertilizers to pay for the government's costs under the new gross revenue insurance plan and the net income stabilization account program.

How does the Minister of Agriculture and Food explain his government's plans to target new taxes and costs to the struggling farmers of this province at the very time they are in such dire financial straits?

Mrs Caplan: That's a good question.

Hon Mr Buchanan: One of the members has suggested that is a good question. I am not sure it is because it seems to be based on a whole lot of speculation and suggestions that have come from various sources that to my knowledge have no merit at all.

The changes that have been announced with regard to labour relations have minimal impact on agriculture. The farming and rural committee has been, and will be consulted on that. It does not pose a major problem for agriculture and I do not think it poses a major problem in the Niagara district which the member represents.

Mr Bradley: A close listening to the farmers of this province would reveal the opposite of what the Minister of Agriculture and Food has said this afternoon. While in opposition, many of the people who sit on the government benches today, who are NDP members, echoed the concerns of farmers about the crop insurance premiums and said they were too high. The Liberal government responded with a number of new reforms to lower the costs of that crop insurance.

Yesterday I received a call from a constituent—a farmer—in my part of the province who indicated he was upset about the government's changes to the crop insurance formula, increasing the price of premiums for peaches—the insurance on peaches—by almost 50%, with the cost of premiums increasing in this case by over $1,200. This new cost in itself is more than many Niagara farmers will receive under the minister's announcement of new funding last fall.

Will the minister assure farmers that they will not become the sacrificial lambs in the government's failing attempts to manage its finances, and will the minister promise that the range of policy changes being contemplated by his ministry and by other ministries of the NDP government will not be implemented without full consultation with the farm community and they will not impose any new costs or taxes to farmers without new funding to offset these costs?

Hon Mr Buchanan: Congratulations to the member on his new appointment. I want to assure him we will not impose any new regulations or taxes that are going to affect agriculture adversely without recognizing the impact they will have. We have been working hard to provide assistance in the form of emergency aid and the long-term safety net programs we have funded this year.

On the announcement that came out of Ottawa today, when we looked at totalling what our share will be in Ontario, it looks to me as if the Niagara region is going to receive somewhere between $3.5 million and $5 million of the horticulture money being made available in Ontario. I think that is good news for the farmers of Ontario.

The crop insurance revisions are made from time to time. The crop insurance plan is based on each commodity and we try to have each plan actuarially sound so the premiums cover the losses over a period of time. Many of the premiums have been reduced in different commodities this year because there was a surplus in the fund. The premiums tend to fluctuate, depending on what the claims are.

The member suggested there will be an increase. It is due to claims or due to the fact that the program needs additional money in order to make it actuarially sound. It should not have that adverse a consequence on the tender fruit industry. If it does, in fact, we are looking at other programs to provide assistance.

LANDFILL SITE

Mr Cousens: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Citizens are enraged at the minister's desire and order to expand the Keele Valley landfill site, pushing the Keele Valley landfill site beyond its original planned capacity and planning to use it in future without a full environmental assessment.

By enlarging this site, this government is increasing the contaminating life of the site. This minister is increasing the pressure on the leachate underneath. In turn, the leachate increases pressure on the clay liner, the only thing that separates this landfill site from the ground water underneath. There is not enough clay from present sources to handle the future expansion.

The question I have relates to this environmental time bomb that the minister is creating with the expansion of Keele Valley. The clay liner is already half permeated. Can the minister tell this House what impact the enlarged Keele Valley landfill site will have on the ground water?

Hon Mrs Grier: Precisely because of my concern that there ought not to be any impact of this on the environment, in my order to Metropolitan Toronto, which is the operator of this landfill disposal site, I gave a directive about a series of studies that have to be undertaken in order that we can assure ourselves that in fact this is not a time bomb. I understand our discussions with Metropolitan Toronto are proceeding, and it is my hope that those studies can begin as soon as possible.

Mr Cousens: Bill 143, the bill the minister is bringing before this House and which we are debating next week, is an act of desperation by this government. Keele Valley is on the same parcel of land as the headwaters of the Don River. We have just gone through Save the Rouge Valley System and, fortunately, enough of us have been able to take that battle to a crescendo that we have something happening there. But the issue now for the east branch of the Don River, which shares the same property as the Keele Valley landfill site, creates the question which has to be answered as to what the impact of the increased size of this landfill site on the future of the Don River will be.

Will this minister agree to have a full environmental assessment on the expansion of Keele Valley and examine the impact it is going to have on the Don River?

Hon Mrs Grier: As I think this member indicated in his very helpful comments on Bill 143 in the House a couple of days ago, the purpose of the Environmental Assessment Act is to consider alternatives. The studies that will look at what is actually leaching, what the effect of that leachate will be and what is contained in that leachate are going to be done under my emergency order or under the Environmental Protection Act or under the Environmental Assessment Act.

The member is well aware that we have to find some place to dispose of the waste of the greater Toronto area when sites reach capacity. He is also well aware that a number of things can happen that can prevent our needing to do that. It is my profound hope that we will not have to expand Keele Valley because we will have a long-term site up and operating as soon as possible. I invite the member to co-operate with me in accelerating that process so that we do not need to even contemplate the doomsday scenario that he is so fond of painting.

ONTARIO STUDENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Ms Haeck: My question is to the Minister of Colleges and Universities. As the minister knows, students and parents alike have a great interest in OSAP. Can the minister comment on the consultation he has had with the post-secondary community, in particular with students, on the issue of OSAP?

Hon Mr Allen: I thank the member for the question. For a number of years, the students and indeed the university community called for a comprehensive review of the student assistance program in this province, and I was very happy to be able to accede to that request and set up a very comprehensive panel last spring, a general advisory committee, to deal with that question. It represented every single facet of the university system and, in particular, every student group in the system was well represented on it; for example, the Ontario Federation of Students, the Ontario Graduate Association, the Canadian Organization for Part-time Students, the Ontario Community College Student Presidents' Association and so on. Every student group in the system was very actively represented and made very good suggestions for the review.

That review was fed back into the system for response by October 15, and we are currently examining in detail the responses of the system to put forward a package for this year's consideration in the funding of the system in response to the tuition issues.

Ms Haeck: What types of improvements can be facilitated? I know all the members of this House would really like to see these improvements include the access for underrepresented students.

Hon Mr Allen: As the member knows, the entire purpose of OSAP is to facilitate enhanced access for all those groups that are underrepresented in the system. There is a full range of proposals that have come from, among others, students in the system in order to improve that access for those groups.

I must say that one has to consider all those in the context of the fiscal climate. Some things that are proposed will be possible and others will not be. But we are winnowing our way through those, and I certainly assure the member that access for low-represented groups in the system will be better with the new proposals that come forward and are implemented in the coming reforms than was the case in the past.

DRUG OFFENCES

Mr Ruprecht: I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, whose name still does not appear on all the elevating devices in Ontario, I might add.

All indicators, including the minister's own report, show that the illicit drug trade is escalating in Toronto. In some instances, she is aware that the police note that owners of licensed establishments are turning a blind eye to the carrying out of illegal drug-related activities on their premises. Does the minister plan to take any steps to see to it that owners of licensed establishments think twice before permitting illegal activities on their premises?

Hon Ms Churley: At first, for some reason I thought the question was on elevators.

The question is actually an important one and a good one. I know that in Toronto and in other urban areas in Ontario in particular there are pockets where there are real problems, where there are unscrupulous people opening up bars and where there is illegal trade going on. In fact, by coincidence, I met with the chairman of the LLBO just this morning to talk about it. I have had several meetings with various community groups, some municipal councillors and the LLBO to talk about solutions to this problem, and we are working together to come up with some solutions.

Mr Ruprecht: I appreciate that statement very much, of course, except that it is in the field of the Solicitor General. Those people are doing absolutely nothing when it comes to maintaining a police force that is effective and fighting the illicit drug trade in Toronto and probably in other places in Ontario as well. When is the minister going to get up and tell this House specifically what she will do besides telling us we have one report after another report in which recommendations are all the same? She should do something and she is not.

My question is very simple. The report that was given to us and to the minister about the drug prevention task force of Metro council—she received that report also in February—recommended, "Owners who permit drug trafficking or other drug offences on their premises should have their licences revoked or suspended." Is she prepared to stand up in the House today and tell us that yes, she is willing to implement that recommendation, or at least tell us that people in the community where the illicit drug trade and licensed establishments are will have the right to say to the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario, "Please do something about these establishments"? Is the minister willing to do that today and stop mealy-mouthing and telling us something about another report?

Hon Ms Churley: I can say that we are doing something about it. There are a lot of concerned citizens' groups out there that I have met with. The board has been working overtime lately and working very hard, and it is involved in hearings about some of these premises. In fact, there are some premises that have been closed down on an interim basis while waiting for the hearings because the problems have been so severe. There have been some places that have been closed down permanently because of the problems.

It is a concern of mine and of the LLBO. In fact, action has been taken, and as I said earlier, we are continuing to meet. We are looking at the legislation and we are even looking at the Municipal Act. We are trying to figure out tighter controls, and I will continue to work on that. If the member has some ideas as well, I would be happy to hear from him on that.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mrs Cunningham: My question is for the Minister of Colleges and Universities. I know the minister is probably very much aware that before the standing committee on finance and economic affairs we had words again from the universities of this province, from both the Ontario Confederation of University Faculty Associations and the Council of Ontario Universities, telling us about their dilemma with regard to planning under these very difficult circumstances we face in Ontario.

We have already asked the minister if he would let us know about the money for pay equity. We do not know about that. I asked him earlier in the year if he had considered a new tuition fee policy, not just relating to the level of grant increase, but a brand-new policy, so that could be part of the recovery plan as explained by the universities, with support from the students, in these very serious times.

Today I am going to quote from the brief:

"Faced with a serious constraint on the grant revenue it can flow, and assuming existing financial aid programs can be adapted to protect against real hardship, COU believes that the government must revisit its past policy of constraining fee increases to the rate of growth in grant income."

The Speaker: Would the member place her question, please.

Mrs Cunningham: I will, Mr Speaker. Will the minister revisit his past policy of constraining these fee increases and will he be announcing in the very near future what his fee increase policy will be in both regards?

Hon Mr Allen: The member opposite has a deep concern about these issues, as always. She is aware of the general fiscal climate in which we are all struggling. I certainly feel very deeply for any person who is an executive officer trying to manage any of our broader public sector institutions at the present time. It is not an easy time for any of us.

I want to say with reference to another point the member made that this government is the first in Ontario that has begun looking at multi-year budgeting as a possible model for dealing with our broader public sector responsibilities. It will take some time to resolve that problem.

With regard to the pay equity question, those institutions know what their percentage increment will be for the past year in that regard.

Coming to the centre of the question, we will be making the transfer announcements reasonably soon. We will also be coupling that with a fee announcement. I hope that will satisfy at that time the member's interest and concern.

Mrs Cunningham: I am really more concerned about it satisfying the needs of the students and the universities across this province.

In the last few weeks I have received copies of letters that the presidents have sent out to all their departments within the universities describing the kinds of changes that will take place, the job losses that are being experienced, the increases in enrolment they are expecting and their dilemma as to how they are going to handle this.

Today, as we ask the minister again, we cannot afford to wait any longer, because it now becomes a planning issue. If the secondary school students in this province are going to be denied access because the professors will not be there to teach them, or if the minister has disallowed any really serious thought to allowing students to pay more tuition, I think we need to know that immediately.

Mr Sorbara: Get to the heart of the question.

Mrs Cunningham: I will get to the heart of the question with direction from my colleague in the Liberal back benches, who may soon be in the front benches.

The Speaker: Would the member place her question, please.

Interjections.

Mrs Cunningham: I will ask the question, Mr Speaker. I cannot even think some days.

Can the minister advise the House today what percentage increase post-secondary institutions will receive both in transfer payments and in tuition fees?

Hon Mr Allen: I am afraid the answer is no, with all respect to the member.

MARKETING BOARDS

Mr Hansen: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. He has just returned from the GATT negotiations in Geneva and the European Community's commission in Brussels. The farmers in my riding and across Ontario are very concerned about the results of these negotiations and future supply management in Ontario. The member for St Catharines has also been waiting quite a while for this answer here.

Can the minister tell the House what he hopes to achieve and what the prospects are of reaching a GATT agreement on agriculture? Also, can the minister tell the House what steps he is planning to take next?

Hon Mr Buchanan: It is true that I led a small delegation to Geneva and Brussels to demonstrate Ontario's support for the Canadian balanced position on agriculture. We believe that reduction of export subsidies on grains and oilseeds and the preservation of article XI, which allows us to continue to have supply management, are very important to the agricultural industry in Ontario and indeed in Canada. The reason for making that journey was to demonstrate to our trading partners Ontario's support, and indeed all provincial support, for the federal government.

The farm leaders who went with me had an excellent opportunity to talk to the negotiators themselves. They had very valuable input and were allowed to ask questions of the other countries. I think it is very important for farmers to have that input to the negotiators, and they had an excellent opportunity to do that.

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude his remarks, please.

Hon Mr Buchanan: In terms of where the negotiations are—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Buchanan: —the GATT negotiations appear to have entered a final phase. There is a lot of optimism that the GATT round will conclude before Christmas, including an agreement on agriculture.

The Speaker: Would the minister take his seat, please. The time for oral questions has expired.

Mr Mancini: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: It was very obvious what just took place a moment or two ago. The minister refused to make a statement in the Legislature about his trip to Geneva. He allowed his colleague—

The Speaker: Would the member for Essex South take his seat, please.

Mr Mancini: It is a question of vital public importance. The whole thing should be ruled out of order.

The Speaker: I asked the member to take his seat.

Mr Mancini: We are asking you to defend us.

The Speaker: The member does not have a point of order.

Mr Mancini: We are asking you to defend us against the government. We are losing our rights here.

The Speaker: The member does not have a point of order. A question was placed, to which an opportunity for response was given. It was a lengthy response which denied the member for Lincoln an opportunity for his supplementary.

Mr Mancini: He denied our right to ask an important question. That is what he denied.

The Speaker: Order. I ask the member to take his seat and come to order. The member for Scarborough North.

Mr Curling: Could I ask for a ruling on this, Mr Speaker? I am asking for unanimous consent that I could ask my question.

The Speaker: I will place the question. Is there unanimous consent for the member for Scarborough North—no? All right. I draw to members' attention that—

Interjections.

The Speaker: I ask the House to come to order.

Mr Mancini: If you wanted order, Mr Speaker, you should not have allowed what happened five minutes ago.

1450

LEGISLATIVE PAGES

The Speaker: I would like to draw to members' attention that today is indeed the last day for our current group of pages to serve us. I would hope all members would appreciate, as the Speaker has appreciated, that these pages have indeed served the members and served the House with distinction for the past while and they deserve our appreciation and thanks.

HOME GARMENT WORKERS

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I would like a point of order to correct the record, Mr Speaker: Yesterday, in responding to a question from one of my colleagues, the member for Fort York, who raised the issue of the treatment of home workers, I inadvertently used the word "homemakers." I want to correct that. I meant "home workers" myself.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'ADMINISTRATION FINANCIÈRE

Mr Laughren moved first reading of Bill 156, An Act to amend the Financial Administration Act / Projet de loi 156, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'administration financière.

Motion agreed to.

Hon Mr Laughren: These amendments to the Financial Administration Act set out the responsibilities of the Treasurer in managing the financial position of the province. The act has not been substantially revised since the early 1980s. Major changes in the province's borrowing program require the use of contemporary borrowing mechanisms to minimize borrowing costs. Our borrowing program now focuses on the public capital markets, largely resulting from the decision to cease using the public sector pension plans as our main source of capital.

Proposed amendments to borrowing policies will enable the province to take advantage of opportunities to reduce debt-servicing costs and manage risk. Amendments to financial management practices will provide the additional flexibility needed to manage a large borrowing program. Changes to the province's investment program will allow it to utilize the services of non-bank financial institutions such as trust companies and credit unions by making them eligible for investment of liquid reserves. The amendments will also enact an accounting framework for the new capital fund announced in the 1991 budget.

These amendments will bring the Financial Administration Act more in line with existing financial practices and procedures and increase the province's ability to effectively manage its financial position.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Hon Mr Cooke: Mr Speaker, there was a request yesterday from the member for Brampton North that we give unanimous consent to have the late show on Monday when the Minister of the Environment can be here, rather than tonight. If that is acceptable to all members of the Legislature, that is fine with us.

The Speaker: Do we have unanimous agreement? Agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

REGULATED HEALTH PROFESSIONS ACT, 1991, AND COMPANION LEGISLATION

LOI DE 1991 SUR LES PROFESSIONS DE LA SANTÉ RÉGLEMENTÉES ET LES PROJETS DE LOI QUI L'ACCOMPAGNENT

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for third reading of Bill 43, the Regulated Health Professions Act, 1991, and its companion legislation, Bills 43-64 / Projet de loi 43, Loi sur les professions de la santé réglementées et les projets de loi, 43 à 64, qui l'accompagnent.

Mrs Marland: I am happy to have the opportunity to briefly comment on these health professions bills today. Before doing that, however, I want to compliment the member for Simcoe West on his participation in the process of the public hearings, in conducting these bills through the committee. He was at that point the newly appointed Health critic, and we have all been very impressed and very grateful for the thoroughness with which he took his responsibility in listening to the many delegations both from many public organizations of the professions and from individuals who had very serious and very important comments to make on this legislation. I know that for the member for Simcoe West it has been a particularly heavy and onerous job, but we do commend him for the thoroughness and the commitment he took to that responsibility.

I want to comment on the legislation where it pertains to whether or not people who have acquired a doctorate in philosophy would be able to use the term "doctor," to be addressed as "doctor." Under the legislation, only dentists, medical doctors, optometrists, psychologists and chiropractors are allowed to use the title of "doctor." Nurses, pharmacists, speech-language pathologists, audiologists, physiotherapists and occupational therapists are among the accredited PhD health professionals who will not be allowed to use this title.

Our Health critic, the member for Simcoe West, introduced an amendment reflecting the right of PhD-prepared individuals—from recognized academic institutions of course—to use their earned title of “doctor.” We were extremely disappointed that the government used its majority on the standing committee on social development to vote down our amendment.

I just cannot understand how this socialist government does not appreciate what academic degrees are all about. If someone goes to university and studies for all the years it takes to achieve an academic degree, and it happens to be one that has a doctorate at the end of it, for the government to say these people are not entitled to use that degree simply is totally abhorrent to me. I cannot understand how they wish, through these bills, to differentiate between the traditional doctors of medicine or dentistry or doctors of chiropractic and doctors of psychology.

As far as I am concerned, if you earn a PhD and it is from an accredited academic institution, you have earned it. There is no differentiation. What is the difference between a doctor of medicine or a doctor of chiropractic or a doctor of psychology and other people who earn their doctorate in other specialties and other fields? It is totally ignorant on the part of this socialist government to denounce the right, in my opinion, for people who have a PhD to be addressed as “doctor.” I think it shows the smallness of the thinking of the socialist government that it would even want to debate or discuss this particular issue. It is significant to those people who have acquired that level of education.

I frankly do not know if there is a member of the socialist government caucus who has a PhD. I know there is a member who has a doctorate in medicine. If there is a member of the NDP caucus who has a PhD I am not aware of it. I stand corrected. Of course, and I appreciate it, there is the member for Hamilton West who is the Minister of Colleges and Universities and Minister of Skills Development. He is an individual member of the NDP caucus I personally have admired for the six years I have been in this Legislature. I apologize to the minister for not recalling that. I know very well he has a PhD. I also respect him very much on a personal basis because of the kind of individual he is as a representative in this Legislature.

The member for Hamilton West is someone who knows better than anyone else in this House who does not have a PhD how much work it took for him to achieve that. I am sure that if anyone in this House recognizes what the PhD represents in terms of commitment to education on a personal basis, it is the minister. I am sure that if I could get the minister in a private corner he might share with me the concern that this legislation before us today does not permit other professionals in health care service in this province to use the title of “doctor” if they have a PhD outside the areas I have already addressed.

To end that subject, it is pretty small potatoes for this government to make an issue where they could not accept the fact that anyone with a PhD in any area of specialty should automatically be allowed, if they choose, to use the title of “doctor.” Funnily enough, I am married to somebody who chooses not to use that title. It is a personal choice. I think that if people have that academic degree, it is up to them to have the choice to use that title.

I wish this government would recognize excellence in education. This government has decided to do away with the Ontario scholarships that recognize excellence in academic achievement for grade 13 students across this province. It is very hard for us to understand where we are headed with this socialist government and its attitude towards higher learning, post-secondary education and education generally. The very fact that it does not think it should set goals for individuals to work towards and strive to achieve in education, such as Ontario scholarships for grade 13 students, I think speaks of this government in a way I would not be proud of were I a government member. If we do not recognize excellence and give young people something to strive for, we are saying it is okay to be mediocre.

I know this government's argument on the issue of recognizing people with education is that it makes it too competitive, that there are always going to be people with ability and there are always going to be people without ability. That is absolutely true. But in the real world, as soon as those students leave their academic institutions, even if we are talking about secondary school, they are in competition. We are all in the world of competition, so we might as well be in it in our secondary school years where we set goals and work towards achieving them, and if we are able to achieve those goals, have the recognition we have earned.

I do not have a PhD, and I doubt very much whether that is a level of academic achievement of which I would be capable. But I respect very much those people who have worked and studied very hard for a lot of years to achieve that degree. The title and recognition is due to them, I say with respect.

The other health care profession bills I want to speak about are Bills 47 to 52. The bill in particular I have some concern about is Bill 50. Bill 50 is the Denturism Act. As a result of extensive consultation with the Ontario Dental Association and the public committee hearings that were conducted, our party actually introduced an amendment to the Denturism Act restricting denturists from fitting or dispensing partial dentures except on the order or prescription of a member of the Royal College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario. We believe a diagnosis by a dentist would allow for the most appropriate treatment plan. We are also concerned that those seeking dental services would see the denturist as the primary provider of dental services.

The Ontario Dental Association presented the standing committee on social development with strong evidence demonstrating the importance of a dental diagnosis in prescribing partial dentures. We are extremely disappointed that the NDP and the Liberal committee members voted against our amendment. I think even more important is that when the member for Simcoe West asked that this matter be referred to the advisory council in clause-by-clause deliberations, that was not accepted either.

In a submission to the standing committee on social development, the Royal College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario recommended that “the status quo be maintained until the advisory council can fulfil its stated function under Bill 43 to obtain information from interested parties and advise the minister on whether denture therapists should be afforded the right to fit removable partial dentures without supervision."

The irony is that there is a provision for this process to take place. According to section 12 of Bill 43, "The minister shall refer to the advisory council any issue within the matters described in clauses 11(a) to (d) that a council or person requests the minister to refer to the advisory council unless, in the minister's opinion, the request is not made in good faith or is frivolous or vexatious." I believe the matter of partial dentures falls within the parameters of section 12 that I have just read, and I would appreciate it very much if the minister would respond to this matter immediately.

The reason this is so significant is that we are not questioning the ability of the denturists to fit and make dentures for patients, but we are questioning how much further their ability should be extended. Frankly, when you are talking about the emplacement of partial dentures that are dependent on the permanent teeth remaining in the mouth, you are dealing with an entirely different sphere of practice. You are dealing with the kind of knowledge that is required to know and to be able to interpret whether the teeth remaining in the mouth are in a fit condition to support a partial denture being attached to them. Even though they are removable, partial dentures are attached and dependent on the permanent teeth remaining in the mouth.

What this is allowing denturists to do is to come into the area of dental practice for which the dentists receive entirely far more in-depth training before they are allowed to work on permanent teeth in the mouth. The kind of training, I would respectfully suggest, that dentists receive in order to practise dentistry does not compare to the kind of training denturists require. That is fair because in the past denturists have only been permitted to make dentures. They are not involved with the permanent teeth, the balance of which may remain in a patient's mouth. It is an entirely different sphere in the practice of dentistry. It is rather scary stuff to think that this next step is being permitted to denturists without the seven years of training and in-depth medical and physiological knowledge that a dentist is required to have before he or she can practise dentistry and the treatment of teeth in the mouth.

I hope the Minister of Health will see fit to refer this matter, as I have asked and as our Health critic has asked, to the advisory council and let it decide in an independent way what the outcome of this very significant question will be. It is very significant to the future of the dental health of patients in this province. If the next step is that we allow denturists to do this, is the next item the fact that we are going to allow denturists to go even more into the general area of the practice of general dentistry?

General dentistry is something that is very important to the total health of our bodies. So often in diagnosis the knowledge of the dentist who is trained through years in medical subjects associated with the practice of dentistry enables him to diagnose other problems, because the mouth itself is a great mirror of the health of our total body. That is very important.

On the aspect of the bills having to do with denturists, I want to note that the member for Simcoe West, our Health critic, also put forth an amendment proposing that the Regulated Health Professions Act be amended to extend the use of prescribed forms of energy to dentistry. We are pleased in fact that the government introduced comparable amendments we were able to support.

Finally, something else that is important to all the people in this province under all aspects of health care is Bill 55, the Medicine Act. Currently the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario council includes representatives from each of the five faculties of medicine in Ontario. The Medicine Act is going to reduce that number to three. The Health critic for the Progressive Conservative Party introduced an amendment to retain the current representation of five academic appointments, one from each medical school, on the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario council.

Over the years, the academic appointees to the college council have offered a unique and valuable perspective on CPSO activities. They bring administrative, educational and professional expertise to the college. The faculty representatives also give the college ready access into the system of educating physicians, and this system varies in each medical faculty. They provide feedback from the college directly to medical faculties and are often critical in effecting change in medical education.

We share the disappointment of the medical community that the NDP members of the committee voted against our amendment. There is nothing more important to all of us than the education of our future doctors in this province, and that was not very much to ask. Why not just keep the status quo of the five representatives of the five faculties of medicine? It was a very simple request, but there again the socialist members, for whatever reason, failed to understand and recognize the significance and the importance of that.

No wonder people are deciding not to go into medicine or attend our medical schools, for all the other areas of problems that I have addressed in the past about how the socialist government is now treating physicians and doctors in this province. But here we have an intrusion into the very beginning of their opportunities in education. No wonder they are not going in there. No wonder they are going other places, not only to learn medicine but to practise medicine.

I have appreciated the opportunity to place these comments on the record. There are many other areas of these bills I would have liked to have an opportunity to comment on, but as usual, because of the last-minute pressure of business brought into this House by the government, I have no time or opportunity to make further comment.

Mr Sola: Due to the fact that I substituted on this committee several times, I thought it appropriate for me to make a few comments, particularly in regard to one brief that was presented to the committee in Sault Ste Marie by a person from my home town of Sudbury: Diane Petrucka from the Sudbury Nurses for Life organization. I just want to put down some of the concerns she expressed to the committee, which I understand have not been met in the final legislation. I wonder if the government could reconsider and incorporate these concerns into the final bill. I would like to quote from her brief:

"We believe that the destruction of human life is in direct contradiction to the moral and ethical responsibilities of our profession. We believe the definition of nursing demands that nurses utilize the scientific information and skills they have before them to effect life and health. We recognize the value of and support research beneficial to all humanity done with consideration for the dignity and with the full and informed consent of the individual involved."

What these nurses want for themselves is freedom of choice. The people wanting the abortions have the choice of either having the abortion or not, but the way legislation in Ontario is today, nurses do not have an option. It is interesting that doctors, who are mostly male, have the option of performing this procedure or refusing to perform this procedure and referring the patient to some other doctor who will do it, but the nurses who must take care of the patients before and after the fact do not have this option, and as we know, the nursing profession is mostly female. It comes to the point where these nurses are having a battle with their conscience and are also suffering intimidation at work and being threatened with the loss of their job if they do not succumb to going against their conscience.

I would like to point out that most people who oppose this support the principle of a woman's right to control her own body, and I think very few people are opposed to that, but by opposing the provision the Nurses for Life want, the government and the legislation prevent these nurses, these women, from controlling their own mind and conscience. It makes it difficult for them to live with their own conscience.

It is interesting that even in the military during times of war there is such a thing as conscientious objection for people who do not believe in using arms, whether in offensive or defensive measures. But in the nursing profession we do not allow for a conscientious objector, and somehow this seems to be contradictory to me. In essence, because most nurses are women, the fact that these nurses cannot avail themselves of the right to refuse to assist at abortions—they are being discriminated against.

I think a further thing that should be borne in mind, with the recent headlines about provisions being considered for dying with dignity and whether euthanasia should be allowed in some form or other, is that this dilemma will pose problems to people who have similar concerns at the other end of the scale. Abortion is at the beginning of life; euthanasia deals with the termination of life. I think there will be more and more pressure for people who have difficulty accepting these sorts of procedures to assist at them.

I would ask the government to reconsider in this legislation, either in Bill 43 or in Bill 57, to include some provision for a conscientious objector clause. Many other jurisdictions already have similar clauses in effect without affecting the quality of their health care, and I wonder why Ontario could not be at the forefront in providing protection for its nurses, rather than lagging at the rear.

In conclusion, I would just like to read the legislation from the state of Texas, which is the preferred legislation for the nurses as far as the brief they presented in Sault Ste Marie is concerned.

"A physician, nurse, staff member or employee of a hospital or other health care facility who objects to performing or participating, directly or indirectly, in an abortion procedure may not be required to perform or participate, directly or indirectly, in an abortion procedure...."

"A hospital or health care facility may not discriminate in any manner against a physician, nurse, staff member or employee or against an applicant for such positions who refuses to perform or participate in an abortion procedure. No physician, nurse, staff person or employee shall be discriminated against for their willingness to participate in abortion procedures at other facilities. An educational institute may not discriminate against applicants for admission or employment as students, interns or residents because of their attitudes concerning abortion."

"A person whose rights under this act are violated may sue a hospital, health care facility or educational institute in district court in the county where the hospital, facility or institution is located to enjoin further violations of this act and including, but not limited to, administration or reinstatement of employment with back pay plus 10% interest and any other relief necessary to ensure compliance with provisions of this act."

In conclusion, I think these nurses, although opposed to abortion, are not trying to prevent access to abortion for those people who feel it is their right and want such a procedure. They are just asking for protection for people like themselves who have a conscientious objection, who have a moral viewpoint that does not allow them to participate in such procedures. I think people of such strong conviction should not be put in the position of either going against their conscience or losing their job.

Mr Beer: I would like to make a few comments by way of closing for our party on this bill, or indeed on all these bills.

I want to say in the first instance that I think it is something all members can take a good deal of pride in, in terms of what has been accomplished. We should reflect back on just how long it has taken for this to come forward. I know several of my colleagues have commented on that, but I think it is significant and important to underline that Health ministers from all three parties have been very involved in the beginnings of this review, the development of the legislation and finally the presentation of the legislation to the Legislature. Now we are at the point where we are closing on third reading.

Yesterday I had the opportunity to note the important contribution which the former Minister of Health, the member for Oriole, made to this whole process. I also want to recognize other ministers of Health, indeed the present minister, because I think in the committee discussions we have had an opportunity to look at the legislation in a non-partisan way, as members of the three parties, as laypeople, and we have tried to struggle with the various briefs and presentations that were made to us and to make further changes. Out of that, I think we have a better piece of legislation than we had when we received it as a committee. I think the way in which that committee worked, under the guidance of the Chair, the member for Oriole, was a good indication that we all wanted to try to make sure that, on the one hand, we were going to protect the public interest and, on the other, we were going to expand access to a variety of health professions. I think we have achieved that with this legislation.

On behalf of our party, I would like to thank a number of people in particular with whom we worked very closely, both in government and then as members of the committee: first of all, Linda Bohnen and Alan Burrows from the ministry. They were with us through all the hearings of the committee and we greatly appreciated their counsel. We may not always have agreed with everything they said, but certainly we recognized the professionalism with which they said it and, without them, it would have been a much more difficult process. I would also like to thank Mark Spakowski, from the legislative counsel's office. It was his task to try to make sense of our words and put them into appropriate form for amendments. The clerk of the committee, Lynn Mellor, had the very difficult task of trying to sort out all those who wished to come before the committee and ensuring that we had a process that was going to be fair for all those who wanted to participate. Last but certainly not least, we all owe a great debt of gratitude to Alan Schwartz, who of course prepared the original report and started his work some eight or nine years ago.

This took a long period of time, but I think it was important in the end that it took that time, because what we have now is something that very definitely moves us forward in the regulation of health professions by adding a number of new professions to that group and just updating the whole process. Somebody mentioned that one of the acts we were dealing with and bringing up to date had originally been set forth in 1925.

As I said before, I think the critical part of this legislation is in balancing the public interest with expanding access to various health professions. It is interesting to go back to the mandate of the Health Professions Legislation Review and simply note that the mandate the then Minister of Health gave to Mr Schwartz in November 1982 asked him to make recommendations, in the form of draft legislation, with respect to which health professions should be regulated, updating and reforming the Health Disciplines Act, devising a new structure for all legislation governing the health professions and settling outstanding issues involving several professions. If we look at what we have accomplished in the committee and brought forward to this House, we can see that the goals and objectives set out in 1982 have been largely met.

As a number of members have mentioned, and I want to make a couple of comments myself, no piece of legislation, and certainly no omnibus bill with all the other bills, that has come forward in the process we are engaged in will be perfect. None the less, the important thing is that we have been able to reconcile most of the differences of opinion and have set up what is perhaps, going beyond this legislation, a most important body—the advisory council.

The council will be able to hear various questions put to it by the minister and will be able to work with the new colleges around areas that are still in dispute or perhaps new areas where there may be problems. Indeed the advisory council will have the role of being able to see whether other professions can be brought within the ambit of the legislation at some point in the future. This is really going to move us much further than where we are presently.

A number of concerns have been left with the government. I want to look at several of the acts briefly, just to note those for the record.

J'aimerais aussi souligner l'importance de deux choses. Je pense que, comme les députés le comprennent très bien, le gouvernement d'aujourd'hui, comme le gouvernement passé, a essayé de développer une gamme de services en langue française pour la population francophone. Je pense qu'avec ce qu'on vient de faire aujourd'hui, en effet, ça va mettre à la disposition de la communauté francophone maintenant plus de services en français, comme nous en aurons aussi en anglais. Donc, c'est très important pour la communauté francophone comme pour la communauté anglophone.

Une question un peu à côté mais quand même importante, je pense, c'est cette question des titres en langue française. Nous avons eu une discussion avec les avocats sur la manière exacte dont il faut procéder avec les titres. Ce qui est intéressant c'est que, après la discussion en comité, j'ai eu plusieurs appels et lettres de différentes personnes disant qu'on espérait bien que, entre le Québec, l'Ontario, le Nouveau-Brunswick et le gouvernement fédéral, on puisse continuer à travailler sur la façon d'exprimer en français les titres, où on va mettre les titres masculins et féminins et si on peut trouver un système global.

Alors, je sais qu'on a eu une discussion fort intéressante, mais pour la communauté francophone ça reste toujours une question. J'espère bien que le gouvernement va continuer à discuter de la meilleure façon d'exprimer les titres des lois et des projets de loi dans les deux langues.

I will briefly note several questions that arose in terms of Bill 43, the omnibus bill. First is the harm clause. As has been mentioned, my party provided an amendment to bring this clause back into the legislation. We worked very hard with those in the unregulated professions and with the members of the other parties to express this so that we made sure exemptions for those groups we did not want to involve or implicate were clear. I believe we have done that in this legislation. For those who were unregulated and had concerns, like the social workers, teachers and clergy, this legislation does what it set out to do. They may proceed and do all of the things they have been doing in the normal course of their activities. That is important.

We shared as well some of the concerns around the protection of title and felt there should be provision for those with PhDs working in the various institutions to be able to use the term "doctor." We understand, as has already been mentioned, that the minister may consider allowing, via regulation, those with PhDs in institutions to use the title "doctor." It is still our contention that if somebody has earned a PhD, he should have the right to refer to himself as "doctor" and that there are other ways of indicating clearly whether this person is a medical doctor or dentist, or whatever profession the person is in. We recognize some of the concerns around that but frankly feel it is something where the consumer can understand that difference. The use of the term "doctor" should be permitted.

One of the other changes we made which we felt was very important and in which all members of the committee shared and where we found the co-operation of the group involved was with respect to those with physical disabilities. Members will recall that at the beginning there was real concern expressed by those in the disabled community around whether in fact this bill would somehow limit their own ability to control their lives. It was significant that the members of the ministry and the members of the committee were able to hear the presentations made by a number of individuals and groups representing the disabled and were able to make a specific change which will ensure that those who have disabilities will be able to direct the kind of care they will receive. That was an important and significant change.

Mention has also been made of the changes made with respect to sexual abuse. The task force's final report, if I understand the papers, will be out next week. I think it is important that we proceeded and were able, through an amendment brought forward by my party, to begin already. We know we are going to have to look at that task force report. Presumably later next year, there may be further changes brought in because of their recommendations.

The patient relations program, which is now set out in the legislation, and the announcement the parliamentary assistant made that the minister has requested all of the colleges to come forward with plans as to how they will deal with sexual abuse definitely set us on the right track. I suspect the patient relations program in some form or other, with whatever changes are suggested through the task force report and the consultation process after that, will provide us with a good way of proceeding.

It was clear to me, especially from the presentation by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, that those organizations are certainly well seized of this issue and recognize their responsibility in making sure they have the appropriate provisions. What we have done there is good and is a significant step forward.

Finally on Bill 43, we should also be pleased that we were able to work out the agreement around the aboriginal healing element and that we were able to bring in changes which were to the liking of the aboriginal community and will provide it with what it felt it needed to go forward in developing its own health care services. Those were positive things we were able to do. It is welcome to see them in the legislation.

There are perhaps three or four of the actual acts I want to comment on. After our hearings were over—this relates to Bill 45, which deals with the profession of chiropody—some concern was raised, in letters I believe we all received, around diagnosis and what podiatrists and chiropodists would be able to do. I hope the ministry will sit down with the representatives of the Michener Institute for Applied Health Sciences and see if there really is a problem there or if that is something which can be resolved through discussion. As we said on many occasions, we were not trying to limit what people were doing. I do not think that was the intent. But concerns have been raised by those who were active in chiropody and podiatry around just what they will be able to do in terms of diagnosis.

Bill 56 relates to the profession of midwifery. Here again is a place where we believe we have made some major strides forward. We recognize now the question of identifying and defining clearly the role of the midwife and the relationship between the midwife and nursing and other professions, a question which came before us. Our sense is that the new college that will relate to midwifery will work closely with other health professionals so that some of the possible areas of conflict or misunderstanding will be resolved. I underline that we felt it was very important to go forward and set up the college of midwifery at this time.

We had one question with respect to nursing which we still feel is important and want to put on the record. We have to be, I believe, very conscious of recognizing that nursing is a full and equal partner with all the other professions we were dealing with under this legislation. We expressed a concern, and express it again, around any attempt to identify any kind of hierarchy in the health care field that would seem to suggest nurses were at some other level. When we had taken out of one part of the legislation the reference to nurses only being able to do certain things at the direction of doctors or dentists, we were concerned that specific reference was made in another part of the act to nurses doing certain procedures at the direction of doctors, dentists, chiropodists and midwives, not because we believed they would not work in a very co-operative and collaborative manner with those professions but because we felt that should be something set out by the colleges and not in the legislation. I simply say to the government I think it is important that we continue to ensure nursing is seen as a fully equal profession within this legislation.

With respect to Bill 60 and the regulation of the profession of optometry, I think all members of the committee—all members—were concerned when we listened to the testimony provided by witnesses from the College of Optometrists of Ontario, from the University of Waterloo, on the definition of what they believe they did and what they felt were the professional skills of optometrists and what the ophthalmologists, through the Ontario Medical Association, felt. This was the one place where we as a committee were not really able to resolve those differences.

I think it is fair to say it is sometimes difficult for laypeople to make a judgement on what seem to be differences of professional opinion. We say to the government that we hope that, perhaps through the advisory council, the college of optometry of Ontario and the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario and the Ontario Medical Association, efforts would be made to bring the ophthalmologists and optometrists together to see if some consensus can be worked out.

The parliamentary assistant will know there is still a great deal of concern within the college of optometry in terms of just how they are going to set out some of the regulations regarding how optometrists will practise. I believe they can find a way to resolve that. This is one issue where, in our view, optometrists in fact can do more than is set out in this act. I think that will need to be looked at on a continuing basis.

Finally, and on a positive note, it was significant that we were able to resolve the problem around the psychologists so that those with doctorates as well as those with MAs will now be together in the same college. Again, that was a place where the committee's work was instrumental in bringing people together. What was so important was that they came up with the final resolution and we were able to ensure it was included in this legislation.

What we have here is a significant step forward. I hope the government will move to set up the advisory council that falls within the ambit of the legislation as soon as possible. I really think the role of that council, which is going to be made up of laypeople, will become very critical as all of these acts are implemented and as we go forward. At this point, we are pleased to support all of these bills on third reading.

Mr Wessinger: I would like to thank the members for their comments on this legislation, which I think is a landmark that we are doing in Ontario. I would also like to thank all the past ministers of Health who have dealt with this legislation. They all made a contribution in pushing this forward. Particularly, I would like to again thank the member for Oriole for her role as past minister and also for her role and the guidance she gave as Chair of the committee. It certainly helped us expedite this legislation and make it go much more smoothly than it might otherwise have done.

I would like to make a few comments with respect to the legislation. When we started out it was very clearly the intent of the legislation that it would define the existing scopes of practice of the health professions. As a result of the hearings and as a result of several amendments, not only have we at a minimum defined existing scopes of practice but we have in several instances increased the scopes of practice. This legislation, in our opinion, does not in any way restrict any existing scope of practice of any health professional.

On another aspect, there was some concern expressed about the whole question of communication of assessments. We believe that as a result of the amendments made, it is now much clearer that assessments may be communicated by those people who are not regulated health professionals and those who are not authorized to give diagnosis.

I would also like to thank the staff for the assistance they gave me in taking this legislation through committee and through today; that is, Linda Bohnen and Alan Burrows. They were of great assistance to myself and to members of the committee and they gave me a very good education on the legislation and very good advice, and I thank them very much for that.

We now have legislation we can be very proud of. We are already setting an example for other jurisdictions. On a note blown from our own horn, I would like to share with the members these words noted in the recently released British Columbia Royal Commission on Health Care and Costs, "A more appropriate, cost-effective and timely health care could be provided to more patients if British Columbia were to follow the Ontario initiative."

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Initially, these bills were all moved simultaneously. Is it the pleasure of the House that we proceed and vote on all of these bills simultaneously?

Agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Is it the pleasure of the House that these motions carry?

All those in favour of Bills 43 to 64, inclusive, please say "aye."

All those opposed to Bills 43 to 64, inclusive, please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

RETAIL BUSINESS ESTABLISHMENTS STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991

MODIFIANT DES LOIS EN CE QUI CONCERNE LES ÉTABLISSEMENTS DE COMMERCE DE DÉTAIL

Mr Pilkey moved third reading of Bill 115, An Act to amend the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act in respect of the opening of retail business establishments and employment in them. / Projet de loi 115, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les jours fériés dans le commerce de détail et la Loi sur les normes d'emploi en ce qui concerne l'ouverture des établissements de commerce de détail et l'emploi dans ces établissements.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Does the Solicitor General have opening comments?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I do. Mr Speaker and members of the Legislature, I am proud and privileged today to return to this House for third reading of Bill 115, the Retail Business Establishments Statute Law Amendment Act. This bill is a product of our government's principles, the hard work of the all-party standing committee on administration of justice and thoughtful input from a broad range of Ontarians who made submissions for the committee's consideration.

Bill 115 is fundamentally about maintaining and enriching the community life of Ontarians and ensuring that as many people as practically possible can take advantage of the benefits of a common pause day to pursue personal and family activities.

This bill is about protecting the rights of retail workers, small retailers and their families to enjoy a day on which they can relax and rejuvenate from the daily grind and commercialism of the week, and it is about recognizing the unique nature and requirements of Ontario's tourism industry, which promotes and enables leisure and recreational activities.

Bill 115 also enables municipalities to recognize the unique nature of their communities. Under the bill, bylaws may be enacted which exempt retail business establishments from the restrictions of the Retail Business Holidays Act in accordance with tourism criteria set out by provincial regulation. That regulation has been developed to ensure that the tourism exemption under the Retail Business Holidays Act, as amended by Bill 115, is administered with consistency across this province. These criteria offer guidance to those applying for exemptions and to municipal councils dealing with those particular applications.

The criteria are designed to assist businesses and municipalities in determining exemptions which maintain and develop tourism while, at the same time, ensuring that the need for common pause days in the community are in fact met. Every effort has been made to ensure that there is no undue burden placed on those seeking legitimate tourism exemptions.

The regulation has been developed with the assistance of a special advisory group made up of Ontarians from a representative cross-section of interests. This advisory group serves as a model for government partnership with the community. The role these dedicated individuals have performed confirms our commitment to consultation and open government. I thank them and I commend them for their excellent efforts.

I would also like to offer my personal thanks to Mr Andrew Faas, executive vice-president, National Grocers Co Ltd, who served so ably as chair of the advisory group. Mr Faas is in the gallery here today. I would like to recognize you, sir, and thank you for your very capable assistance with respect to these tourism criteria—a very fine job indeed.

With the mandate to strengthen and improve the criteria for the tourism exemption, the advisory group supplied invaluable advice. The resulting regulation is based on their unanimous recommendations. The tourism exemption is the best mechanism for ensuring that exemptions to the Retail Business Holidays Act are both consistent across the province and responsive to local requirements.

In addition, there is an appeal procedure for those objecting to municipal bylaws and special protection for affected workers who exercise that right of appeal. Also, anyone who can demonstrate an interest will be able to seek an injunction which compels a retailer to comply with the Retail Business Holidays Act. A structure of minimum fines for violations of the act is also set out under the bill.

In response to retailers' concerns, as they enter their most critical season, Bill 115 allows all retail stores to open on Sundays in December prior to Christmas Day.

However, overall, Bill 115 is not about Sunday shopping; it is about Sunday working. Included in the bill are amendments to the Employment Standards Act which give retail workers the absolute right to refuse Sunday and holiday work assignments and which guarantee to these workers 36 consecutive hours of rest every seven days. Through these amendments to the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act, the rights of Ontario retail sector workers are very well protected.

I ask the members of the House for their co-operation ensuring quick passage of this bill so that the people of Ontario can be assured of a fair, enforceable law that protects holidays enumerated under the act as common pause days for all of us to share in.

Our common pause day legislation supports the quality of life we have come to expect and enjoy in this province of ours, our Ontario. With Bill 115 our government fulfils our long-standing commitment to provide common pause day legislation that protects the rights of retail workers while recognizing unique requirements of the tourism industry in Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): I wish to thank the honourable Solicitor General for his opening remarks. Questions and/or comments on the Solicitor General's opening remarks? Seeing none, further debate on Bill 115.

Mr Curling: I thought I would await the time to make my little remarks here. I call this a small remark because I will not be very long in pointing out some of the discrepancies in Bill 115. Before I do so, I want to commend the minister who came into this fray pretty late. I want to commend him for attending quite a few of the committee hearings. It showed he had an interest, and at least that is a start.

I also want to commend the member for York Centre, who was very constructive in pointing out daily as the committee met discrepancies in the bill and how it could be improved. While the minister was in attendance—and, yes, I commend him for that—I am not so generous in giving him that compliment for listening to the member for York Centre, who pointed out numerous discrepancies in this bill.

What struck me in this bill was the fact that the minister continued to talk about a common pause day. The common pause day was targeted to Sunday, and we talked about Sunday shopping. Somehow it was morally wrong to shop on a Sunday. It was in a sense a family day. All the family should be together on a Sunday and it was therefore necessary that we have that pause day.

I am not at all worried about the fact that we were looking for a common pause day, but what struck me as a double standard with this minister, or the government on that side, was that when it came to December, it was okay to shop in December. Therefore, what we are going to have is a bill or a law that states that there should be no shopping continuously on any Sundays of the year except in December. I hope in his wrapup remarks the minister explains why it is right and okay to shop in December on Sundays and wrong to shop on Sundays the rest of the year. The inconsistency there baffles my mind.

I thought too that seeing we had a municipal election and seeing that some of the municipalities took the opportunity to have a referendum to find how they like to go in regard to Sunday shopping, I cannot recall—and I stand to be corrected—that any municipality indicated the people did not wish to shop on Sunday. It clearly came out that they would like to shop on Sundays.

The minister stood up in the House a few minutes ago and stated, "We listened to the people." That is the direction this NDP government would go, "We listen to the people." I think they do listen, but there is a time when we listen but we do not hear. I think they go through the motions of saying: "We are a listening government. We consult with you, but we will not take anything you said seriously." Since the municipalities have voted in their referendum, "Yes, we want Sunday shopping," I do not understand how the minister can stand in the House today and say, "No, we will not give it to them."

We thought one of the best ways to go in this very difficult bill—because Sunday shopping debates have been around for years and years, and they have approached it from many directions—instead of sitting in this pink palace deciding on our own what is morally right or what is a family day, is to, as the minister said, consult with the people and find out what they want. They have said very loud and clear that they would like to shop on Sundays.

The previous Liberal government went further and said, "You decide when you want it and how you like it." Therefore, the municipalities themselves would have to be responsible to the people within the community. We thought it was a good way to go. When this government came in it felt it was the moral light of the entire people. They know what is right and they went against that. I am very saddened by that. This bill is about protection of workers, but not in December. The reason we do not want to shop on Sundays is to protect workers, but in December we will not protect workers.

I am a resident of Scarborough North and I listened to the people. I will not bring my own personal view here. My job is to bring the views of Scarborough North residents here. They have told me that, yes, they would like Sunday shopping, and the member opposite in his remarks asked if I had spoken to everyone in Scarborough North. No, I have not spoken to every single soul in Scarborough North, but I have spoken to as many as is humanly possible, and all stated they would like to shop on Sundays. But no, this government decided it would tell people not to shop on Sundays. However, they may shop in December.

In supporting the quality of life, I do not think any government, any member of Parliament, must enforce its quality of life on my constituency. I am completely against that, because that is what the constituents told me. They know their priorities and do not want the government telling them this is its priority in all this.

I want to quickly comment on the tourism criteria and guidelines. If I was able to get that guideline in my hand today and find out what is a tourist or who is a tourist, or whatever definition they would like to put to that, then I would be able to understand what is happening. I presume at one stage they said anyone outside of 30 miles coming in to that area is a tourist. I am not quite sure if that definition has been cleared up yet.

I am sure anyone from downtown Toronto coming to this wonderful, beautiful area of Scarborough North would be a tourist. We have many of those people coming, so I would like to indicate to the minister today that Scarborough would like to be designated as a tourist area. There are so many people coming here outside of 30 miles that the entire area will be designated a tourist area. They are all tourists coming into my riding and I welcome them, although I do not regard them as tourists really. I regard them all as friends and families who will contribute to this great country and province of ours.

We are unable to pin this government down to definitions about what it is calling a tourist area, what is a common pause day, why a common pause day could be a Sunday but not in December, and I am utterly confused. I sat in quite a few of the hearings, and as the member for York Centre pointed out the discrepancies, I asked those members to listen very carefully. We feel on this side we have done everything possible to convince them of the direction they should go. I think they have heard but they have not listened. I wish them luck as we proceed to finalize Bill 115.

Mr Fletcher: I want to express a few concerns about what the member for Scarborough North was talking about, especially the idea of a common pause day except in December. I think the honourable member knows that is not the case. The labour reforms introduced with this bill do not end just because of December. They continue and the workers have the same protection and the same rights no matter what month of the year. So this bill does give a common pause day for the working people of this province.

As for the quality of life, this government is not trying to introduce its own quality of life to the people of this province. People will adjust to their own quality of life. We cannot legislate quality of life; we cannot legislate the morals of the province. That has to come from the grass roots, and I think the member knows that.

In the municipal elections, as far as referenda are concerned, we also have to look at the question that was asked: "Would you like to shop on Sunday? Yes. Would you like to work on Sunday? No." I think he will see that the reverse would be in order when that question is asked. The people would be saying overwhelmingly: "No. I don't wish to work on Sunday."

That is what the introduction of this bill has tried to do, to protect the working people of the province to ensure there is a common pause day, to protect the people who do not have unions to protect them, and the retail workers in other areas. This bill is far-reaching, not just for unionized workers but for unorganized workers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Further questions and/or comments? Seeing none, the honourable member for Scarborough North has two minutes to respond.

Mr Curling: As I said, we have said it all. We have done everything possible in the committee for the government to listen to some of the directions of the honourable member for York Centre. I feel that to make any other comments—they would not listen. I just hope that in the future, when the minister presents those regulations today, we will be able to say, if there are any amendments later on, we can make something that is bad even a bit better.

Mr Carr: I want to start off by thanking all my colleagues with whom I spent the long, hot summer travelling around this province. It was a great opportunity, as was mentioned often in committees, to get to know one another a little better as we went on the bus from Thunder Bay all the way to Ottawa. Almost the entire province was covered. To my colleagues and to the staff who spent so much time, I want to say how much we appreciate it.

Having said that, like the speaker before me I am very disappointed, as a result of this bill having come in and having heard the summer hearings, that not much was changed. During the summer we heard from people on both sides, those in favour of Sunday shopping and those opposed to Sunday shopping. Both sides of the issue came in and were very disappointed and discouraged with this bill. It was the previous Solicitor General, I guess, who okayed the initial push for the bill, but it did nothing to please either side on this issue. The new Solicitor General had to come in and shepherd this through. Unfortunately there were no changes.

We will be voting against this bill. The reason is that, like the Liberal legislation before it, this bill is unfair, unworkable and will hurt the economy of Ontario. It is interesting that the government talks about the workers being the reason it brought this in. In fact workers will be hurt because of this piece of legislation.

The member for Guelph talked about the fact that during December there will still be protection for workers. In other words, the stores can open but, under the Employment Standards Act, workers will still be protected during the month of December. During the hearings the minister said, "You can't protect employees through the Employment Standards Act; the only way to do it is to close on Sundays." But now he says, "We can do it during December, because if they don't want to work they'll have the right of refusal."

During the summer hearings we said, as we have continually said and I think even the Liberals said, we could improve the Employment Standards Act so that anybody would have the right to refuse to work on Sunday. The minister said: "No, that never works. You can't do that because people will be forced and coerced." Now he stands up in this House and says, "Boy, because of these standards we can protect the worker." It cannot work both ways. If it does not work for the other 11 months of the year, to my friend the member for Guelph, it does not work in December.

It is interesting to see how members of this government can change their dialogue in the House. They can change what they say about a piece of legislation depending upon what they do. The turns, the spins and the dialogue are 180 degrees, and quite frankly I think that is why people are so cynical and sceptical about politicians, particularly this government.

I want to be fairly brief because I have spoken at length. I think I asked a question of almost every witness who appeared before those summer hearings, so I have spent a great deal of time on this. I know very clearly that this government will not be listening. They did not listen to the people from Thunder Bay to Ottawa during those hearings, so I suspect they will not be listening to me.

There are a few points I think the public of Ontario should know about, as we have a new Speaker who should be well aware of this piece of legislation.

The regulations are one of my big concerns. We have the folks here who helped and were part of the regulations, another member of that body looking at the regulations. The problem with the regulations and the concern we have is that when you put the tourism criteria in there that are so fundamental to the bill, this is the whole essence of what is going to happen when a municipality opens a tourism exemption. What we have said is that they should put it in the bill so that the politicians can be accountable for their actions. If they put them in the regulations, the criteria can be changed tomorrow with a stroke of the pen. All the fine work the Solicitor General says they are doing could be changed tomorrow. A poll comes in that changes it. The Premier says, "It looks like we're going down," so he changes it through the regulations.

It was interesting that during the discussions on the Police Services Act the member for Etobicoke-Rexdale and the member for Welland-Thorold said, "You shouldn't put things in regulations because if you do, you don't know what will happen."

Mr Kormos: He was right then and he is right now.

Mr Carr: The member was right then, as he says. Guess what happened during the Police Services Act? This province lost the oath to the Queen without any debate in this Legislature because regulations are not where it should be done. I say to the members opposite, the reason is that we are accountable in this House with our seats, which can be lost next time if the public is not happy. The people who make and change regulations are not accountable and they cannot be defeated the next time an election is held.

What we need to do is to have input. Unfortunately, we did not have the input from the public, and my fear is that these regulations that are so fundamental to the principles of this bill can be changed overnight, with a stroke of the pen in the darkness, with no input from the public of Ontario, and I think that is wrong. On that point alone, I think this bill should be defeated.

On that point alone, I think it is improper and this bill should be defeated, regardless of when they get into the regulations or what they are. The original ones that were tabled of course were very broad to allow municipalities to open. Regardless of whether members agree with the regulations, they should not be in there. They should be part of the legislation so the people in this House can be accountable when they stand up and vote for this piece of legislation. On that point I feel very strongly.

The next one is the appeal to the Ontario Municipal Board. That, quite frankly, was a result of some lobbying from the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, which came through and said, "Well, if you leave it up to the municipalities, we'll have open Sunday shopping," which in fact we did here. By my recollection, about 60% to 70% of the municipalities said, "We'll take the tourism exemptions such as they are, such as we know them at this time, and we will open." But then the United

Food and Commercial Workers came in and said, "No, that can't be, because we need to have an appeal process."

In this day and age, when we are talking about scarce resources, when we are talking about the Workers' Compensation Board, which does not work because of the delays—we all know that as members in here, sometimes having spent 60% of our days dealing with the workers' compensation.

The rental hearings: I had the opportunity to spend two full days at a rental hearing in my riding. Guess what happened after those two full days? We did not even get to the discussions. We politicians think we spend a lot of time, but when the rent review hearings were on, they spent two full days and they did not even debate the issue once; they just debated whether they were going to go ahead. The public, 75 or so tenants, came out of there and were so disgusted with the process they said, "This doesn't work." I say to members, not only does the WCB not work because there are bureaucratic nightmares; the rent hearing boards do not work because of the bureaucratic nightmare.

What do we do? The Ontario Municipal Board right now is backlogged 12 to 14 months. That is the date you will get if you start, but we say we are going to put more into the system with Sunday shopping.

Non-profit housing, which was supposed to have a fast track, cannot get approval through the Ontario Municipal Board because of the backlogs, the delays and the bureaucracy. So what does this government that believes in bureaucracy say? "We've got a solution to the problem. We'll just give it to the Ontario Municipal Board."

Quite frankly, the reason is very simple. When a municipality decides to open up, government members will be able to say: "Well, it wasn't us. It was the big, bad municipal politicians. They're the ones who decided to open up. Then the Ontario Municipal Board went there and ratified it. Don't blame us when there's Sunday shopping in this province. We did everything we could."

The minister, in his briefing notes that we got hold of—I was very pleased that he at least did not sick the OPP on me, and I appreciate that he said he would not, because I was quite frankly expecting them to come. The speaking notes said they would spend about $1 million. To the question, "How much are we going to spend on the Ontario Municipal Board?" the Solicitor General said they would spend $1 million.

It is interesting to note that we have resources for that. We do not have resources for the Ontario Municipal Board to deal with non-profit housing, but it is going to have them now, as a body; all these appeal processes coming before it. Quite frankly, $1 million to set up another level of bureaucracy is even worse than the previous Liberal bill where the municipalities had the final decision. Again, the only group that talked about that during the presentations was the United Food and Commercial Workers.

One of the other concerns we have is with the appeal process to the courts. Again, it goes back to the entire principle of this government looking to some other agency to blame when in fact some of the municipalities decide to open, because the process is very simple.

What happens now when we hear the presentation through the Toronto police? They say: "We don't want to be involved in Sunday shopping. We've got a 38% increase in crime." We literally are afraid to go out at night in Metropolitan Toronto. The murders are up. We heard today that the bank robberies are up dramatically in this province.

The police said: "We do not want to have to be going around and deciding whether somebody like Paul Magder is open on Spadina Avenue. We've got criminals who are getting away with violent acts." We have drunk drivers being sprung from the court system right now, and they introduce an amendment which will say that any individual who sees a store open can go to the court and have that court issue an order to close, and the police will have to be involved instead of catching the murderers who are out there, doubling in this municipality alone.

I have had in my riding two young women who were murdered this summer. People are scared and crime has become the number one issue in this province. So what do we do with a court that is backlogged so much, quite frankly, that we now have well over 35,000 cases—cases of sexual assault, cases of drunk driving that have been thrown out—and what are we going to be doing? We are going to say: "If anybody disagrees with a decision and a store is open and it is not supposed to be, you can go to a court of law. Don't go there if you need a drunk driver off the road, or somebody who has been charged with sexual assault, because he is getting off free; but if you want to go there to close down a business that is trying to survive on Sunday, you can do it in Ontario." I say that is scandalous in the province today.

If the public were to look at it objectively and say, as we have heard the Treasurer say many times, "It is a case of resources. The resources are limited. We have to apportion them according to priorities," I say to the members opposite that if they think anybody in this province thinks the priorities for more resources to a court system that is already backlogged should be to handle Sunday shopping openings ahead of the crime that is facing this province, I say they are out of touch. I say they are out of touch and I believe the vast majority of people say that. I believe, in a non-partisan manner, they are wrong if they believe that.

Of course members know there are different levels of courts and they will say this is not the court that deals with criminal action. But the fact of the matter is that they are talking about resources that will have to be put into the court system now to handle Sunday openings or closings, or whatever members would like to call them, at a time when in both the civil cases and the criminal cases the backlogs are so long that we are throwing people out on the street. For the Solicitor General, the top policeman, to put resources into the courts at a time in this municipality and all the way out to my area in Halton when the police are virtually under pressure and under constraints and we have court cases where people with violent crimes are being let off, I say it should not be a priority to put that in there.

When the amendments on that piece of legislation came through to my office, all through the summer we heard the people say: "Whatever happens, at least make a decision. The province should make a decision and have the political courage to do it." We heard that from both sides of the issue. People who want it to be open or want it to be closed said the province should take the responsibility.

So what do they do? They do not take the responsibility. They push it off and they are going to be able to say, "Well, if somebody is opening illegally, you go to the courts," and believe me, there will be groups going to the courts to close down retailers who are just trying to open in this province, and I say that is wrong.

One of the other concerns we have is with the old tourism criterion that we put in, the 7,500 square feet. We had protesters out here virtually on the front steps confronting the Solicitor General on the 7,500-square-foot rule. I will explain it again for the Solicitor General. In the old tourism regulations he had, anybody with over 7,500, even if a municipality decides to open, will have to come back and apply separately. What that group has said to the province is that it will be the key for taking this to court, basically because they say the minister should not be making a determination of where the tourism exemption can be had, based on the square footage of a particular facility that wants to open.

Of course I am not a lawyer. I guess the only people who will benefit from this will be the lawyers. They are the ones who will argue this in municipalities all across the province. In fact, that goes for the appeals to the courts too, because the lawyers are the ones who will be able to go there. I think most of the lawyers who sit there and see the backlogs right now are very concerned about them.

We proceeded to move this through fairly quickly, in spite of the fact that we were accused of holding it up. Anybody who was there would know I was very brief in many of my statements, more so than I wanted to be. I probably would have been a little longer if I thought I could convince the government. One of the reasons was the December openings prior to Christmas. Essentially what happened—I think we were all surprised. I guess it was the last presentation of the day. All summer we heard a lot of presentations on the issue, pro and con, and the last group came in and said: "What about this? If in fact you decide you are going to go ahead with this bill, what if you opened Thanksgiving to Christmastime as a bit of a solution to the problems some of the retailers are facing?"

What we attempted to do in the bill that I tabled in this Legislature was to say: "Don't make it a part of this bill. Don't use it as political leverage to get a bill through quickly just because you wanted to have the December openings." The Solicitor General chose not to look at that bill. All he needed to do was to change the date. It could have been from December 1 and we would not have had to deal with it and have the rush and the pressure and the indecision that has been a part of this bill. Even today we do not know what is going to happen with this particular bill.

Although they blame the opposition parties, the fact of the matter is that they came in late with amendments; they came in with amendments after agreements had been made and deals were broken. In all fairness, as I said in the committee to the people involved, it was deals that were made by people on the standing committee on administration of justice who said, "This is what we're going to do." Unfortunately, as we know, the decision comes from one office in this province and that is the Premier's office. When they say whatever is going to happen, that is what happens.

The December opening became an issue of this bill basically, because I am now getting calls, as I said in the committee the other day. I actually had a call from the office of the former Solicitor General, who is the Acting Speaker, asking when my bill would be coming through and when it would be completed. It is interesting to note that people see this as my bill. For those people who are at home watching this, it is not my bill. It is a terrible piece of legislation brought in ad hoc by a group that quite frankly I do not believe has any confidence. As I said today, unfortunately it is the people of this province who are going to suffer from it.

I will be fairly brief, as I said I would, but I hope this government has learned a lesson from this bill. I suspect they have not. Again, just as a quick conclusion and a wrapup, the only good thing that came out of this particular bill was the opportunity to spend a little bit of time with our colleagues going across the province and learning what some of the other communities are feeling about a number of issues. Outside of that, there was no good that came out of this particular bill and we will be voting against it.

Mr Sorbara: Oh, here we go.

Mr Mills: My colleague across there says, "Here we go." I do not know what he is expecting, but I am very pleased—

Mr Sorbara: I'm expecting a marvellous speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): Order. There really is no cause for this kind of interjection. The member has simply started to address the House, and I request that the member address his comments through the Chair and that members refrain from interjection.

Mr Sorbara: Well, I'm looking forward to your speech.

Mr Mills: Thank you. I must say that during the summer months when I got to go across the province with the other members of the standing committee on administration of justice, it was an enjoyable time. It gave me the opportunity to get some insight into some of the members, their thoughts on many issues, not only on this issue. We got to know one another better. I think that nothing but good can come out of that sort of process, as we discussed this bill and as we went across the province.

As members know, this is perhaps one of the most contentious issues that has appeared in the Legislature. It generated more correspondence and more input than perhaps any other item has ever done here before. It is not new; it was done before, way back in the 1800s and so on. It has always been a sore point with many people in Ontario.

On the tour, I can remember that we would go into one particular city and, for an example, the owner of the local Canadian Tire store would appear before us and he would really go on about needing the ability to open on Sundays. That was the problem. You could not get a consensus, because then we would go into another community and the Canadian Tire store owner would say that on no account did he want to open or have anything to do with Sunday shopping or Sunday working.

The same could be said for chambers of commerce. We had points of view from chambers of commerce that were not consistent. I can say that with anything we faced the points of view were not consistent. As a result, it was a very difficult period in which to listen and form some consensus of what the government or what the committee should do on a very contentious issue.

As the Solicitor General has stated, Bill 115 is fundamentally about maintaining and enriching the community life of Ontarians. This will now be achieved by this legislation which preserves holidays as common pause days in this province. A common pause day means just that: a day on which most people do not have to work.

I remember speaking to the bill when it was first introduced some months ago, speaking about how precious Sundays were to me, having been brought up in England before the war in a home where we always had to work, every minute of the day, to make a living. I can remember, when I used to work on Sundays, saying just a simple thing, "Wouldn't it be nice to lie in bed and read the Sunday newspaper and look at the football results?" That is how precious Sundays were and still are to me.

These common pause days listed under the Retail Business Holidays Act are in harmony with traditional rhythms of the week in Ontario. This ensures that families can enjoy these days together and individuals can pursue personal interests to rejuvenate and refresh themselves. I think it is very important in this day where we are faced with stress, marital separation and all kinds of family problems that we get a chance to rejuvenate and refresh ourselves. These opportunities today are all too rare in this hectic and often frantic society we all live in. Without thoughtful legislation they could disappear for ever.

I spent the summer listening to many people make presentations to the standing committee and I can say with some firsthand authority that many people in this province believe common pause days are essential to our quality of life. I can also say that I echo those sentiments personally. Urban, rural, north, south, east or west, support for the common pause day legislation came forward from all over Ontario.

Clearly this is an important issue, and it is an issue that is important to Ontarians of any economic, geographic or cultural background because we are all concerned about our quality of life. That is why this government is committed to Bill 115, a bill that preserves the concept of common pause days in Ontario while protecting the rights of retail workers and also recognizing the unique requirements of the tourism industry.

Yes, retail workers in the tourism industry have been singled out, and for very good reasons. Retail workers are not second-class citizens in Ontario. They should not have to give up their day of rest to provide unlimited shopping convenience for others. They are also generally underpaid, underorganized and otherwise unprotected. Tourism is the cornerstone of Ontario's economy and does require a seven-day-a-week operation. As well, the tourism industry provides unique opportunities for Ontarians enjoying their common pause days and for the tourists who spent over $16 billion in our beautiful province last year alone.

With respect to the provisions in Bill 115 that permit retailers to open on Sundays in December prior to Christmas, I urge this House to act quickly to pass this important and timely legislation. The government has recognized retail businesses and the fact that those few weeks before Christmas are so vital, perhaps even to the life and death of any given particular retail business. We have recognized that and we have shown flexibility, and we have also shown some consideration for those folks in this time of need.

We must eliminate confusion on the part of retailers, retail workers, municipalities and all other Ontarians. With that, I urge all members in the House to pass this legislation quickly so that we can get on and people can get to know where they stand on this important issue well before the appointed time runs out.

Mr Sola: It is my pleasure to join in this debate, not because I was a member of the committee this time around but because I was a member of the committee the previous time around when we were debating Sunday shopping and Sunday work legislation, Sunday protection, as Bills 113 and 114. It seems to me we had a very extensive trip around the province, because the Liberal government of the day was not afraid to visit the cities that were opposed to its legislation and wanted to hear the opinions of all the people of the province.

If memory serves me correctly, the groups most vehemently opposed to Sunday shopping were the Christian denominations that believed in Sunday as the common pause day. I recollect a certain member of the opposition, the member for Cambridge, being quite histrionic in his opposition to the bill of the day. As a matter of fact, he almost caused a riot in Brantford, and he did the same in Windsor. He carried around a little rubber chicken because he decided in his own mind that the Liberal government of the day, by asking municipalities, as the lowest level of government, to have the final say over Sunday shopping, was taking "the chicken way out." The other thing he said with that same rubber chicken was that I think he put earmuffs on that chicken and said, "I hear you, but I am not listening."

When we see the result of Bill 115, it brings back to mind the very words of the member for Cambridge, the former Solicitor General and now the Acting Speaker, and I am wondering how satisfied he is with this bill. It seems this government claims it has a common pause day and yet December is open for business. When did December stop being a part of the year? If it is a common pause day, it should be common throughout the year, not 11 months of the year. I think this government's claim of having observed the common pause day falls by the wayside. By the way, Christmas happens to be the most important festival of the Christian year.

Those people were opposed to Bill 113 because they were afraid it would bring about "wide-open Sunday shopping," to quote the member for Cambridge and the member for Etobicoke-Rexdale and the member for Rainy River and David Reville, who is now the principal adviser to the Premier. Bill 113 was going to bring about "wide-open Sunday shopping," and yet it did not happen.

Municipalities at the time were widely opposed to Bill 113 because they did not want the ball dropped in their laps. Yet if my reading of the hearings on Bill 115 is correct, municipalities favour the former Liberal government's legislation. Windsor, which vehemently opposed getting the authority to decide whether or not to open, now likes having that authority. All the border towns which have to compete with the wide-open Sundays in the United States and which are afraid of losing business because of the cross-border shopping spree prefer to have the right to decide for themselves whether they want to open or close.

I am wondering whether the words of the member for Cambridge are not appropriate to this present NDP government, "I hear you, but I'm not listening," because the people seem to have changed their minds since the committee went around the province for hearings on Bill 113. Now the province seems to favour Sunday shopping.

I wish this government would at least be open about which way it wants to head. On the one hand the government is trying to appease the lobby that wants to have closed Sundays and a common pause day, and at the same time it is trying to appease those who want to work Sundays and shop Sundays. I think Bill 115 not only fails to satisfy both camps but aggravates the opposition of both camps.

As far as labour protection under this government is concerned, I can recollect quite clearly all the arguments about how it would be impossible to protect workers who refuse to work Sundays or who do not want to work Sundays but who are vulnerable because they do not have any seniority or they do not have a union protecting them, or if they do have a union protecting them, the boss would still be able to get back at them in some way or another.

I think it would be interesting if the member for Cambridge and the other members I have referred to read their own comments in Hansard and see how satisfied they are with the protective elements of their own legislation regarding Sunday shopping. I think their own words would come back to haunt them.

The member for Cambridge identified that toy as a chicken. It took a member of the Liberal government of the day, Harry Pelissero, the former member for Lincoln, to identify the bird properly. The bird was a duck. I do not know whether the member for Cambridge will admit to having misidentified his showcase even to this day. The NDP government still cannot tell a chicken from a duck. They still call Sunday shopping closed Sundays, they still consider wide-open Sunday shopping as having satisfied the craving of the public of Ontario for a common pause day, and at the same time they seem to think, despite the fact they are offering neither, that their labour legislation protects the workers who do not want to work when this government will be legislating them to work.

I want to point out the hypocrisy of travelling the province, railing against wide-open Sunday shopping on a bill that allowed municipalities which are the closest to the electorate to decide what the people in their particular area wanted and the step they have taken now, which seems to be going back to the future, because this is a pale imitation of the former Tory legislation which tries to reinvent the wheel by reimposing the tourism exemption while at the same time handcuffing the municipalities, not allowing them to decide what is or is not a tourist area and forcing them to go to public hearings which will just delay matters, make things more costly and exasperate both the applicants and those opposed.

Mr Hope: During that speech I had a hard time understanding whether the legislation was too tough, not tough enough, weak or whatever. There was no clear distinction. I can understand why the member for Cambridge walked around with and took to committees a chicken or a duck with earmuffs on when the Liberals introduced legislation. It was because they did not listen. This committee—I was not part of the committee—listened to the people and the concerns they were raising under tourism and other areas. I commend the government members for listening to some of the concerns. But I share the concern the member for Cambridge had when he was on the committee and walked around with his rubber duck.

There was reference made to the fact that a lot of municipalities were not in favour of the Liberal legislation. I might as well tell the members why a lot of municipalities were against the Liberal legislation. A lot of the labour movement people were out there talking to the municipalities and putting resolutions forward that indicated how devastating the Liberal legislation was to workers in a lot of workplaces. We have added a lot of extra areas. Under tourist restrictions we added protection for the workers in those jurisdictions, which is very important.

I was one of the people who fought against the Liberals. I look today and ask if the legislation goes far enough in my expectations, and I say no, it does not. But I know it is a stepping stone in the right direction to protect those communities and those workers who need protection. That is talking about listening to people if I am willing to set down my beliefs and my understanding of legislation and worker protection, set aside my personal viewpoints and listen to the concerns of my community, because when you pose the questions in my community, "Are you in favour of Sunday shopping?" they say yes, and "Are you in favour of Sunday work?" they say no. That is the important issue the Liberals neglected. I understand perfectly why the member for Cambridge walked around with a chicken with earmuffs on. It was because the Liberals did not listen before.

Mr Bradley: I appreciate the opportunity to make a couple of observations about this piece of legislation because I am one who watches very carefully during election campaigns to see what people are promising. I listen to people out there. Their concern is that people in opposition say certain things and people during election campaigns say certain things, and then they see something different showing up in the form of legislation.

Even if you disagree with what an elected government said it was going to do when it was in opposition and on the campaign trail, at least you know what you are disagreeing with. What we have in this legislation, I am afraid, is something that is neither fish nor fowl. We have so many exemptions in this legislation that it is going to be totally chaotic.

Either the government is in favour of closing down this province on a retail basis on Sunday or it is in favour of opening it up. My fear is that with all these exemptions it is going to be a total hodgepodge across Ontario. Workers in some parts of the province will have to work on Sunday, workers in other parts of the province will not have to work on Sunday and the government will not achieve what it set out to achieve in the first place.

In addition to this, there is provision for going to the Ontario Municipal Board. Those of us who sit on the standing committee on government agencies have found the Ontario Municipal Board is already full. It cannot even handle the material it has now. We are going to ask the Ontario Municipal Board to make some decisions on whether or not there is to be an allowance for shopping on Sundays and presumably on holidays in individual circumstances.

One would look for a bill that said one thing or another and then people in this House would have to make a choice, but this bill does neither, close on Sundays or open on Sundays.

Mr Stockwell: It is somewhat baffling to listen to the defence of the Solicitor General and his partners in perpetrating this piece of legislation. It is humorous to hear exactly what the interim leader of the Liberal Party said when he was on the campaign trail—there was no chance we were going to shop on Sundays—and we had a union worker here who himself fought this piece of legislation the Liberals brought forward about Sunday shopping, etc. How he can stand in his place today and suggest, “I can set my beliefs aside, because my constituents want to have Sunday shopping”—and then you ask whether they want to have working on Sunday and he says no.

So what have we got? We now have a member of this caucus and this party who says, “Gee, I think we should have shopping on Sunday in all the months that start with the letter D,” and that is about how much sense this piece of legislation makes. “All the months that start with the letter D you can shop on Sundays; anything else you can’t.” When they broaden their horizons, they may move to months that start with the letter J as well as D and June and July would open up. Of course the member could set his beliefs aside long enough to do that as well.

That rivals this nonsensical piece of legislation, and I will tell members, every single opening in any municipality is going to appeal to the OMB. We all know that, because there are groups out there that will want to see them open. It is neither fish nor fowl. They cannot make up their minds. They are not right-handed; they are not left-handed. They do not know what they are doing.

They made a series of promises in the election. They broke those promises, and then they could not keep their promises. They cannot even break their promises properly. This is insane.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): Further comments and questions? The member has two minutes in which to respond.

Mr Sola: In response to the member for Chatham-Kent, on whether this legislation is too tough or too weak, I would like to say it is neither. It is a sham. It does nothing to achieve the ends it supposedly is intended to achieve. It is just an exercise in pantomime to appear to be doing something while doing nothing. There is no substance in the bill. It is interesting to note that the member was not a member of the committee, yet he can guarantee that the committee listened. That is something very unusual. He did not sit on the committee, yet he can verify that whatever arguments were heard by the committee, the committee responded to them.

I would like to thank the member for St Catharines for pointing out that this is another broken promise by the NDP government, another NDP flip-flop. His description of this legislation being neither fish nor fowl is quite accurate, except I would say in a sense it is foul, to agree with the odour emanating from another broken promise.

I would like to thank the member for Etobicoke West for pointing out that the NDP has once again set its beliefs aside by allowing Sunday shopping, pointing out that every municipality will have to appeal to the OMB and pointing out another type of incompetence most of us were unaware of, that the government cannot even break promises correctly.

Mrs Marland: In rising today to speak to Bill 115, An Act to amend the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act in respect of the opening of retail business establishments and employment in them, I am happy to have the opportunity. It happens to be a subject I think I have risen in this House every year for the past six years and spoken on.

Nothing changes. We still have a piece of legislation in front of us that is totally unworkable. It does not do any of the things this socialist government purports to support. It does not in fact even begin to implement the promises on which they campaigned, the promises they made to the people of Ontario, the promises they espoused very vigorously about protecting workers from working on Sunday. They talked about the need for a common pause day to protect the family unit, to give families and friends the opportunity to spend Sundays together. There is nothing in here that does any of those things. Bill 115 is a total, absolute sham.

The minister for northern affairs—

Hon Mr Wildman: Natural Resources.

Mrs Marland: The Minister for Natural Resources, the member for Algoma, was a fairly reasonable individual when he sat in opposition. He stood in opposition on this side of the House, as we did, and lambasted the Liberals for Bill 113, because Bill 113, the Liberal bill dealing with the subject—

Hon Mr Wildman: Where are the Liberals?

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): Order. The Minister of Natural Resources will please refrain from interjection and allow the member for Mississauga South to continue.

Hon Mr Wildman: Mr Speaker, I thought actually I was being helpful to the member.

Mrs Marland: It is always the same. When you say anything in this Legislature that hits home with this socialist government, the members opposite get very upset. I just came from speaking at a committee meeting where the six socialist government members were equally upset. They just do not want to hear the truth.

The truth is that every one of them campaigned promising the people of this province that there would be a common pause day legislated in this province, that people would be protected from having to work on Sundays. This bill simply creates a chaotic situation. This bill creates a further problem for the municipalities.

Even if the socialist government members do not want to listen to the opposition parties in this House, I would have thought they would want to listen to their unions. We are told they are very concerned about workers, we are told they are very concerned about jobs and employment, but when it comes to an issue of whether or not people are going to have to have Sunday working because we have Sunday shopping, suddenly they are nowhere on this issue. They are no longer protecting the workers who do not wish to work on Sundays.

These socialist government members do not even listen to the Association of Municipalities of Ontario. AMO's response to the former Liberal government's bill, Bill 113, was, "Please do not give the jurisdiction for whether or not we have Sunday shopping to the municipalities, because if you do, then we will have one municipality opening and an adjacent municipality that may choose not to open having to open because it is adjacent and one group of retailers is then in competition with another."

The fact is that what is happening with this socialist government bill, Bill 115, is that we have a situation that is even worse than under the Liberal Bill 113. We have the whole problem compounded. The fact remains that the cost for businesses to be open is always the same per day of the week.

The other thing that does not change with the cost of doing business is the amount of disposable income the public has. When the argument is that the public wants stores to be open on Sunday, it does not mean they have any more money to spend. People do not suddenly get a raise or an increase in their wage packets because they can shop on Sundays. But there are people for whom working on Sunday is a great impediment to their wellbeing.

I personally am totally opposed to Sunday shopping because of Sunday working. For six years I have stood in this House and said I support a common pause day.

Mr Sorbara: Talk to Mike Harris about that.

Mrs Marland: I have a right to my individual opinion and that is the opinion I am putting on the record.

My opinion is based on public meetings I have held in my riding. It is my understanding that during all this debate of the last six years on whether we should have Sunday shopping and Sunday working, I was the only member, in the former Legislature at least, who held a public forum on Sunday shopping. From the outcome of that public forum and all the telephone calls and letters we have received in my community office and my Queen's Park legislative office, we have an eight-to-one majority opposed to Sunday shopping and Sunday working in my riding of Mississauga South.

We respect very much that if Sunday is not the day of practice of religion or faith for individuals, they have the option of another day off. That we totally respect and that was totally respected in the original legislation of the former Conservative government. What we have here is a situation where this legislation is so two-faced that it says it is okay to be open some Sundays before Christmas and not other Sundays. As the member for Etobicoke West said so well a few moments ago, what will it be next? It is now the Sundays in a month beginning with D. What months are next?

Either we think it is all right for people to have to work on Sundays or we do not. The fact is that all the rhetoric about who already works on Sundays is not an argument to expand the number of people who have to work on Sundays. Certainly there are all kinds of people who work on Sundays now. I have heard all this before. I do not need to be told that people in transportation, hospitals—health care providers—restaurants, some entertainment venues, etc, all work on Sundays. That is true. But when they took their jobs and went to work for those establishments, they knew it involved Sunday working. It was a choice they made knowing what they were going into.

Now what we are looking at with wide-open Sunday shopping are people who chose a five-day work week so they could spend the weekends with their families, or their friends if they do not have any families, and for their own leisure, recreation, and in many cases, their opportunity to worship in a church of their faith on Sundays.

Weekends, whether we like it or not, are important to our society. We only have to look around us to recognize what is happening to our society—the loss of our social fabric, the erosion of values. All of these things are happening because we are losing the very core, the very stability of what a balance between work and recreation is about.

We have children in schools Monday to Friday. Saturday and Sunday are the only times families have to get together. I have heard an argument about, "I like to go shopping with my children on Sunday." I think that with all the free, available recreational opportunities there are in this province, there are better things to do with our young people on Sundays than to go indoors and shop. Frankly, when they do, it means that the people who are serving them do not have the same opportunity. The people working in those stores they say they like to shop in do not have that option of doing anything with their families on Sunday, whether it is to take their children to church, shopping or some other leisure or recreational activity, maybe just visiting family. They do not have that opportunity because those people have to work in order that those establishments are open and operating.

In consideration of the minimal amount of time left to debate Bill 115, I simply say in closing that I am totally and unequivocally opposed to this legislation. I think anyone who votes in favour of it obviously does not recognize the chaos with which it will impact on this province. The fact is that we are going to have appeals to the Ontario Municipal Board that will be costly and time consuming for the people of Ontario. We could avoid some of this expense to the taxpayers of Ontario if, for once, we could develop a piece of legislation not like Bill 115, but similar to the legislation the Conservative Party of this province had when it was the government. Once and for all, let's protect the rights of individual Ontarians to a common pause day.

Mr Mahoney: I am interested in the comments in opposition to the bill. I certainly oppose the bill too, but from a little different perspective. I suggest the member might attempt to hold a forum today on Sunday shopping. She might find a little different result than eight to one against it, because people realize that with the state of the economy in this province, people in business today need every competitive edge they can get, particularly in border communities.

The member will recall, from the days when she and I were both serving on Mississauga council, that under the Tory legislation, when we had the option and the opportunity to allow Sunday shopping based on a tourism exemption, we exempted the Malton Fruit Market and said it was a tourist attraction and we exempted the Port Credit business improvement area and said it was a tourist attraction. The member may have been opposed to that—I do not know—but based on the tourism exemption, we allowed in our community the opportunity for business areas that needed that extra day to open on Sunday.

Surely to goodness it is time we got government out of the shopping malls and out of the stores and out of the pocketbooks of the residents, so that if people want to shop on Sunday, they should simply be allowed to. At least the existing Liberal legislation that is in place allows for a community to make its decision not based on some political puffery or decision as to whether a fruit market or a business improvement area is a tourist attraction, but based on the will of the people.

In the recent municipal elections there were countless plebiscites taken all over this province. I suggest that if people were listening, they would see that the people of Ontario would like government to get out of Sunday shopping regulation. If they want to shop, let them. I too am opposed to this legislation.

Mr Lessard: The member for Mississauga South said that weekends are important to families. I cannot disagree with that. In fact, I am looking forward to spending the weekend with my family just as soon as possible.

Mr Mahoney: Are you going to go shopping in Detroit?

Mr Lessard: I am probably not going to be shopping this weekend.

I agree with the member for Mississauga South as well that there probably are a lot of other pastimes that are a lot more worth while and enjoyable than going shopping with family members, especially on Sundays. However, there are a lot of people who said to us while we were out on the committee during the summertime that they do want that opportunity to shop with their families on Sundays.

I do not happen to share that point of view. However, the member for Mississauga South does illustrate the fact that there is a very wide divergence of opinion with respect to this issue. She indicated that she had a public forum where a great deal of people were not in favour of Sunday shopping. The member for Mississauga West suggested that maybe she should have another forum, that she might find there would be far different results if she were to do that again. It may be possible. I know there seemed to be a change of opinion in the Windsor area in the nine months that people were able to shop on Sundays, when the legislation was before the courts.

I appreciate the fact that she indicates what her own personal position is with respect to this issue. I can tell her that she does not really have the same position as other members in her party, but she does indicate the great divergence of opinions with respect to this issue.

Mrs Marland: I appreciate the comments from the member for Windsor-Walkerville, especially where he says that he knows the views of the people within my own caucus. I think that is very interesting.

In responding to the member for Mississauga West, when he talks about the state of the economy as being a reason to have stores open and to have that option, he obviously is not listening to people within his own constituency, because Lansing Lumber, which is owned and operated by Howard and Ruth Kitchen, has invested thousands of dollars and taken a very public stand on behalf of its employees to make the point that apart from forcing people to work on Sunday if it is open on Sunday, it also adds to the cost of its operations. Instead of paying to operate six days a week, 12 hours a day, we now would enforce on them a seven-day operation.

As I said earlier, and maybe the member for Mississauga West was not here at that moment, the cost of doing business is what the retailers have to deal with. The fact is that the public does not have any more disposable income to spend, so whether they spend it on Sunday or Saturday or any weekday, it does not increase the amount of business they do, and that is the whole point.

Also, I wish the member for Mississauga West would listen to the wishes of his own mayor, who I understand is supporting him in his leadership bid for the Liberal Party, because Mayor Hazel McCallion does not want it as a municipal option. She has been so outspoken; she has said so many times it is a provincial jurisdiction. For this member to say it is something that the people in our ridings are now in favour of is something I challenge him on, because I am quite sure he has not had a public meeting on this subject.

The Speaker: Further debate, the member for Welland-Thorold.

Mr Kormos: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I notice the tone of surprise in your voice. I was surprised too when I was told that, yes, I could speak to this particular bit of legislation, especially in view of some considerable criticism I have had and, I tell members, continue to have about this legislation.

I was here, as some of the members in this House will recall, for a couple of years prior to this last election in September 1990. I was elected in a by-election down in Welland-Thorold, where during that by-election, like my friend the member for London North, I campaigned strongly and clearly on behalf of a common pause day and in opposition to wide-open Sunday shopping.

When I came to this assembly as a member of an oh, so small caucus, I was given the opportunity to serve on the justice committee. Once again, like my more recent service on the justice committee, it was only temporary. I had the opportunity to engage in some of the debate about the first round—it really was not the first round; it was more like the third or fourth round—of debate and battle over Sunday shopping/common pause day. But it was the debate over the then Liberal government's bill creating the municipal option.

Just as I was opposed to wide-open Sunday shopping, I was opposed to this approach of municipal option, and I was not alone in that opposition. There was a great deal said in the Legislature by members of the opposition at that time and in the course of the committee discussions about the entire inappropriateness of municipal option, that if there was going to be legislation, it should be uniform, that it should be across the board, that it should be across the province, and that the provincial government, which has jurisdiction, should exercise that jurisdiction and should exercise it responsibly.

I opposed the Liberal government when they introduced the prospect of municipal option. Along with a whole lot of other people, I spoke about this whole business of municipal option inevitably creating wide-open Sunday shopping across the province if it was permitted to take its course, and I still believe that.

I suppose it comes down to the real battle. I recognize there are a whole lot of people out there. I am not about to say that my community is unanimous in its opposition to Sunday shopping or that it is unanimous in its support of a common pause day. I am not about to say that by any stretch of the imagination. I am prepared to concede that I do not think my community, Welland-Thorold, is much different than the communities of any of the other 129 people here in this Legislature in that there is a wide range of views.

There are no two ways about it. Big plaza owners, developers, the ones who are not going to have to go and work in those retail shops on Sundays, are outspoken advocates of Sunday shopping. They think it is just the neatest thing since buttered popcorn. They could give a tinker's dam, I am convinced, about the fact that people are going to have to leave their families, leave their homes, leave their grandparents, their children, their neighbours, their friends, their spouses and go work at a retail shop on a Sunday.

Just last Sunday I was down in Welland-Thorold, but I was blessed with the opportunity to be at the St John's Greek Catholic Church over on Second Street. I suspect there are some other people here in the Legislature who have been the guests of that particular parish. It is one that I am proud of my rapport with.

I was there with Rev Leslie Marajeau and Rev Deak and Father Dychuk. Father Dychuk is really the priest over at St Michael the Archangel Ukrainian Catholic Church, but since St John's Greek Catholic Church does not have its own full-time priest, it just has a deacon, Father Dychuk serves both parishes. Father Dychuk, a Ukrainian, to his credit learned Hungarian so that he could accommodate the Hungarian Greek Catholic community.

I was at St John's Greek Catholic Church for their special service which starts at 4 o'clock. It is their annual service which celebrates the parish. It is followed at 6 o'clock by the dinner in the basement, and people who do not make it to St John's Greek Catholic Church for the church dinner are missing out on the finest food that one could ever eat. Sharing the community that I did with those great people—children, their parents, factory workers, retail workers, office workers, retirees, farmers—I realized what an exemplary way to spend a Sunday, to share it with your friends and your family, to celebrate your church community, to celebrate the fraternity and sorority that you have with people like those great people in the parish at St John's.

Of course, women and more than a few men had spent some hours in the kitchen preparing that meal, just like others who spent time in the church lighting the candles, making sure flowers were laid out, making sure that all the celebratory tools were prepared. These were labours of love; these were labours of passion; these were labours of commitment to their faith and to the sense of community.

It struck me that those people could not have done that had they been required to work in their retail jobs, because there are more than a few people in that parish who are retail workers. We would not have had that great celebration of community that we did were these people required to work on Sunday. I have a feeling that the celebrations at St John's church down in the basement on a Sunday afternoon and evening of community, well, they are not going to be quite as complete down the road as they have been in the past, because there are no two ways about it, the legislation before the House today retains local option. It is legislation I have expressed my concern about a number of times.

I am happy to have in the House here today people from Welland: Tony Wszolek and Leonard Wszolek. They are as typical a couple of Welland folk as you could ever find; hardworking people from a hardworking family; family people who care about that sense of family; who live within walking distance of their parents and grandparents and who still, by way of tradition, celebrate Sunday not just as a day of worship, although that is very important in so many people's lives, but who celebrate Sunday as a day of family and a day of community. I am proud of people like Tony and Leonard Wszolek and their family, and I know their parents, their children and their grandparents. I am proud of the kind of contribution they have made to our community.

We are talking about the children of immigrant parents here who have worked so hard. We are talking about the children of a retiree—Mike Wszolek retired from Union Carbide only last year—who remembers the fight to create the five-day workweek and who participated in that fight, that struggle, with more than a little bit of sacrifice on his own.

We are talking about people like Mike and Josie Wszolek, who fought hard and worked hard as members of their community to make sure that, yes, there was common pause time available to people and they celebrated that as quality time. That is right. I have a little bit of trouble because I have heard as part of this committee—I was permitted to serve with the committee for two weeks. I feel that I started too late and ended too early, but it was a fine two weeks and I enjoyed the companionship and the kindness of my colleagues from all parties.

But I heard from people across Ontario, just as I have been hearing from people in Welland and Thorold and in communities I am capable of visiting and listening to. I am so pleased about the Treasurer's recent announcement to freeze consultants' fees. Some members have heard my criticism of high-priced consultants, and I am convinced I can go back to Welland-Thorold or to virtually any town or city in this province on any weekend of the year and hear far better advice than we are going to get from high-priced pollsters, spin doctors and consultants.

I know the developers wanted to build new plazas and have their stores open seven days a week. These are the wealthy developers who have no intention of ever having to visit those workplaces on Sunday. They could not give a tinker's dam about the hardworking people. It is as often as not women who are going to be forced into working on Sunday with wide-open Sunday shopping.

We also have a couple of people here who have fought the good fight: Andy Faas, the executive vice-president of National Grocers Co Ltd, and of course Gerald Vandezande, the executive director of Fairness for Families. That is not to overlook by omission the not just hundreds but thousands of people who have fought the hard fight for a common pause day in this province. They fought it because of their commitment to church, community and family and because they believe the commercialization of that final last day of the week will impact, condemn and attack church, family and community. I agree with those people.

I know there are people who have been sold this bill of goods about the right to shop. Some of the same kinds of promoters and developers who were talking to the standing committee on administration of justice about the right to shop say, "Quality time; please bring your kids with you."

Of course they want you to take your kids with you when you are shopping at Eaton's, K mart or Zellers. That will tax the credit cards at two or three times what it would have been otherwise. Give me a break. You and I both know, Mr Speaker—I recognize the acknowledgement in your face—that those who talk about the right to shop on shopping plaza time as quality family time are not just out to lunch, they are engaging in flim-flammy that is not quite unequalled but none the less somewhat rare.

There is the whole issue of cross-border shopping. I grew up and continue to live in one of those communities close enough to the border that we are well aware of the phenomenon of cross-border shopping. Cross-border shopping has nothing to do with shopping on Sunday. It has everything to do with the fact that some things are cheaper across the border.

The fact is that those same people who are lured—and I am not about to condemn people looking for bargains, although we have to mention that the taxation that attaches to some of the products we buy here in Canada, which are inevitably cheaper in the United States, is the type of taxation that maintains a health care system of which we can be very exclusively proud. It maintains an educational system and a whole lot of other services that our friends to the south, Americans, simply do not have available to them.

So I do not buy the argument that we need Sunday shopping because somehow it is going to have an impact on cross-border shopping. It will have zero impact. The fact is that I am not convinced we need Sunday shopping in those weeks preceding Christmas because, and let's face reality, this is not going to be a particularly prosperous Christmas for retailers whether they are open seven days a week, six days a week or only five. The fact is that families are exercising restraint over their spending in a way that they have not for a long time. We are facing very difficult times. Free trade has robbed so many of our workers of their jobs.

An hon member: The GST.

Mr Kormos: And yes, the GST has created a tax burden on consumers. The GST imposed by the federal government has created a tax burden on consumers that make it impossible for them to carry on in a way that retailers and a whole bunch of other sectors in the community would want.

I know all about small businesses. My family, my grandparents and then my parents ran family businesses before I was born and all throughout my life living with my family. I worked in those small businesses as a kid. Small businesses need a common pause day more than anybody in the retail sector because those small businesses are small enough that they do not have to hire great numbers of outside help, but big enough that they can sustain families and support them and send kids on to university, kids like myself who were blessed with opportunities our parents and grandparents never had.

Small businesses are going to be cursed and damned into oblivion by wide-open Sunday shopping. That is the truth. Small business people are not calling out for Sunday shopping. Small business people are pleading with government to please provide them with at least one day of rest, because they are simply not going to be able to compete with the K marts and the Zellers and the chain stores if they are forced to stay open seven days a week. They simply cannot do it.

It is going to kill small-town downtowns. It is going to be the final nail in the coffin of small-town downtowns. Thorold resents being called a town, as well it should, because it is a city; but it is a nice, healthy community that is still reasonably small in the total scheme of things. Sunday shopping will be the death knell for small-town downtowns, like Welland, like Thorold.

I am left with some very difficult choices. I am oh so impressed with the arguments that again Mr Vandezande made on behalf of families. I am impressed with the logic and the reasoning of people like Gerrit de Boer from Idomo Furniture who almost singlehandedly has persevered in bringing this issue, a common pause day, home to people across the province.

I will tell the members this, and I am recommending it to people who are listening now: I think we should pay close attention to those people like Gerrit de Boer from Idomo, like Andy Faas from National Grocers, and I intend to restrict my patronage to those retailers who have fought the good fight for a common pause day and for family and church and community. If I have to make a choice, my choice will not be hard to make. I will be buying at Idomo and Gerrit de Boer before I will be buying from somebody who is a fanatic about wanting to commercialize that final day of rest, that final common pause day.

I am left with something of a dilemma. I am also thankful to the Solicitor General for permitting me to speak on the legislation, and I have not been at all envious of his role. He has been thrust into a position in cabinet and acquired the carriage of this legislation, and was immediately struck with a number of forces coming at him from literally all directions. But about this I can be certain. I have been very specific and very clear about my support for common pause day and my opposition to wide-open Sunday shopping and I have been consistent in that regard, which is far more than I can say for most of the members of both opposition parties.

I am not happy about this legislation. I am not happy about Sunday shopping during the weeks in December preceding Christmas. I am not happy about local optioning. I am not happy about as yet non-existent, but I am told soon to exist, tourist criteria, but when I hear the Conservative member for Oakville South tell this House and the people of Ontario that he is opposing this legislation because it does not create wide-open Sunday shopping, I feel my hand being forced, I tell members with great reluctance, knowing full well the pain and the struggles that the minister, the Solicitor General and his parliamentary assistant and, I am convinced, this whole government have gone through over the Sunday shopping issue.

Notwithstanding that, the final position is one with which I do not agree and about which I have great fears, because my fear is the fear of wide-open Sunday shopping. My fear is the fear of checkerboarding that is going to be created by virtue of local option that is going to create not cross-border shopping but cross-municipal shopping. It is going to put pressures on adjoining communities that wanted to hold the line and make them wide-open as well, which means we will have no common pause day and no day of rest and no day on which to celebrate church and family and community.

I am fearful about the fact that this legislation is not tough enough, but I am enthused by the fact that it is still one heck of a lot better than what the last government left us holding the bag on. I am confident that I do not want in any way, shape or form to be aligned with the Conservative Party, which would want to oppose this legislation not because it thinks the legislation does not create a common pause day, but because it thinks the legislation is not sufficient in creating wide-open Sunday shopping.

The honourable members will see I will not align myself with a party that has no concern for family or church or community, that has no concern for working people. I heard the member for Oakville South outside the House earlier today talking about how he wanted to be perceived as the stalwart defender of working people, yet his opposition to the prospect of a common pause day is a condemnation of working people to seven days of labour and a destruction of those things that even he should hold dear and important.

Mr Carr: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I should let you know that I did not say that. I believe the member is mistaken and he should know that.

The Speaker: The member does not have a point of order; perhaps a point of disagreement.

Mr Kormos: Here I am. I argued as strongly as I could the position that I believe in. I persisted very much in what I believed in for the last year, two years and three years. I am in a position where I vote with the Tories against working people and against families or where I vote with my government in support of legislation which I am not particularly enthusiastic about but which I concede is again a far cry better than what the last government hung us with.

My position on local optioning, on tourism criteria by regulation, has not changed at all. My fears about this legislation being less effective than it should be remain.

But my fears about the Tory agenda of wide-open Sunday shopping are so overwhelming that it is my intention to vote with the Solicitor General in support of this bill and to work as hard as I can to achieve the goals that the bill purports to achieve. At the same time I think it is incumbent upon people in this assembly to be honest about the fact that compromises have been made, and it is important for people in this House to monitor the legislation and its impact with a view not just to encouraging but to insisting upon remedial legislation as promptly as possible in the event that my worst fears about the inadequacy of this legislation are realized.

Mr Mahoney: I have now seen the ultimate form of justification. I have now seen a member stand up and pontificate at some length about how wrong this legislation is but then say he cannot support it because the Tories support it. He has found a way to take himself full circle and show that clearly what we have been saying is correct, that many of the members over there have principles, and if we do not like them, they have others. That is clearly the message we just got.

Let me ask the member to come back in his two minutes and tell this House—he went on at some length about the church serving dinner—who cooked the dinner? It was on a Sunday. Or did they do it on Saturday? Who served it? Who cleaned up afterwards? Who works in the police departments, in the fire departments, in the recreational halls, in the arenas in the community centres? Who works in the hospitals? Who works in emergency services? Could the Ministry of Labour tell us who works in the steel industry 24 hours a day, seven days a week, all over this province?

Now this wonderful government has come along and decided there is one specific sector that says, "We're going to generate a common pause day except in December," for some reason. I guess a lobby got to them. Once again their principles have been put aside for other sets of principles.

The inconsistency of the former speaker is unbelievable, but it fits into the inconsistency of this government that fails to understand that small business, particularly in border communities, sits in darkness on a Sunday while in the outlet malls in Niagara Falls there are hundreds, maybe thousands, of Ontario licence plates on vehicles while people shop and spend their money. These people have their heads in the sand and are not paying attention to modern-day reality.

The Speaker: Questions or comments? The member for Downsview.

Mr Perruzza: I appreciate the opportunity to address some of the comments that have been made by the member for Mississauga West. My comments are not going to be very long, but when the member talks about cross-border shopping and he talks about Sundays—

Mr Mahoney: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I understood from the rules and procedures that the two-minute comments were to the speech that was given by the member, as opposed to my remarks. I would be delighted to cut in and debate with the gentleman, but I would like to hear his opinion on what the member for Welland-Thorold said.

The Speaker: The member for Mississauga West indeed has a valid point of order. The comments and questions opportunity is to be directed to the member who made the speech, and in this case it is the member for Welland-Thorold.

Mr Perruzza: In that case, I will wait for another day.

The Speaker: Further questions or comments? The member for Welland-Thorold has up to two minutes to respond.

Mr Kormos: I have to use this two minutes most carefully. What kind of person, what kind of mind, would equate the emergency services of hospital care, of health care, with the need to buy shoes or television sets or clothes? What kind of mind would equate the necessity of police work with the need to provide retail services seven days a week rather than the six days on which they are provided now?

If some of those women from the Hungarian community in Welland were here to listen to this comment about their labour of love and faith on a Sunday, they would be most outraged. As a matter of fact, the member for Mississauga West would have his ears pinned back good by some of those ladies from St John's Greek Catholic Church. They would straighten him out in short order. These ladies and men, with their faith and compassion for each other and their enthusiasm about sharing Sunday, have no difficulty in equating work as in work for wages, have no difficulty in understanding how it is that we do not need to have Sunday commercialized, that we need to maintain Sunday as a day of rest, as a common pause day, as a day of faith and as a day of community.

The Liberals and the Tories are insistent that "workers be damned." Make people in non-essential sectors work seven days a week. Those people, as often as not earning the lowest of wages, unprotected by trade unions, let them be damned and let them serve the types of minds that occupy those benches. I say they are wrong. I say that is a frail and pathetic response. They may well have their day. The frailty of this legislation may well give them what they seek, but let them be a little bit clearer about where they really stand on the issue.

Mr Sorbara: I guess the orchestra is packing up its instruments; the windbags have now all spoken.

Mr Mahoney: A point of privilege, Mr Speaker.

The Speaker: I think you probably have one.

Mr Mahoney: I can only assume my honourable friend was referring to the windbags opposite. I wish he would take the time to clarify his statement in this House.

Mr Sorbara: I will not have any comment on that other than to say that I do not think we are going to bring the leadership campaign into this chamber.

I guess I just do not have any comment whatever about the remarks of the member for Welland-Thorold, who tried to justify in a very loud speech why he thinks the legislation is entirely the wrong way to proceed, yet is going to vote for it. I find that very difficult to understand.

We are now into the final minutes of the debate on Bill 115. What I would remark in closing this debate on behalf of my own party is that even the arrangement and commitment of the government and the government House leader today to provide me with some time to reflect on where this bill has gone over the course of the past five and a half months has not been honoured. I think it is just another example of the difficult time this government has had in ordering its agenda.

I want to say just a couple of words about the course of consideration of this bill. I thank particularly the member for Prescott and Russell and the member for Nepean, both members of my party, who did such an admirable job in considering the bill during public hearings and finally debating the bill during a very lengthy clause-by-clause consideration.

I also want to say a word of congratulation to the member for Oakville South, who is elected for the first time to Parliament and who did, I think, a very commendable job in considering the bill in all of its aspects and offering an opposition that was both intelligent and informed.

Mr Mahoney: He wasn't that good.

Mr Sorbara: No, he was pretty good, as a rookie.

I want to tell my friends in this House what is wrong with this bill. I want to say to them that what is wrong with this bill is the same thing that is wrong with so much of what this government has been doing in its first 15 months in office.

The Treasurer the other day had yet another crisis with his budget, but he was not able to realize and he was not able to acknowledge in this House that the budget is in shambles because the economy is in shambles. In his defence and his suggestion that the federal government is going to bail us out, somehow he thinks he is suggesting an answer.

What is wrong with this government is what the Minister of the Environment did when she introduced Bill 143, suggesting that the garbage crisis can be solved by taking away the rights of this Parliament and the people of this province.

What is wrong with Bill 115 is that it has us debating a topic that has now passed by the people of this province. They are no longer interested in a government and a Parliament trying to make their choices as to what they do on Sunday or any other day.

If the government members wanted to see the real issue in retailing, they should have been with us on the committee and they should have walked the streets of Windsor to see the empty stores. They should have walked the streets of Sault Ste Marie to see store after store on the main street of Sault Ste Marie and the main street of Ontario for rent, gone out of business. They should have come to Cornwall to see that business after business in the retail sector is feeling the pain of a crushing recession.

The Solicitor General says he is going to protect retail workers. I will give him another way of protecting retail workers. He should give them an opportunity to work. Our businesses are dying. Our businesses are uncompetitive. Our businesses can no longer attract the consumers they need to hire the workers, to pay the taxes and to feed themselves. For the past five and a half months in this Parliament, we have been trying to figure out a way to keep them closed on Sunday, even those ones that are willing to open. That was wrong.

Even if my friends in the government accept that they want to bring about a common pause day in Ontario, then, my God, this would not be the bill to do it. If they want to do that, they should bring in a bill authored by the member for Welland-Thorold. This bill is not about a common pause. This bill is not about retail workers. They have solved the problem with retail workers, by giving them the absolute right to say they do not want to work on Sunday. What more could they do? What more could the law offer?

Mr Fletcher: You even said that in committee.

Mr Sorbara: No, no, I say to my friend the member for Guelph. It was the former Solicitor General, who was recently sitting in this chair, who said it would not work. I say it will work and I said it would work when I brought in worker protections as Minister of Labour, and that is good, that is fine.

Interjections.

Mr Sorbara: If members want to heckle, we can be here for about seven days if they like. They agreed to give me some time to speak.

If they want a common pause day for people, then they should give people a common pause day. They should give the steelworkers a common pause day, give the nurses a common pause day, give the factory workers a common pause day, give the construction workers a common pause day, give the ambulance drivers a common pause day. They should not stand up and hypocritically say in this House that because maybe 100,000 retail workers will not have to work as a result of this flawed, poorly thought out legislation, there is going to be a common pause day in Ontario. They know that is not true.

The even worse and even greater hypocrisy is that the government is going to bring in tourism criteria that are going to allow stores to open. My God, the Solicitor General congratulated the gentleman in the gallery for having chaired the body that is going to give us our tourism criteria: a very competent man who is the head of a grocery company and who was ably assisted by the president of Hudson's Bay Co. These are not tourist operations. If they have reached consensus, we know what those regulations say: If you say you are a tourist operation, then it is okay. That is another fraud on the people of Ontario.

The government cannot have it both ways. They cannot say we have tourism criteria that will accommodate anyone who wants to open, a great consensus from Hudson's Bay Co and Loblaws, tourist outfits all. Yes indeed, they will comply. Is that what the Solicitor General is telling us? That is another deception, I say to him, in this stupid, crazy, unfortunate debate on Sunday shopping.

The December issue was the greatest folly. The government talks about a common pause. My God, December is the busiest month for all of us. We have Christmas plays to go to. We have shopping to do. We have work to do. We have driveways to shovel. In that month, for some strange reason, the notion of a common pause, which is at the heart of everything the Premier talked about when he was in opposition, does not apply. It is hypocrisy, it is stupidity and it will not work. The people simply want their freedom. The people simply want an opportunity to make up their own minds as to what they do with their lives seven days a week. The people simply want to decide whether they will go out with their spouses and their children in the afternoon to a baseball game or to a park or to a store.

Local communities want the opportunity to establish their own standards. We saw that over the past two years. The community of Windsor decided it would prefer to allow its shopkeepers to stay open. This bill will pass and those stores will be forced to close. At the same time, the people of North Bay decided they wanted to keep their stores closed. North Bay's decision did not affect what Windsor wanted to do and Windsor's decision did not affect what North Bay wanted to do. People had the freedom to make up their own minds.

The New Democratic Party used to like to talk about freedom; now it talks about some stupid notion that somehow Bill 115 is going to give the people pause. It is going to give them no such thing. It is going to give lawyers hundreds and hundreds of hours to bill on behalf of clients who have to apply through the most complex application and appeal procedure we have ever come up with in this Parliament for so simple an issue as whether or not a store can open or close. It is going to give workers in this province no new opportunity to work. I think that is the greatest defect of all in this bill.

I know some people in this province would prefer to return to the Ontario of the 1940s and the early 1950s when frankly the swings in the parks were locked up. You could not see a movie; you certainly could not shop; you could not go to any kind of sporting event. You could not do very much of anything. There are some people who want to return to that kind of Ontario. It is very romantic and attractive, and I guess in a society based on freedom that is a valid point of view. But our obligation is to legislate for the Ontario that is about to be. The Ontario that is about to be does not want to discriminate between stores that are tourist stores and stores that sell chips rather than exotic fried potato chips to some tourist who is walking down the street. You cannot discriminate between a business that says, "I've got a 20% tourist clientele" and one that says, "Tourists come in maybe once or twice a month." If they want to open, they should be given their freedom. Democracies are all about vesting in people freedom.

We have considered this poorly drafted legislation freely in this Parliament for almost five and a half months. The legislation will not work. I can guarantee to members that within days of a new Parliament sitting this bill will be repealed because it does not work. In the meantime, I want to say to my friends on the government benches that in this matter, as in so many other matters, they have not served the people of Ontario well. That is why I and my party are going to be voting against this bill.

Hon Mr Pilkey: I would like to thank my colleagues in the House from all parties for their constructive exchange of views on Bill 115. There were days and moments when I did not enjoy the sessions in the clause-by-clause, but understanding that the government is here to promote legislation and the opposition is here to oppose, I took many of the comments then and today in that particular spirit. But overriding all of that, I did appreciate the appreciation of the various members on the committee as they attempted to do their job.

It is important to remember that this bill, borne of long-standing principles, timely commitments and diverse and thoughtful input from the public, is also a significant piece of legislation in its intent, in its content and in the open and consultative way in which it was developed.

Now as we move ahead towards a new year, I feel confident that an important position we have taken will be affirmed in law and an important promise that was made to the people of Ontario will be kept. That promise, as outlined in the throne speech of November 1990, involves legislation that provides for common pause days all Ontarians can share in. I believe Bill 115 achieves that.

I conclude my remarks by again thanking members of the government caucus and the opposition for their very thoughtful input with respect to this matter.

The Speaker: Mr Pilkey has moved third reading of Bill 115. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will please "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Call in the members.

1757

The Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 27(g), it is requested that the vote on the motion by the Honourable Allan Pilkey for third reading of Bill 115, An Act to amend the Retail Business Holidays Act and the Employment Standards Act in respect of the opening of retail business establishments and employment in them, be deferred until immediately following routine proceedings on Monday, November 25, 1991. That request is by the member for Niagara South, the chief government whip.

Vote deferred.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon Mr Cooke: Pursuant to standing order 53, I would like to indicate the business of the House for next week.

On Monday, November 25, following routine proceedings, we will have a vote on Bill 115 and then have royal assent on a number of bills. We will then resume the adjourned debate on second reading of Bill 143, An Act respecting the Management of Waste in the Greater Toronto Area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act.

On Tuesday, November 26, we will continue Bill 143.

On Wednesday, November 27, there will be an opposition day.

On Thursday, November 28, in the morning, we will deal with private members' business, ballot items 47, standing in the name of Mr Mahoney, and 48, standing in the name of Mr Harris.

In the afternoon, we will continue the adjourned debate on second reading of Bill 143, An Act respecting Management of Waste for the Greater Toronto Area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act.

The House adjourned at 1801.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Subscriptions

Subscription information may be obtained from: Sessional Subscription Service, Publications Ontario, Ministry of Government Services, 5th Floor, 880 Bay Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone (416) 326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1 (800) 668-9938.

Table des matières

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi que celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Monday 25 November 1991

The House met at 1330.

Prayers.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

ORGAN DONORS

Mr Henderson: Nicholas Martin, Carmen Young and Ashley Hughes are three children whose lives hang by a thread because Ontario lacks a mechanism for ensuring donor organ availability for transplant surgery. Nicholas goes to school every day with an oxygen tank, Carmen has had her seventh lung collapse and Ashley has a congenital heart defect which constantly threatens her life.

Only a few months ago the Legislature of Nova Scotia, with all-party agreement, passed a bill requiring hospitals to designate someone to ask the families of deceased patients for permission to obtain body tissue or organs for transplant purposes. The requirement is waived if there is no need for tissue, if the tissue is unsuitable or if the emotional condition of the consentor makes the request inappropriate.

My private member's bill, Bill 153, replicates the Nova Scotia law in Ontario. Here is an opportunity for this government to look very good by bringing it forward for second and third reading and proclamation. True, Premier Davis and Premier Peterson rarely did that kind of thing, but here is a humanitarian, not a partisan, bill. Times as well as expectations have changed, as has, I hope, the attitude of the government about private members' initiatives.

The Minister of Health and the two opposition critics have expressed their support for the principle of this bill. I implore the Premier and the Minister of Health to save the lives of these three children and help Bill 153 to become law now.

LABOUR LEGISLATION

Mr Turnbull: I stand today to express concern regarding the government's recent labour relations proposals and the impact these amendments will have on businesses in my riding. One company is Taylor Soaps-Perfumes Ltd, a maker of fine soaps since 1865. This company exemplifies the spirit of Canada's entrepreneurs: a small family company, started by the grandfather, using Canadian workers to produce an excellent product.

Mr Taylor has written to me, "Our message must get through to the government to kill this labour legislation, legislation which will certainly discourage new investment in our province by other countries, which means loss of potential jobs for the people of Ontario."

Last week the Treasurer attributed the $2.1-billion decline in personal income tax revenues as the price we are paying for the recession with its plant closings, job losses and overall weak economic performance. Does the Minister of Labour not realize that these proposals will make it more difficult to operate a business in Ontario and that the inevitable result will be plant closings, job losses and overall weak economic performance?

This constituent and too many others are having difficulties in these tough economic times. I ask the government not to make it even harder for companies to do business in Ontario by passing these labour relations proposals. We must create jobs, not soup lines.

SUNRISE FINE BONE CHINA

Ms M. Ward: I hold in my hand a beautiful fine bone china plate decorated with Ontario's floral emblem, the trillium. This collector's item and other fine china pieces are made by Sunrise Fine Bone China, which is located in my riding of Don Mills and employs developmentally handicapped persons.

Sunrise Fine Bone China was established as an integrated workshop for developmentally handicapped individuals in 1983 by the Metropolitan Toronto Association for Community Living. Since 1986, Sunrise has been receiving financial assistance from the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

This year Sunrise was in danger of closing because it had not become self-supporting. Over the summer I received calls and letters from many of the families and friends of the employees. I am happy to announce that with refinancing assistance from the Ontario Development Corp, Sunrise has been purchased by two employees of the company and will continue to employ the developmentally handicapped persons.

Efforts should be made to expand sales of this product within Ontario's tourism industry. Visitors to Canada should be able to buy china with the trillium emblem which is actually made in Canada.

There will be an official reopening of Sunrise Fine Bone China on December 2 at 34 Carnforth Road in Don Mills. The factory will be open to the public from 3 pm to 8 pm.

Members are aware that our legislative gift shop sells a number of fine bone china items from Sunrise. I suggest to members that these would make lovely Christmas gifts.

VEHICLE AND PEDESTRIAN SAFETY

Mr Chiarelli: Later today I will be introducing a bill which would prohibit persons from walking or running on highways or railway tracks or driving vehicles on highways while wearing earphones. Entitled the Vehicle and Pedestrian Safety Act, this bill is designed to address and reduce the occurrence of tragic deaths caused by pedestrians and drivers alike, where accidents have been caused by wearing earphones or headsets.

Recent tragic deaths in Ottawa-Carleton and elsewhere in Ontario provide plenty of evidence that the time has come to tighten up current legislation. The record clearly shows that headsets and traffic do not mix. Those found guilty of violating the Motor Vehicle and Pedestrian Safety Act would be liable to a fine of not less than $60 and not more than $500. The prohibition would not apply to those wearing hearing aids.

This senseless carnage must be reduced. The time has come to pass a new law in the interest of public safety. I urge the government to deal with this bill at the earliest possible opportunity. At the very least, the Minister of Transportation should ensure this bill is referred to a legislative committee for public hearings as soon as possible.

TRANSIT SERVICES

Mr Tilson: The town of Orangeville in my riding has been requesting GO Transit service for many years. After extensive review, the Ministry of Transportation announced that the Orangeville-Caledon run would not get GO service, even though the review demonstrated a marginally sufficient demand to justify it. The minister said that Orangeville does not require GO because there are two private sector lines already servicing the commuter needs of the community.

I would like to update the minister today on the state of these two private lines. Gray Coach has recently announced that the commuter service offered to Orangeville and Caledon residents has been cancelled. Just last Friday, the second private carrier, Denny's Bus Lines, announced that it would be cancelling its route from Orangeville to Yorkdale.

In a letter to a constituent of mine last spring, the previous minister categorically stated that in the event that the private bus services proved unsatisfactory, the ministry would be prepared to re-examine the potential of GO bus service. It is obvious the private lines are proving to be unsatisfactory. The commuter transit service is dwindling away and it is obvious that GO service is the only choice for the area. A service that includes integrated fares and an integrated time schedule that can be relied on is what is needed.

As a result of these latest developments, I would like to know if the minister is finally prepared to grant GO service to my riding. If he will not agree to this, will he at least agree to make the re-examination of this situation a top priority?

CITY OF BARRIE

Mr Wessinger: On October 23, 1991, my office, in co-operation with the city of Barrie and with the assistance of the parliamentary assistants to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Skills Development, held a public forum with the people of Barrie to discuss the economic future of Barrie. It was our intention to get input from organizations, groups and individuals in Barrie so that we could respond to their suggestions with a subsequent course of action.

In this regard, I held a meeting with Mayor Janice Laking of Barrie to establish an economic task force. Our plan is for a jointly sponsored effort which would focus on the establishment of strategies our community might take in planning its economic future. It is our intention to pull together dynamic and thoughtful people in the community to assist with the task force mandate.

We intend to address every facet of life in Barrie, from industrial and commercial renewal to detailed inventories of such factors as recreation, transportation, social services and the environment. We believe this will allow the task force to deal with the greater question of the economy of the city in a totally integrated fashion, using information and suggestions from interest groups and community representatives for a comprehensive study.

I believe this exercise is imperative, not only to address the problems facing the economy of the city of Barrie but also to promote the co-operative and consultative process.

I wish to thank the House for this opportunity to outline our plans for Barrie. I trust that other communities throughout the province may be able to utilize our task force blueprint and apply it to successful ends. Open dialogue and co-operative action of this type between the province and the people of Barrie will help forge the economic strategies for a sustainable future.

CREDIT COUNSELLING

Mr Grandmaitre: The government that prides itself on open and full consultation has managed to once again manipulate its message. This time it is the Minister of Community and Social Services who has managed to tell the media that funding for credit counselling agencies is being withdrawn but has neglected to advise the agencies themselves.

Credit counselling is provided by non-profit agencies to seriously indebted persons. Counselling enables them to resolve their financial problems and develop the ability to manage their own financial affairs. These agencies receive 60% of their funding from the provincial government and now, in the midst of a recession when demand is highest and people are under severe financial pressure, the government has decided to pull the plug.

Credit counselling is a lifeline, a way for people who find their financial pressures overwhelming to gain some control over their lives. Credit counselling is the third party between the individual and his or her creditors that can develop a structured payment plan which can satisfy both parties.

Yet once again, in a panicked attempt to restore economic sanity to Ontario, the Treasurer has forced a small but critical program to be cut and left frustrated credit counselling agencies waiting for a formal announcement and vulnerable clients wondering what will happen next.

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

Mrs Cunningham: My statement today is for the Minister of Skills Development. Canada is at an economic crossroads today and the core of its economic prosperity is at risk. To achieve sustained productivity growth, our economy must continually upgrade itself.

"An upgrading economy is one that pursues greater productivity in existing industries by improving products, utilizing more efficient production processes and migrating into more sophisticated and higher-value industry segments." That is a quote from the Monitor study on Canadian competitiveness.

The capacity of an economy to upgrade its competitive potential depends on—it has worked for us—its post-secondary educational institutions, business, industry and government. It requires a combined effort.

According to Professor David Conklin, director of the University of Western Ontario's office of the Institute for Research on Public Policy, there must be a push for greater retraining along with the encouragement of innovation and an emphasis on technology if Canada is to continue to compete in the global economy.

Corporations will be delivering much more education than they ever have in the past, and the labour movement will have a major role to play as well. We would like to add that with the additional leadership of labour in retraining, Canada could solve its competition problems. We encourage the movement to be more active than it ever has been before.

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Ms Harrington: The time of Christmas shopping is upon us. This is the time of year when retail businesses sink or swim. It is a season that gives hundreds of businesses the cash flow to see them through the months ahead. Let's think about the consequences of the decision we make about where to spend our Christmas present budget, here or "across the river," as they say.

How many more stores will be closed in January? More closed stores mean more unemployment. Each job loss is a personal tragedy. Just last Friday I spoke to a neighbour of mine, a man of 35 who visited me with his five-month-old baby. He has lost his job, his wife has left him and now he is going to lose his house.

Tragedy strikes close to home for all of us. In these tough times communities must pull together. The province is investing in my city and it is investing across the province. Increases this year in health care funding, in education funding, in non-profit housing, in roads and sewer works in the city of Niagara Falls, these all mean good jobs for health care workers, for teachers, for contractors and for many more.

But will this money support our local economy or will it flow out the back door across the river? The decision is up to each individual. There are many good things in our community: yesterday's Santa Claus parade, all locally sponsored; the beautiful celebration of the Festival of Lights which opened Saturday, supported by our local businesses. So let's invest in Ontario.

LEGISLATIVE PAGES

The Speaker: I invite all members to join me in welcoming the seventh group of pages to serve in the First Session of the 35th Parliament:

William Ashbee, Fort William; Noelle Bailey, Lambton; Lisa Bernas, Parry Sound; Kathryn Bevington, Muskoka-Georgian Bay; Erica Brownridge, Huron; Jamie Bruce, Durham West; Tamara Church, Nepean; Andrew Cusack, Sudbury; Matthew Daviau, Windsor-Walkerville; Alia den Baars, High Park-Swansea; Owen Ferguson, Grey; Michael Fonesca, Downsview; Heather Frederick, Halton Centre; Sean Hurlbut, Oxford; George Kouniakakis, London North; Leah LaValley, Renfrew North; Peter

MacLeod, Cambridge; Anne Martin-Soucie, Cochrane South; Lindsay Mathysen, Middlesex; Hanna Rose Merkley, Frontenac-Addington; Melanie Poirier, Quinte; Matthew Schurter, Perth; Conor Sheridan, Mississauga North; and Mark Venditti, Etobicoke-Humber.

Please welcome our latest group of pages.

ESTIMATES

The Speaker: Standing order 60(a) provides that: "The standing committee on estimates shall present one report with respect to all of the estimates and supplementary estimates considered pursuant to standing orders 57 and 59 no later than the third Thursday in November of each calendar year."

The House not having received a report from the standing committee on estimates on Thursday, November 21, 1991, as required by the standing orders of this House, pursuant to standing order 60(b) the estimates before the committee are deemed to be passed by the committee and are deemed to be reported to and received by the House.

Hon Mr Rae: Before I begin my remarks, this is the first opportunity I have had to congratulate the member for St Catharines on his elevation to the leadership of the Liberal Party and as Leader of the Opposition. I have always considered the member for St Catharines to be an outstanding member of this place as well as a friend. I am sure I will still feel that way at the end of his term as Leader of the Opposition.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

PREMIER'S VISIT TO EUROPE

VISITE DU PREMIER MINISTRE EN EUROPE

Hon Mr Rae: I want to take this opportunity to report to the House on my recent trip to the United Kingdom, France and Germany. I hope the member for Scarborough-Agincourt is listening.

First, let me share some general impressions of the enormous changes taking place. This is a fascinating time in European and world history. We are days away from Maastricht, the European Community summit that will be discussing further measures of political and economic integration in the common market. This takes place in the shadow of the challenge of a recently united Germany, the re-emergence of independent Eastern European nations and the disintegration of the Soviet Union.

The economies of Western Europe have experienced either recession or slowdown, with the consequences we know well: higher unemployment and higher budgetary deficits. The uncertainty about further change in Europe is definitely having an impact, and the debate in each of the countries about the future shape of Europe was intense. There was, of course, a shared concern about the slowdown in North America and now Japan, and a strong view about the need for continued attention to the depth of the crisis in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

My interest in this trip was obviously to learn first hand of the views of these changes, to encourage a continuing European interest in Ontario and Canada and to encourage more investment and trade generally between us. My message is simple: Ontario is a good place to live, to invest and to do business. We have a solid reputation abroad, strengthened by our openness to peoples and investment from around the world. Our status as an international society, peopled by immigrants from around the world, is an enormous asset.

I stressed Ontario's interest in a successful conclusion of the Uruguay round. We shall benefit as a province from clearer trade rules and better guarantees from foreign protectionism. As a province heavily dependent on foreign trade, we shall pay heavily if there is no agreement reached soon.

There was, of course, much interest in the constitutional debate taking place in Canada. I stressed that federalism makes sense for Canada, precisely because it allows for regional and provincial concerns to be expressed within the federation. I also emphasized that the goals of better markets within the country, institutional reform and a more productive working relationship among all the members of the Canadian federation are of real importance to Ontario.

J'ai fait part de l'engagement de l'Ontario à assurer qu'il ne se produirait pas de «Forteresse Amérique du Nord», néfaste au commerce et aux investissements européens. Pour ma part, j'ai demandé l'assurance que l'Europe ne deviendrait pas «fermée sur elle-même», alors que les pays étaient aux prises avec l'effondrement de l'Empire soviétique et l'élaboration d'une politique européenne d'intégration politique.

Toutes les personnes que j'ai rencontrées ont été promptes à nier qu'une Europe «fermée sur elle-même» serait envisagée, ou même souhaitée, en dépit du fait que les ressources financières et autres consacrées à l'Europe de l'Est et aux pays de l'ancienne Union soviétique représentaient un coût énorme. Rien n'est plus compréhensible. L'Europe a vécu pendant plus de 40 ans auprès d'un empire totalitaire, doté d'armes nucléaires. La fin de ce régime est venue avec un effet dramatique.

We all shared the joy of the collapse of the Berlin Wall and the unprecedented changes in the formerly Soviet republics. With thousands seeking political asylum now in the West, continued loss of life in Croatia, the prospect of real food shortages in many countries this winter, we must pay attention. Canada and Ontario must do their part in assisting these societies to emerge as fair, productive and democratic economies.

I draw two early conclusions. The first is that our presence in all of Europe, including Eastern Europe, needs to be strengthened. The second is that this government's determination to work through the recession with a balanced approach is the right one. Meeting financial targets, controlling spending, recognizing the depth of the economic changes that are occurring at home and around the world, are critical features of any sensible policy. All governments are facing these challenges. We have to meet them as well.

Let me turn to some specifics of my trip. When I do so, I am conscious of the work of former governments, and former premiers, in laying the groundwork for Ontario's relations with the governments and economies of Europe. Members will know that the governments of four regions, Rhône-Alpes in France, Baden-Württemberg in Germany, Lombardy in Italy and Catalonia in Spain, are joined together in a group known as the Four Motors. These are four industrialized regions in key economies in Europe, and our relationship with them represents a unique opportunity to strengthen our cultural, scientific and educational links to Europe.

In Lyon and Stuttgart, I signed declarations affirming our partnerships with President Millon of Rhône-Alpes and Minister-President Teufel of Baden-Württemberg. We have committed to a program called Telepresence, a joint project that will draw on the scientific and technical skills of our public and private institutions here in Ontario working with their counterparts in Europe.

Telepresence is just one example of the projects underway as a result of our relationship with the Four Motors, and both President Millon and Minister-President Teufel indicated to me their strong desire to expand and deepen our relationships. This is good news for Ontario.

Baden-Württemberg is also twinned to the new state of Saxony in the eastern part of Germany. The Minister-President and I agreed that Ontario should use its existing good relations to reach out to a region with its major cities of Dresden and Leipzig.

These relationships are helpful in opening doors to industrial Europe. There are major opportunities for our businesses in Europe, but many of those I met in government and business expressed frustration that our companies are not assertive enough. I encourage them to explore the opportunities in Europe and take advantage of the excellent representation of the Ontario and Canadian governments in key European markets.

I was able to meet representatives of the financial and industrial communities who are important to Ontario at a number of private and public meetings. I spoke to the Canada-UK Chamber of Commerce, the Canada-France Chamber of Commerce, the German Association of Industry, and participated in the signing of a partnership agreement between the Canadian high-tech firm of Newbridge and the German company Siemens.

I want to thank Ambassador Charland and Ambassador Delworth, High Commissioner Eaton, Agent General Nixon, Agent General Doucet, Senior Representative Idler and their staffs and, of course, senior ministry staff here in Toronto for their able assistance.

Je voudrais, en terminant, faire part à l'Assemblée de ma visite à Brouage, lieu de naissance de Samuel de Champlain. Ma femme et moi avons assisté à la bénédiction officielle d'un vitrail dans l'église du village commémorant l'amitié durable entre l'Ontario et la France. Le vitrail a été commandité par la Fondation du patrimoine ontarien en collaboration avec la Fondation MacDonald Stewart. Brouage est une petite ville de la côte ouest française. La cérémonie dans cette humble petite église a rendu un hommage à Champlain et à des centaines de milliers de personnes d'origine française qui vivent et travaillent en Ontario aujourd'hui et contribuent à la prospérité de cette province.

RESPONSES

PREMIER'S VISIT TO EUROPE

Mr Bradley: While the Premier was on his jaunt to Europe playing international statesman, the economy of Ontario has been collapsing all around us. Even George Bush, when he saw what the domestic agenda was, the problems that were being confronted on the home front, knew enough to cancel his trip at that time and concentrate his time and effort on the domestic issues.

If the Premier wanted to visit some appropriate places, he might have visited Windsor or Renfrew or St Catharines or Sault Ste Marie or Alexandria or Barrie or almost any of the communities in Ontario which happen to be losing jobs, which happen to be facing the closing of plants, which happen to be facing unemployment and the human toll that brings about.

As the Premier was leaving Ontario the unemployment figures were being announced and, once again, those unemployment figures were rising. Businesses in every part of the province were complaining of difficulty in even existing for another few months, let alone contemplating any new investment in this province. New taxes were being threatened by the Treasurer and by others who contemplated the need for new taxes as this government's revenues were predictably—predictably as far as most people in Ontario were concerned—underestimated.

We have a situation where municipalities and local boards are being dumped upon as the downloading on to those municipalities is being threatened for the next fiscal year. We have food banks which are under even greater pressure than they were when the Premier left this province. We have credit counselling services, which are absolutely essential in communities across Ontario and are strongly supported by labour councils and individual unions across Ontario and have had to have their employees, their members, use those services, being abandoned by the Minister of Community and Social Services.

The Minister of Health is forcing bed closings right across Ontario with her policies, even though it was anticipated that we would see more beds and more health services under an NDP government. Hospital deficits are soaring from one end of the province to the other as the anticipated costs are rising, costs which everyone knew were going to have to rise because of the aging of the population. Those hospitals are not getting sufficient money from the province.

Nurses are being fired, as are other members of hospital staffs and others in the health care field, even though the Premier, large as life, showed up at the Ontario Nurses' Association meeting and encouraged them to have a big increase in pay. I think people in Ontario supported that particular urging by the Premier. Then we turn around and have the provincial government pull the financial rug out from under the hospitals so that those nurses have to be fired, even though a few of them may be making more money as a result.

Health care services are being cut. Daily we see memos slipping out that indicate that the province is not going to cover as many of the procedures and practices as it did in the past. User fees are being threatened on senior citizens and other disadvantaged people in this province. Organ transplant programs are being threatened. They are certainly, at the very least, under a cloud.

I even noted that the refillable ratio for soft drink containers has gone down to about 7%. One would not have anticipated that in NDP Ontario.

The Minister of Energy is fending off suggestions that hydro rates are too high, as they rise 11%, 12%, 13%, 14% and higher in some of the communities across Ontario.

I do not say there is not a time for the Premier to go to Europe. There is, from time to time, and that is when the House is not sitting. We need to have an opportunity on a daily basis to question the Premier. In fact I distinctly heard, with about 35 seconds left in question period, the wheels of the Premier's jet touching down at Pearson International Airport. A week prior to that he had been seen with the royal couple, with all those wonderful photo opportunities that go with it, and then off to Europe as an international statesman. Meanwhile, Ontario is in dire straits.

We are pleased to see the Premier back. We hope he devotes his time now to the domestic issues that are confronting this province.

Mr Carr: I too would like to welcome the Premier back to Ontario after his trip. I understand he had a chance to reminisce and visit Cambridge, where he went to school.

I used to be a sales manager. The first thing you do when you have a salesperson come back is look for results. As I sit and look at this statement, I say it is a good job that this Premier was not on commission, because quite frankly he would starve with the results coming back from this particular trip. The first thing you do is look for concrete results in terms of the amount of money that is going to be invested here or the jobs that are going to be created. There is none of that in here; no results and a lot of rhetoric.

The same thing happened in the standing committee on estimates when we talked to the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Technology. They told us about all the wonderful things they do, all the offices they open, all the people they talk to, but they never get specific in being able to say: "Here's an agreement we signed. Here's some investment in this province. Here are some jobs in this province."

One of the problems is that this Premier, because of his actions, has a very difficult product to sell. Recent studies show that we are in a 20% to 50% higher tax bracket in Ontario versus the United States. We are uncompetitive. While the Premier was travelling around Europe, I was meeting with an industry in Cambridge that invested billions of dollars in this province.

They said: "We used to get calls from around the world saying, 'We are coming to invest in Ontario. What do you think?' Right now the phones are silent. We are not getting any calls. If we are honest, when we do get the calls we're saying, 'Don't come here,' because of this government and its labour relations amendments."

A recent study said that because of this government's labour relations amendments 500,000 jobs and $20 billion of investment are at risk, and the Premier comes back with nothing. There is going to be a net loss under his premiership, and as a salesman he has been a failure. As we look at it and discuss it with businesses in this province, they know what needs to be done. We need to be more competitive, because if we are not competitive, we are going to lose markets. When we lose markets, people lose jobs.

There is nothing in this statement to make us more competitive. There is nothing in this statement to say specifically what the Premier is going to do to turn this mess around. As we sit here today, I say this Premier is a failure as a salesperson. He had better get back to doing what he should do best, which is being Premier and doing the things that need to be done, so a year from now, when he goes to the rest of world, he will have a better product to sell.

Mrs Cunningham: I thought it was interesting today in the Premier's statement—I think it is something all of us should be aware of—that the people in Europe are telling us our companies are not assertive enough. For those of us who make it our business to find out what is going on around the world, it is not news. This is exactly what we have been told.

Most of us would agree we have been somewhat studied to death and that the facts for Ontario and Canada with regard to the worrisome performance trends are not numbers and figures we want to really believe. The most serious weakness in this country is our low productivity growth. To solve that problem we are going to need the help not only of this government but of industry, business, labour and our colleges and universities. Since the early 1970s Canada has ranked near the bottom of all major industrial countries in productivity growth.

I think also the Premier knows that his next challenge with regard to Canada's record is that of unit labour costs. Unit labour costs between 1979 and 1989 in the manufacturing sector in Canada rose more quickly than those in most other industrialized countries and increased more than twice as fast as the costs in the United States.

We are giving the Premier these numbers because we know he is going to need them in the upcoming negotiations. All of us live on a day-to-day basis with the realities of unemployment in our province. We also know that the lagging investments on behalf of the government and the private sector in upgrading skills and technology are something this government is going to have to work hard not only to show leadership in but to encourage in the private sector.

With regard to the macroeconomic environment, I can only quote from a report that I know the Premier has looked at. It has to do with government deficits and rapidly growing public debts. I will close by saying that the combined federal and provincial government debt has been growing more quickly than the economy for a decade and now exceeds 70% of the gross domestic product. Among the G-7 countries, only Italy has a higher government debt than we do.

MEMBER'S MAILING

Mr Sorbara: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: If I can have a page, I will send you a copy of a document out of which the point of privilege arises.

This matter arises out of a letter distributed by the member for Yorkview during the course of the last municipal election campaign, specifically a letter distributed in conjunction with the election of separate school trustees in ward 3 of the Metropolitan Toronto area.

I submit to you, Mr Speaker, that this letter is not only libellous but maligns a candidate for that election who is currently a member of our caucus and at the relevant time was a member of my constituency staff. I raise it with you because the letter is under the signature of the member for Yorkview.

I will not quote the whole letter, but in it he says among other things—if the page could just deliver that to the Speaker, that to the Premier and that to the member for Yorkview, we can get on with this matter.

Mr Mahoney: The member for Yorkview is not here.

Mr Sorbara: I think the member for Yorkview is hiding somewhere behind the curtain.

This letter says, among other things, "Bill 162 Sorbara's legislation, which favours the desires of employers over the needs of workers, is a prime example of their disregard for working people in our community." Then he goes on to say, "Tony Genco"—who was the candidate in question—"was part of that Liberal government and ministry." I want to submit to you, Mr Speaker, that Mr Genco was neither part of the Liberal government nor part of the ministry, although he did do good work for me in my constituency affairs.

The letter goes on to say—

Interjections.

Mr Sorbara: I just say to my friends on the other side, if they feel this is the kind of politics they subscribe to, I will be willing to hear that.

The Speaker: Would the member address the point of privilege, please.

Mr Sorbara: The letter continues: "You may choose a Liberal, Tony Genco, who worked with the government for Bill 162 and all the harm it has done to families of working people. Or you can vote, as I urge you to do, for Mary Cicogna...."

I submit that for an MPP to print material which is wrong, which misleads and misstates facts and insults and misrepresents an employee of this Legislature, an employee of one of our caucuses, goes far below the standard of politics we have become accustomed to in this province. It should be an embarrassment to the member for Yorkview, should embarrass the Premier because this man is one of his caucus, violates my privileges as a member of this House and as a former minister of the crown and is an insult to all of us who believe in high standards of politics.

The Speaker: To the member for York Centre, I appreciate your bringing this to my attention. I will indeed consider it and report back to you later.

ORAL QUESTIONS

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr Bradley: My question is for the Premier. I welcome him back to Ontario and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

The Premier has spoken many times in this House about open, honest and co-operative government. In light of these particular comments—and I recognize the Premier has been away but I know his office controls all—can the Premier today explain to us exactly what the consultation central co-ordinating committee is? What is its mandate and what people has he chosen to sit on this committee?

Hon Mr Rae: I would have to see what document the leader is referring to, or exactly what it is he is talking about. As the Leader of the Opposition will know, there is a substantial interest in the government in consulting with the general public and in consulting with people from around the province, so I look forward to seeing what it is the member is referring to. It would not be unusual for there to be a committee that would be involved in discussing and co-ordinating various consultation processes that are going on.

Mr Bradley: I would like to inform the House that I have in my possession a confidential memo to cabinet—another one—from the chief government whip, the member for Niagara South, dated November 19, 1991. Before I begin my supplementary, I ask the Premier if he will personally assure this House that he will not order a police interrogation of me or any member as a result of the release of this confidential matter.

It would be of interest to the Premier to know that in this confidential document the member outlines the mandate, membership and goals of his new consultation central co-ordinating committee. It would also interest the Premier that the member's understanding of this committee is somewhat different, perhaps, from his own. According to the memo, the committee, which has met twice, is made up primarily of NDP political staff, including David Reville and John Piper from the Premier's office. Perhaps most damning is the prominent place reserved on the committee for provincial NDP secretary Jill Marzetti. The memo says that the purpose of the CCC committee is "to maximize the government's profile and to establish new support bases across Ontario." The memo goes on to state that all co-ordination of this committee will be vetted through MPPs, their constituency staff, activists and NDP caucus services.

The Speaker: And the supplementary?

Mr Bradley: This despite the fact that participating ministries must agree to resource the project.

I have a question. It says to ask Fraser Green in the Premier's office; I will ask the Premier. We as well as the Ontario public do have some questions. Can the Premier confirm that he is in agreement with the stated objectives of the member for Niagara South's memo? Does he agree that this is essentially a political exercise, and can he explain why in this time of fiscal duress the government is paying for this type of operation?

Hon Mr Rae: I can only tell the Leader of the Opposition that it is perfectly in order, I would have thought, for us as a government to try to communicate with the public about what we are trying to do. If I could, I say to the Leader of the Opposition that the Liberal caucus office uses public dollars to communicate with the public. His staff holds meetings with respect to communicating the views and policies of the official opposition; so does the Conservative Party. There is nothing unusual about that at all. It is perfectly in order in terms of the government communicating a message for us to try to co-ordinate it, and in fact to end up saving some money in terms of the overall communication budget of the government.

Mr Bradley: These are dollars that the Minister of Community and Social Services will not be able to give to credit counselling services in Ontario.

The Premier seems to suggest that he has little idea of the mandate or the costs of this new committee even though his office staff make up over a quarter of its membership. According to this memo, the CCC committee will be involved in a broad ad campaign, a series of focus groups, regional orientation workshops and caucus participation plans. We on this side have also acquired mock-ups of the full-page ads that the NDP is planning to run in support of this political exercise.

Advertisement 3—that is the one in front of me—states, "You're paying for this ad." Could the Premier tell the people of Ontario exactly how much they are paying, not only for the production of this full-page ad and its placement in all Ontario newspapers but the total costs for this extravagant, embarrassingly partisan exercise?

Hon Mr Rae: I stand to be corrected by my colleagues, but so far as I am aware no decision has been made with respect to any particular ad campaign. I can tell the Leader of the Opposition that as far as I am concerned, trying to communicate with the public about what we are trying to do is part of what governments have to do in this day and age. It is simple reality.

PREMIER'S VISIT TO EUROPE

Mr Bradley: The Premier, as we know, went to Europe with a couple of basic goals, at least so those of us in the opposition thought. This morning the Premier told reporters that the purpose of his trip was to get to know people. He was going to plead the case of de Havilland and the Ontario jobs at risk because of the Europeans' failure to okay that deal. He wanted to drum up new orders for Ontario companies and new investment for the province. Instead, the Premier spent his time test-driving buses, riding high-speed trains and hobnobbing at his old working man's haunt, Oxford University. Meanwhile, back at home, the circumstances I described about unemployment and the economy are prevailing. That is not good enough.

Can the Premier tell the House what, aside from some excellent cuisine and new business cards, he and the province of Ontario received for his globe-trotting efforts?

Hon Mr Rae: I must say to the honourable Leader of the Opposition I am surprised that somebody of his experience would take such a neo-isolationist view of the world as to think that foreign travel on behalf of the government of the province is somehow something wrong or indeed evil. I think it is an important part of the work of any Premier to represent the province in its trading and business activities in Europe, in the United States, in Japan and indeed in other markets. That is part of what is involved. It is something that must be done.

I would encourage other members to take an interest in what is going on in other markets and to encourage foreign investment in Ontario. That is exactly what we are doing. If the Liberal Party or the Conservative Party chooses to take the view that any contact or any trips overseas are wrong or are somehow simply junkets, I can only say that is a view that is certainly not shared by anybody I have talked to in the business community. It is not a view shared by his colleague the former Leader of the Opposition, who was asking me questions six months ago, who is now our agent general in London and who is only too strongly of the opinion that it is exactly this kind of work that needs to be done in foreign markets, in foreign capital markets and industrial markets around the world. It is work that has to be done on behalf of the people of Ontario.

Mr Bradley: I have been in this House long enough to remember when the then Leader of the Opposition was opposed to foreign investment in this province or this country.

The Premier said he might knock on some European doors to see if he could do something about the decision not to allow the sale of de Havilland, a ruling which could close Metro Toronto's largest employer. But according to the government's own ministerial briefing notes from this trip, de Havilland was so far down the Premier's list of things to do while in Europe that it did not even rate a mention. Evidently he thought showing a tourism film was a priority over de Havilland. While the Premier was meeting with people like Glenda Jackson, the workers at de Havilland were on tenterhooks waiting to see what this government is doing to save their jobs.

What did the Premier accomplish over in Europe? How many jobs did he save? How much investment did he get? What was the purpose of this schmoozing trip?

Hon Mr Rae: I can only tell the Leader of the Opposition, specifically with respect to de Havilland, that I met with the chairman of Aérospatiale, Mr Henri Martre, in Paris. I also had a two-hour conversation with Mr Beaudoin, who is the president of Bombardier Inc, who also happened to be in Paris at approximately the same time. I also had the opportunity to have a very brief conversation with the Prime Minister, who was also in Paris at that time and who had already talked to Mr Delors, the chairman of the European Commission.

I would say to the Leader of the Opposition that it just will not do for him to say that somehow there is something wrong or untoward about a Premier talking to foreign industrialists, talking to foreign investors. I can tell the Leader of the Opposition that I continue to be optimistic that we can find a solution to the situation at de Havilland. I hope very much that it will become clear to him that in fact the trip did play a role in helping to find a solution to this problem.

Mr Bradley: He brought back no job guarantees, apparently, but he brought back the terminology "neo-isolationist" from Oxford.

Last week we learned that a major credit rating agency might reduce its rating for Ontario because of this government's economic mismanagement. If that happens it would be the second time since this government took office that Ontario has seen this particular rating fall. As a result, taxpayers in the province will be forced to fork over even more money in interest payments.

Unemployment in the province is approaching 10%. The Treasurer has been forced to revise his budget twice, cutting and putting off spending in order to reach his budget targets. Now outside analysts are saying the government will be forced to boost personal income and sales tax in order to keep the Treasurer's four-year fiscal fantasy.

My question is, can the Premier tell Ontario why he is spending this time running to foreign lands while the provincial economy keeps slipping? He certainly did a lot for the French and German economies with his spending. What is he going to do to revive Ontario's faltering economy?

Hon Mr Rae: I must say I am not surprised by the thrust of the questions from the Leader of the Opposition. In fact, I predicted them this morning when I was contemplating what it is that this new Leader of the Opposition would be all about.

I can only say to the Leader of the Opposition, as I think, apart from all the insults, the core of the question had to do with respect to our targets, I would suspect that of governments in Canada this year, only Ontario in fact is going to meet its fiscal targets. We are determined to do so and the Treasurer has my full support in our determination to get there. I would suspect that very few other governments in Canada are going to reach those same targets.

SEXUAL ABUSE OF PATIENTS

Mr J. Wilson: My question is to the Minister of Health. Members of the Legislature and the minister will be aware that the Task Force On Sexual Abuse of Patients, which was commissioned by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, released its final report this morning. The task force, which heard some 303 detailed reports of sexual abuse by physicians and others in a position of trust, has produced as a result of the hearings some 60 recommendations.

I want to ask the minister if she will give her personal assurance today to members of this House, to members of the public and especially to those survivors of sexual abuse, that she will move quickly to implement the recommendations contained in this report that require legislative change, that she will move quickly and that we can have some assurance that this report will not collect dust on the shelves, as so many other reports that have been presented to this government have met that fate.

Hon Ms Lankin: With the exception of the last little shot the member put in, I appreciate his comments and question and his ongoing interest in this issue. I will certainly give him and the rest of the members in this Legislative Assembly my assurance that I will move very quickly on the recommendations, and where further legislative amendment is required, we will move on that.

The member will know in fact that we have implemented some of the recommendations we found in the interim report, but there are others in which we need to bring the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Ontario Medical Association together to look at their implementation and the monitoring system. I guarantee him that we will move quickly to do that.

Mr J. Wilson: I would suggest that the minister has already missed an opportunity to enact many of these legislative changes. She will recall that over one month ago, during the clause-by-clause proceedings of the Regulated Health Professions Act in the standing committee on social development I, on behalf of my colleagues, introduced several amendments designed to help victims of sexual abuse. The government, in conjunction with the Liberals, voted as a bloc against those amendments. One of those amendments dealt with the survivors' compensation fund. This morning, with the release of the task force's final report, we see that the task force is again asking for the implementation of a survivors' compensation fund.

Given that in the past, just one month ago, the members of the NDP and the Liberals voted against such a fund, could we have the minister's commitment today that she will review the government's position and implement such a fund in a timely manner?

Hon Ms Lankin: I just correct the member to say that the official opposition and the government members did not vote against the concept of a fund. In fact, what they said was that they wanted to see the final recommendations from the task force. As the member will know, the recommendations of the task force have changed, not in that they do not continue to call for the establishment of such a fund—they do—but in their recommendation about how such a fund should be financed, and I think it is a helpful suggestion.

The committee felt there were certain elements of the recommendations, that we wanted to see the final report from the task force and, because we are dealing with a self-regulated profession, we wanted to have a chance to see a response from the profession itself. I appreciate the amendments that the member prepared and submitted to the committee. I am sure that all members of the committee found merit in them. We will review those along with the final recommendations. I assure the member we will move quickly.

Mr J. Wilson: If the minister is really serious about zero tolerance and the recommendations contained in the task force's final report presented this morning, she will move quickly. She has an opportunity today to move quickly in an area of compensation for survivors of sexual abuse. She failed to do that a month ago on committee. The Regulated Health Professions Act will be receiving royal assent this afternoon.

Would the minister consider putting those bills on hold, putting the issue back to committee so we can put in the proper legislative clauses to deal with and provide compensation to victims of sexual abuse? The patient relations committee the minister set up does nothing to help victims. We are asking if she would consider holding up the bills for just a short while to give us an opportunity to implement proper clauses in that legislation to ensure that victims are provided with the compensation they so very badly need.

1430

Hon Ms Lankin: I appreciate the member's urging in this respect. I am not prepared to hold up royal assent of the bills this afternoon, but I am prepared to give him an undertaking that we will move very quickly to develop a package of required legislative changes and that we will bring that forward. I do not hesitate at all to reopen the legislation and to make these necessary changes.

The member has a commitment that our government wants to move on this, we want to do it in conjunction with the profession and we appreciate the work the member opposite has done with respect to amendments. We will take a look at that wording as we look at drafting our own legislative amendments.

GARBAGE DISPOSAL

Mr Cousens: My question is directed towards the Minister of the Environment. This past week I have had the opportunity of continuing dialogue with members of the business community, who clearly demonstrate desire and interest to support the initiatives of the government, the intent of moving forward on the 3Rs. Yet these same people address a great deal of anxiety over Bill 143 and the direction in which the minister wants to take the government. In fact to them she is becoming the environment's worst nightmare.

Everyone has a breaking point. With all the other forces coming against business in this province from other departments of the government and the uncertainty surrounding the environmental policies coming from the ministry, they do not know what the environmental bill of rights is going to bring and they are not certain as to how the waste audits are to be managed and done. There are a number of questions that come out of Bill 143 that are raising great concerns, all leading to an increased cost of doing business in Ontario.

Because businesses are forced to dispose of their waste now within the greater Toronto area—they cannot take cheaper options in sending it to Kirkland Lake—the tippage fees continue to increase. So the question really boils down to how business can remain competitive when faced with potential increases in its operating costs. It boils down to another question: What is there to prevent businesses from relocating either to Buffalo or Belleville?

Hon Mrs Grier: I think the premises on which the member has based his question are fundamentally incorrect. What businesses in the GTA requires for an atmosphere of certainty and in order to make the best business decisions is some certainty that there will in fact be somewhere to dispose of their waste when the existing landfill sites are closed, and that is precisely what Bill 143 is designed to do.

Mr Cousens: The fact of the matter is that we have a place, and the place to start dealing with the problem is here in this Legislature, where we have a sense of trying to work through the issue, where both sides and all sides have a chance to consult on it. Business is very concerned about the lack of consultation taking place between the Ministry of the Environment and itself with regard to the minister's new regulatory measures to achieve Ontario's waste reduction targets.

In her waste booklet, Regulatory Measures to Achieve Ontario's Waste Reduction Targets, which came out in October, the minister stated that the consultation period for that document will end on December 6, just next week. Less than two months have been given to companies and industries and interested people to respond to this very important document. Yet what happens now is that her ministry could go ahead and act on it without having listened to the views of those people.

Given the amount of thought required to answer the proposals raised in this, given the impact that it is going to have on industry as a whole, given the shortage of time the minister has given industry to respond to it and given the confusion within the business community over her proposals, would the minister consider extending the consultation period past December 6?

Hon Mrs Grier: There are a number of points I want to make. Let me make it perfectly clear, Mr Speaker, I agree with the member that there has to be and will be and has been the fullest possible consultation with respect to implementation of the regulations he refers to.

First, let me make the point that those regulations were developed in discussion with a lot of industries and in consultation with multistakeholder committees. Second, the period for consultation identified last October, when we released the paper, was obviously for formal feedback from many industries. The fact that this date may pass does not preclude industries from giving us their opinions or us from dealing with those opinions.

Bill 143 provides the legislative framework within which the regulations the member has referred to will be promulgated, so there obviously will be time after the passage of Bill 143, which I hope will be before we recess for the Christmas season, to consult about the actual regulations that will flow from it.

Mr Cousens: It is not very reassuring. Consultation is a two-way dialogue. When this government talks about consultation, it is as if it says: "Here is our view. Take it or leave it." There is so much happening within that document which requires more than just a speedy response. It requires a continuing discussion between this ministry and the people who have to implement it.

Rather than use a police force to make it happen, what we really need to do is have some kind of working together on it, which the ministry does not seem to be willing to do. Obviously the minister is not willing to extend the formal period for responses beyond December 6. The answer the minister has really given is, "No, I will not allow consultation to go beyond December 6," and that is unfortunate, because she is going to just go ahead and implement it anyway.

My second supplementary has to do with Bill 143 and the fact that so many people's rights are going to be affected by it. Individual rights are impacted; municipal rights are impacted. When Bill 143 is passed, the Ontario Municipal Act disappears when it comes to environmental concerns. The Planning Act disappears.

The Speaker: And the supplementary?

Mr Cousens: There are several issues that come out of this, and if I can just put the question properly, I might get an answer.

The Speaker: A question, please.

Mr Cousens: My question is, the government House leader wants to see passage of Bill 143 before we rise from this House. In other words, there will not be a chance for a full and public dialogue by interested communities on the impact Bill 143 is going to have on them and on their rights and everything else related to it.

The Speaker: Will the member please place his question.

Mr Cousens: I will right now. Will the minister agree to have public consultation on Bill 143, to take place after the House rises on December 19 this year for Christmas?

Hon Mrs Grier: The member's characterizations of the consultation process around both the waste reduction regulations and Bill 143 are wildly inaccurate. With respect to Bill 143, I am disappointed that the member is not prepared to recognize that the measures he has talked about apply to the landfill sites in Peel and in Metro-York. When he says they abrogate the Municipal Act, he implies that is something that is happening province-wide, and I am disappointed he would do that.

Let me say to him with respect to public consultation and hearings on Bill 143 that I understand our House leader has made a proposal to the House leaders of the opposition parties about a way of enabling us to do just that and still meet the need of the people, the industries and the municipalities within the GTA for assurance that they will have waste disposal capacity as soon as possible. I hope the member's caucus and the member's House leader will respond positively to those suggestions.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr Bradley: I have another question for the Premier. If a page will come by, I will send him a copy of this secret memo we have that has been leaked to us and that I hope the OPP is not tracing down.

Hon Mr Cooke: It's obviously not secret.

Mr Bradley: It is no longer a secret, no.

The Premier says it is the government's prerogative to co-ordinate consultation in the province. I think most people, in fairness, would agree with that. But then we ask the question: Why does the committee membership contain only one civil servant and why does it contain Jill Marzetti, the NDP secretary, the same person who has previously declared war on the Ontario business lobby?

Given this blatant overrepresentation by political staffers, will the Premier not admit that this is a blatant political attempt at public manipulation and not at consultation at all?

Hon Mr Rae: No, Mr Speaker.

Mr Bradley: While the Premier was riding the trains in Europe and involved in a number of photo opportunities, the Treasurer of this province was struggling with the deficit and with the need to cut some of the costs the government has been incurring. As a result, one has to ask the Premier where the government is going to find the money for this particular committee, since it says the money must come from various ministries.

Will it come from the Ministry of Health, so that we can no longer cover health care services? Will it come from the Ministry of Community and Social Services, so people in need will not have as much money to meet their needs? Will it come from the Ministry of Transportation, where there are many needs in this province? Where is this money to come from to finance this government's political manipulation?

Hon Mr Rae: It is my understanding and certainly my determination, and I think it is shared by the Treasurer, that any money for any communication plans comes from within existing ministry budgets and is not new money.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Mr Jackson: I have a question to the Minister of Health. A constituent of mine, a senior citizen, Mrs Dorothy Kennedy, has such a severe infection of shingles that it has gone into her eyes. Her ophthalmologist has indicated that her condition is vision-threatening unless the prescribed treatment of a drug called Zovirax is made available to her.

Mrs Kennedy went to the pharmacist and found out that it is going to cost her $285 for this 10-day program because as of November 1, the minister had removed it, as one of the interim benefits, from the Ontario drug benefit plan. Mrs Kennedy is a senior citizen and she is having a hard time making ends meet. But she is aware that if she wants to get this treatment, she can be admitted into a hospital to take the prescription for a 10-day period at a cost to taxpayers of anywhere between $4,000 and $6,000.

Why is the minister cutting support services to seniors like Mrs Dorothy Kennedy for such medically necessary medical treatments for her and others like her in this province?

Hon Ms Lankin: I hope the member opposite knows that in fact we have not cut access to it. What we have done has been to follow the recommendations in the Lowy report that the drugs that were listed on the interim benefits be submitted to the Drug Quality and Therapeutics Committee and the determination made whether they be added to the formulary or be accessed through the special authorization section of the legislation, section 8 requests.

In the case of this particular drug—and I hope I am correct; the member used a brand name. I think the actual drug we are talking about is Acyclovir. He nods yes—in that situation we have ensured, because it is so important in dealing with the issue of seniors and shingles, that there is a 24-hour turnaround.

I was aware of a complaint from the member's office with respect to a constituent. Since the policy was put in place, there have been eight requests. They have been handled within a 24-hour turnaround, as was committed. We were unable to locate a request from the doctor the member has actually specified and we are attempting to contact that doctor to find out what happened in the circumstances.

Mr Jackson: The minister is correct. I did notify her office last Monday when this was brought to my attention and did finally have someone contact me today about the matter.

But more important, what we have discovered about this case is that in letters dated September 18 and October 10 from her ministry to physicians and pharmacists in this province, nowhere does the minister mention that a special authorization can be sought for the treatment of their patients so they can have access to the Ontario drug benefit plan.

In fact the minister's correspondences from her ministry are very specific that the reason she is informing the physicians and pharmacists is because these drugs will no longer—and she underlines this in her letter, which I have in front of me—be reimbursed by the ODB program. The minister goes on to suggest that inventories will have to be adjusted because the drug will no longer be available.

My point to the minister is that she has communicated to physicians in very clear and straight language that the drug will not be available. The minister has also indicated that there will be a 24-hour turnaround, yet it has to be in writing from the physician and physicians are unaware that they can apply for it.

The Speaker: Will the member place his supplementary, please.

Mr Jackson: My supplementary question to the minister is simply this: Why do physicians feel her ministry has misled them and why do patients feel her decision is cruel and harsh to them, that she did not inform physicians or pharmacists in this province that they can make application? My patient will be ineligible if she waits beyond 72 hours for this medical treatment—

The Speaker: Would the member conclude his question, please.

Mr Jackson: The Minister of Health says she will provide a 24-hour treatment, and she has not even told physicians it is available.

Hon Ms Lankin: The member asks why doctors feel this. In fact, I was not aware that doctors feel they can no longer apply for this. Doctors are well aware under the legislation that any drug not on the Drug Benefit Formulary can be applied for through special authorization. However, the member raises concern that there may be some members of the profession who are not aware of this. If I can do anything to clear that up by sending further communication, I will review the letter that was sent and I will undertake to do that, because I think it is important that people do understand what the program does and does not provide for.

NATURAL GAS

Mr G. Wilson: My question is for the Minister of Energy. As the minister knows, one of the goals of our government is the efficient use of energy resources. In pursuing this goal we need the co-operation of the citizens and their agencies throughout the province. Recently the Kingston Utilities Commission proposed a fuel-switching test that involved switching electric water heaters to gas. This proposal to Ontario Hydro was rejected. I would like to know what the reasons were for this rejection, considering that it was put forward as a model that could be used throughout the province.

Hon Mr Ferguson: Ontario Hydro would very much like to enter into a partnership with the city of Kingston on fuel switching. As the member knows, Kingston is in a unique position because it not only operates and owns the gas utility but also the electric utility. However, because our friends opposite have decided to hold up Bill 118 and send it out to committee on the road, for their own politically expedient reasons, we cannot promote fuel switching until the bill is passed. As a result, consumers will not be saving as much this winter as they possibly could and we will have to work all that much harder, given the time frames the ministry and Ontario Hydro will have to operate under.

Mr G. Wilson: I would like to know what the ministry is proposing until we can get the bill through as far as alternative fuel sources are concerned.

Hon Mr Ferguson: We have undertaken three very important initiatives. The first important initiative, of course, is to ensure that any newly constructed non-profit housing will not have electric heat; second, we have made the same commitment for government of Ontario buildings, and we will not be using hydroelectric heat there. The third thing we can do until we have to deal with this politically expedient problem across the way is to at least educate the public and provide them with the necessary information so they can make an intelligent decision on what form of energy to use for heat. It is well known today, because of the decisions and mistakes made in the past, that electrical heat is the most expensive form of heat being used today in Ontario.

POLICE SERVICES

Mr Conway: My question is for the Solicitor General. While the Premier was sipping champagne and contemplating neo-isolationism in the shadow of the Paris Opera, the Ontario Provincial Police are continuing to experience budgetary pressure the like of which we have not seen here in my time in this Legislature. When he and I last chatted some two weeks ago about the extent of this budgetary pressure, my good friend the Solicitor General suggested that I was perhaps overstating the case.

In the intervening two weeks I have had the opportunity to read the Eganville Leader of Wednesday, November 13, and Wednesday, November 20, and the Ottawa Citizen of yesterday, all of which report and quote rather directly sources within the eastern regional office of the Ontario Provincial Police that in fact these budgetary pressures are real and that in fact we now find ourselves in a situation where police officers are volunteering to serve; they have contributed in the eastern regions thousands of hours so they can maintain a basic level of service.

Is the Solicitor General aware that the budgetary problem has now got to such a point that we have OPP officers in eastern Ontario volunteering their time to ensure a minimum level of protection to citizens in my part of the province?

1450

Hon Mr Pilkey: First, may I respond by saying I certainly appreciate the member's use of sesquipedalian words in the Legislature. It certainly elevates the quality of debate. I thank him for that.

Second, in terms of the policing services in the eastern region, it is interesting that the member quoted me some circumstances a few weeks ago, and that upon further reflection and investigation by the media they found quite the opposite. I do not know if that will be the case in this particular circumstance, whether history will repeat itself, but we will wait with interest to find out.

I did notice, however, in some of the other media reports I have received in the eastern region, more particularly in Kanata just outside of Ottawa, where one individual was concerned about the service of the OPP and potential cutbacks but said, "I think that would be a real shame, because right now we're getting pretty good service."

I think we are getting good service. Along with the member opposite I do share concerns if funding is not available and there is a dilution in the future. At the moment I believe the OPP are continuing to do the fine, sterling job they have in the past, and the general community is being served.

Mr Conway: I will make two quick references to quotes in the regional press. An OPP constable in eastern Ontario was quoted directly in the Eganville Leader of November 13 as saying, "They"—meaning the Ontario government—"are cutting everything to the bone and they're butchering us so badly we can't function."

The Lindsay Daily Post editorialized the other day, "The Ontario government is sticking its head in the sand by refusing to acknowledge a problem affecting policing in this area," namely, Victoria county. The word is out that the Reduce Impaired Driving Everywhere program is the next to be chopped. Can the Solicitor General confirm in his place today that the RIDE program will go forward in this Christmas season without any alteration relative to what we have enjoyed in the last two years?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I know the RIDE program is working in Durham region, because about three nights ago I was stopped by it and observed it in yet another location. I can attest that at least the regional forces are certainly continuing. To the best of my knowledge the RIDE program is continuing with the OPP as well.

The member will appreciate that there are fiscal constraints with respect to all areas of endeavour with this government. The Ministry of the Solicitor General does not escape the kind of scrutiny and the type of concern the Treasurer must exert in this very difficult recessionary period, even though many of the fiscal difficulties he faces are brought to him by other levels of government.

Notwithstanding that, I can assure the member opposite that this minister will fight as hard and as deliberately as he can—and I believe quite successfully—with this government to ensure that the kind of public safety and service the people of this province have enjoyed in the past will continue to be the kind of safety and service they will receive well into the future, including the RIDE program.

VEHICLE LICENSING OFFICES

Mr Turnbull: My question is to the Minister of Transportation. I welcome my colleague back from Europe. It is rather unfortunate I have to focus him away from Dom Perignon and pâté. I will remind the minister that I asked him October 21 in the House about the ministry's plans for the driver/vehicle licensing officers. I want to remind him of his words:

"We are satisfied with the 288 people—the private system at its best.... The system is working quite fine. If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

It is actually 1,500 people who work in these offices. I want to point out some contradictory statements. Last month the assistant deputy minister, Alex Kelly, told the executive of the licence issuers association that the Ministry of Transportation was looking to have auto insurance companies offer all vehicle transactions now done in registry offices.

In addition, three weeks ago Janet Faas, the director of licensing and control, met with the licensing association and said the Ministry of Transportation was looking for one-stop shopping for vehicle insurance and registration.

Also, on October 1 the Premier wrote to a constituent, "Our government will also explore, along with industry, a joint venture that could lead to a system of one-stop shopping."

Interjections.

The Speaker: Just a minute. Would the member quickly place a question.

Mr Turnbull: There is a lot of confusion. The people who work in registry offices want to know if the minister will honour his commitment and tell the other ministries to back off. Which is the case? Which is the correct situation?

Hon Mr Pouliot: I appreciate the question from the member opposite. It was not Dom Perignon. It was merely a humble bottle of Beaujolais Nouveau. The member stands to be educated. It would be quite a step from a place where you eat to a place where you dine. More specifically, the trip was the fourth Sommet de la Francophonie. It was entirely funded courtesy of the federal government, so some of the money is coming back.

More important, I had the opportunity some two weeks ago to meet with the women and men in those 288 offices who provide that essential service, to give them the assurance that there will be no changes. Although we are committed to looking at our options, those people who have been providing the service are doing an excellent job and our intent at all ministries concerned is that if it ain't broke, don't fix it; it is business as usual.

Mr Turnbull: I am delighted to hear that. I would suggest the minister communicate with the Ministry of Financial Institutions and tell it to stop its plans and also communicate that to the Premier. Will he undertake today to indicate to them that he is not going to make any changes and they should stop these communications which upset the people who work in these offices?

Hon Mr Pouliot: The collective works best when there is co-operation. With all due respect possible, the member should stop selling fear. There is nothing out there. The member opposite forces me to become repetitive. The system is working well and it will keep on working well. There is nothing wrong with the system.

Mr Turnbull: Why is the Premier sending these letters out?

Hon Mr Pouliot: The Premier is not sending them. He has a second or third supplementary now. There is no stopping him. The system is operating well and we have no intentions of changing it.

The Speaker: New question, the member for Yorkview.

Mr Mammoliti: I am glad I made it. I missed the comment made by the member for York Centre. He was his usual—

The Speaker: Your question is to whom?

METHANE GAS LEAK

Mr Mammoliti: I address my question to the Minister of the Environment. It concerns an issue the ministry has been aware of for some time. The minister has received correspondence from my office bringing to her attention a very serious matter in my riding of Yorkview. I attended a meeting where some 450 residents of the Bluehaven community expressed their anger at the potential environmental danger of constructing a proposed project in their neighbourhood.

I am told the area in question, at the corner of Finch Avenue and Ardwick Boulevard, was once adjacent to a dump site and that the Bluehaven public school located near the site was allegedly closed due to methane gas leakage. The residents' fear for their children is understandable. My constituents have asked me to bring these concerns directly to this House. I ask the honourable Minister of the Environment what she has done to address this situation, and what the ministry is prepared to do as well.

Hon Mrs Grier: I know of this member's deep concern about this issue and I hope his constituents are aware of his ongoing attention to it. I also want to reassure him that based on the information provided to my ministry, my technical staff have determined there are no environmental hazards that would affect development of the site to which he refers.

I know there have been a number of letters to my ministry from residents who feel this site was a former landfill. I want to reassure the member and his constituents that this in fact is not the case. The site is adjacent to a landfill that was closed 25 years ago, and the school to which the member referred was adjacent to another landfill that was closed an equally long time ago.

In response to the member's question as to what my ministry is prepared to do, I am happy to tell him that I have recommended to the developers—

Interjection.

The Speaker: Order, the member for St George-St David.

Hon Mrs Grier: —that they conduct additional gas migration studies to ensure that the future occupants of the project will not at any time in the future be impacted by the adjoining landfill, and I am rather surprised to learn that there has not been a public meeting at which both the developers and the residents have had an opportunity to discuss the environmental studies. If it would be of assistance to the neighbourhood, my ministry would be prepared to attend such a meeting.

Mr Mammoliti: I am glad to hear that the minister is prepared to meet with some people in the community. I would like at this time to ask her if she is prepared to meet with the mayor of North York as well, seeing that he has gotten himself involved in this. As a matter of fact, he has had a few choice words to say about the minister in the past. I would like perhaps to meet with him and to talk about this particular problem and see whether or not we can come to a mutual agreement among all of us.

Hon Mrs Grier: As I indicated in my response to the first question, I think it is important that there be a meeting between representatives of the ratepayers group or the residents concerned and the developer, and should the mayor wish to attend such a meeting, I know my staff would be more than happy to share the technical studies and the information we have with the mayor.

INVESTIGATION INTO RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS

Mr Phillips: My question is of the Premier, and it has to do with the use of the OPP by the government to conduct investigations against the opposition and our Ontario public service employees. We know of at least three times in the past six months when cabinet ministers have approved a decision to use the OPP to conduct investigations into leaked documents. Twice these investigations included members of the official opposition in the Legislature.

My question to the Premier is this: Was the plan to call in the police in any of these three cases—the Ministry of Natural Resources, the Ministry of Treasury and Economics and the Ministry of the Environment—discussed with him or anyone in his office or the cabinet office before the call was made to the OPP to launch the investigation?

Hon Mr Rae: I was not consulted before any such decisions were made.

Mr Phillips: I would like it if the Premier, in a supplementary, would answer all of my first question, and if the Speaker will permit me, I will include my supplementary as well.

The people of Ontario are asking to know on what basis these investigations or interrogations are launched, because I think the Premier can appreciate it is a very serious matter when the OPP is used to investigate the opposition.

In the case of the Treasury investigation, the Treasurer said the document that was released was not a sensitive document. The reason the OPP was called in was that the process was not airtight; the OPP was called in to make it airtight. What does this say to the opposition and to our public service and to the people of Ontario?

My question to the Premier is this: What are his standards for calling in the OPP? Can we expect that the OPP will be called in when any minister wants to make the process within his or her ministry airtight?

Hon Mr Rae: In each case, I say to the member for Scarborough-Agincourt—and I hope he will appreciate that I will obviously take some notice of his question—to my knowledge, and I have not had a chance recently to discuss the details of each instance that was raised by him, the decisions made were made by ministries, not made by ministers, not made by political staff and not consulted with political staff. They were decisions made by ministries.

With respect to the second question, the member for Scarborough-Agincourt knows full well that with respect to the preparation of a budget, for example, there are real questions about the process and making sure that people who would be in a position to take advantage of any budget get information not get that information prior to the release. We have all been through this in the House over many years, as in Ottawa.

When the member talks about—what was the phrase he used exactly?—making sure the process is airtight, I think is how he described it, it has to do with the question of budget secrecy. That is what the Treasurer referred to in the answer I know he gave in the House a few days ago and that is all he was referring to.

The Speaker: New question.

Hon Mr Rae: If I could just make one other point briefly, I understand the House leader has made it very clear that we are quite happy to have this entire matter discussed in front of a parliamentary committee, and we would be very pleased to do so.

AIR QUALITY

Mrs Marland: My question is of the Minister of Education and it concerns the problem of indoor air quality in schools, particularly in portable classrooms. The Dufferin Peel Roman Catholic Separate School Board has one school, St Basil, in which air is considered to be uncomfortable. Some other schools have problems which must be corrected. These problems are not unusual, and they exist in many schools across Ontario.

In a letter to me dated October 7, 1991, the former Education minister said: "The ministry is not in a position to fund the installation of mechanical systems in schools where they did not previously exist. However, under certain circumstances, the board may request renovation funding for existing systems through the regular capital expenditure process."

Considering how little the boards are receiving through the capital expenditure process, this is hardly a solution. We are talking about air that makes children sick and impedes their ability to learn. What action will the minister take to ensure that indoor air in schools is healthy and comfortable?

Hon Mr Silipo: Let me say to the member opposite that I agree with her that the question of air quality is a concern to all of us and certainly to me as Minister of Education and particularly in the context she raises it, in a number of schools and students that have to use portables. Clearly the solution to this in the short term is probably not a satisfactory one. I know my officials are trying to work with school boards to make suggestions about things that could be done in the short term.

In the long term, quite frankly, I think the solution involves a re-examination of the way in which we spend money to build schools and to renovate schools, and that clearly is part of the examination we are having of the whole refinancing of education and something I think we will take seriously in trying to come up with some solutions.

Mrs Marland: Indoor air quality standards are part of the Ontario Building Code and the Occupational Health and Safety Act, and we need legislated standards for indoor air quality. We must have better co-ordination between the ministries involved, which must also reach some consensus on indoor air quality issues. We need a cost-sharing agreement for the considerable expense of installing mechanical ventilation units in portable classrooms particularly. Will the minister ensure that an interministerial task force will give indoor air quality the attention it deserves, and will he work with the school boards to ensure that a fair funding arrangement is achieved?

Hon Mr Silipo: Let me say to the member that I am not sure an interministerial task force is necessarily the answer, but clearly the question of co-ordinating our efforts with ministries like the Ministry of the Environment is essential. My understanding from my officials is that, in fact, that is what we have been doing, and certainly we will continue to do that. I will certainly be interested in taking a closer look at the suggestion the member makes to see if there are things in her suggestion that can be done that we are not pursuing, but I think the question of air quality is one that is important.

As I said earlier, there are a number of things we are doing to work with school boards and with other ministries to indicate some things that can be done to address the individual problems that are brought to our attention, but clearly we also know that we need to find some longer-term solutions.

DEER POPULATION

Mrs MacKinnon: My question today is directed to the Minister of Natural Resources. The Pinery Provincial Park is located in my riding of Lambton county, and it boasts a unique blend of oak, savannah and Carolinian forest. Unfortunately, the steadily increasing deer population over the last number of years not only poses a threat to the park ecosystem, but area farmers have also experienced losses due to deer predation of their crops. The situation has been historically overlooked and put off, and my constituents are increasingly concerned as to the ministry's intention. Would the minister please let my constituents know today what this government's commitment is to their very pressing concerns?

Hon Mr Wildman: The member is quite right. There have been a number of issues raised and considerable correspondence with me from various people in the area over the issue of deer overpopulation in the Pinery and surrounding area. Anglers, hunters, farmers, naturalists and local residents generally have indicated it is very important that we work to resolve this problem. We have a responsibility, as I am sure the members will agree, to satisfy the requirements of the Environmental Assessment Act. The experience we have had at Rondeau Provincial Park has given us some information that will be beneficial for us in the management exercise. I would close by indicating to the member and to all members of the House that we are going to begin public consultation regarding the various approaches we could use for reducing deer numbers in January 1992.

Mrs MacKinnon: I thank the minister for his concise answer. A time line is definitely of some comfort to the constituents of Lambton county. However, there has been much discussion on the appropriate action that will be taken. Will this consultation allow for real public input, or does the ministry already have a plan in place that will be implemented, regardless of public opinion?

Hon Mr Wildman: I might be facetious and indicate that we are not intending to consult the deer. However, I will say that we will be consulting widely and it will be important that we get public assistance to ensure that we protect the park values at the Pinery, as well as dealing with the overpopulation of deer.

This situation is not unique to the Pinery. Farmers across Ontario are experiencing difficulties with the overpopulation of deer, and my ministry and the Ministry of Agriculture and Food are working together to see if we can come up with some solutions in the near future. We have 15 proposed options we could use—

Mr Jackson: Oh, list them all.

Hon Mr Wildman: No. I will just list that they range from fencing to a controlled hunt to a cull within the park. All of these have advantages and disadvantages, and that is why we hope to have real public consultation which will help us to choose one, or a combination of options, that will be the best for the deer population and for the people who are concerned about this issue.

PETITIONS

YOUTH MINIMUM WAGE

Mr Carr: I am very pleased, on behalf of Heather Osberg, a student at Queen Elizabeth Park Secondary School, to present a petition signed by 432 concerned students who live in my riding of Oakville South which reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the government of Ontario has stated its objective to eliminate the youth minimum wage differential by 1992; and

"Whereas such action will seriously reduce available job opportunities for Ontario students;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Until the Ministry of Labour can assure the Ontario student population that no student jobs will be lost by the elimination of the youth minimum wage differential, we urge the government to maintain the current differential."

That is signed by 432 students and was put together by a fine student by the name of Heather Osburg, who worked very hard getting those names together.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

VEHICLE AND PEDESTRIAN SAFETY ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR LA SÉCURITÉ DES PIÉTONS ET DES VÉHICULES

Mr Chiarelli moved first reading of Bill 157, An Act to provide for Vehicle and Pedestrian Safety / Projet de loi 157, Loi prévoyant la sécurité des piétons et des véhicules.

Motion agreed to.

Mr Chiarelli: I explained this bill in more detail earlier in my member's statement, but very briefly, the bill would prohibit persons from walking or running on highways or railway tracks or driving vehicles on highways while wearing earphones. The prohibition would not apply to the wearing of hearing aids.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES RELATIONS DE TRAVAIL

Mr Mackenzie moved first reading of Bill 158, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act with respect to the Industrial, Commercial and Institutional Sector of the Construction Industry / Projet de loi 158, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les relations de travail en ce qui a trait au secteur industriel, commercial et institutionnel de l'industrie de la construction.

Motion agreed to.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: This bill amends the Labour Relations Act to make certain changes relating to the industrial, commercial and institutional sector of the construction industry. The term of province-wide agreements will be increased from two to three years. When a vote is conducted to ratify a province-wide agreement, counting of the ballots will not be allowed until all the voting in the province is completed. Section 152 will be added to the act to provide for the establishment of a corporation to facilitate the collective bargaining and otherwise assist the sector. Labour, management and government will be equally represented among the members of the corporation. The corporation will be funded by labour and management.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

The Speaker: Before calling for orders of the day, pursuant to standing order 33, the member for Brampton North has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Minister of the Environment concerning Bill 143 and its implications regarding the environmental bill of rights. This matter will be debated at 6 pm.

TRIBUTES TO HIS HONOUR HOMMAGES À SON HONNEUR

Hon Mr Rae: On this occasion, I might ask members to sit down and invite you, sir, for a moment to be seated so that we can perhaps, in a rather unusual way, say farewell once again. I know this is probably out of every rule, but I nevertheless think by unanimous consent we can do almost anything and I am sure members would agree with me that we should be doing that.

About 30 years ago, there was an early Canadian film called Nobody Waved Goodbye. If one were to make a documentary of your leaving office, sir, it would be Everyone Waved Goodbye. What is more, we spent about six months doing so.

There is great goodwill to you, sir, for the services you have rendered to the province and to the people of Ontario. There is a true outburst of affection for you and I believe for the office that you hold as a result of the way in which you have carried on your responsibilities.

There are people all over the province, disabled people, older people, younger people, schoolchildren, business people, people of all backgrounds, people of all persuasions, people of all faiths, people of all political parties, people throughout the province who have looked to you, sir, for the kind of presence, the leadership, the enormous good humour, the great goodwill, the perspicacity, the wisdom you have given.

I shall personally miss you a great deal in your current office and I want to express my own personal thanks as well as the thanks of the members of the government side for the work you have done and the affection we feel for you.

Au nom de tous les députés de la Chambre, je veux vous offrir nos sentiments les plus profonds pour le travail que vous avez fait, pour les grands sacrifices personnels dans les cinq ou six années qui viennent de passer. Vous avez été quelqu'un qui a changé : vous avez changé l'Ontario, vous avez changé l'office du lieutenant-gouverneur, et je suis certain que je parle pour tous les députés quand je vous dis que vous avez tout notre respect et nos profonds remerciements pour le travail que vous avez fait. Merci beaucoup. Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Bradley: As the leader of the Liberal Party in the Legislature, if I may join the Premier in paying tribute to His Honour, I would be privileged to do so. I cannot think of an individual in Ontario who has contributed more, first of all, to his community as an individual representative in a constituency in the federal House of Commons, then to the province, as a Lieutenant Governor of this province, and to this country, when you sat in the federal cabinet and were involved in the deliberations of the House of Commons. I also cannot think of an individual who has brought more dignity to the office of Lieutenant Governor, while at the same time being down to earth.

I suppose Rudyard Kipling referred to it best in his poem If, when he made reference to an individual who could walk with kings and keep the common touch. Certainly, Your Honour, that is something all of us observed in each one of our communities.

When I look at the schedule you had to maintain over the years, I recognize that there was no community too insignificant, no organization too small, no individual too unimportant for the clasp of your hand, for a few kind words, for your presence with those individuals who are the people of Ontario, and that is something we shall not soon forget.

Those of us in partisan politics are often critical of actions taken by those in other parties. We could be unanimous in this House, I suggest, in complimenting the Prime Minister of Canada, Brian Mulroney, on his appointment of you to the position of Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, naturally with the assistance of the Queen insisting that you would be the most appropriate person, no doubt.

As the Premier I think appropriately pointed out, equally at ease, it seems to all of us who observed, with the very elderly or the youngest of children, with people of all backgrounds in Ontario, you have been a uniting force at a time when it is very difficult, in terms both of the politics of confrontation that takes place in the House each day and of the politics of division that we see in our country.

You have been one of the unifying sources that everyone in this province is proud of. You have enhanced the monarchy in this country, in Ontario, as the Queen's representative. Your presence has added to every occasion where you have been present with the people of this province, whether it is a state dinner or in the chapel or the basement of some church on a Sunday afternoon.

We wish you well, Your Honour, as you enter your retirement, if we can refer to it as that. Ontario is quite obviously a better place as a result of your service.

Mr Cousens: It gives me great pleasure to rise on behalf of our leader, Michael Harris, the member for Nipissing, who I know is sorry he cannot be here to share in this moment, one of those rare moments when all members of the House can share a common view and where we drop the partisan lines and we look at the person and with deep appreciation acknowledge the tremendous contribution that you, Your Honour, have given to our province.

As Her Majesty the Queen's representative, you have represented her well and nobly and constantly. I truly respect the great leadership you have given. Indeed, you will go down in history as one of the truly great Lieutenant Governors of Ontario.

I do not know how you find the energy. When you have visited schools, when I have been there, everyone goes away with the sense that something has happened. You bring the magic of personality, but more deeply, a sense of love—a love of people, a love of the province, a love of principle, a love of this country of ours that has been shared, and shared beautifully.

As you now go to be chancellor of the University of Guelph, we know the students and faculty there will benefit as well from your continuing leadership. On behalf of our party we say thank you for a job well done, and may you continue to have good health to be able to share the wisdom you have with the rest of the province of Ontario.

Hon Mr Alexander: Mr Speaker, Mr Premier, Mr Bradley, Mr Cousens, distinguished members of this wonderful place, I am touched and very surprised. I had no idea that this was going to happen. It is really a sad day for me. It reminds me of when I left Ottawa, never to return to the House. I think with some certainty this will be the last time I will be here. I am pretty sure now.

It has been a long haul but I can tell you this: I can think of no better job. I can think of no greater challenge than to be the representative of Queen Elizabeth II. It has been a wonderful experience for me. It has taught me a lot, as I have said. I have watched the people of Ontario. I am proud of the people of Ontario and I am proud of what you do.

It has been difficult for me to stand on the side without becoming partisan, but I hope I have met that expectation, not to be partisan. I have learned what this province is all about and I have seen how hard you work. I just want to let you know that if at any time I can speak out in terms of letting the people of this province, of this country, know how hard elected members pursue their responsibilities and with such excellence, I will do so.

I am leaving now with very mixed emotions. I have loved this work. That is why I always wanted to be in the House to give royal assent. I appreciated the fact that it can happen in my office, but this is where I belong. This is where I was born, as a matter of fact: in the House.

I want to thank you for your many kindnesses. I want to thank you for the warmth you have extended to me. You have inspired me, and I mean that, because I know where you are coming from. You have encouraged me, you have supported me, and I want to thank you for all of that.

So as I leave now, I will never forget you. I leave with a feeling of satisfaction in that I believe you know that I have tried my best to make this office more accessible. I believe you know I have tried to make this office more in keeping with the expectations of the people of Ontario, that is, to be a people's Lieutenant Governor. I believe you know I have tried to remove the mystique from this office. With that, I can say that going to schools was one of the greatest things I think I could have done, because students of today are the leaders of tomorrow. That was my mandate. That was my thing, as they say. If I have saved one kid, if I have saved only two, then I believe I have been a success.

Thank you so much for the generous and warm reception you have given to me this afternoon. I really did not expect it. Now I am signally honoured to stand here as Her Majesty's representative in and for the province of Ontario for the last time, I guess, in order to extend to each and every one of you every best wish. May God continue to watch over you and may your every dream become a reality. Thank you very much.

WASTE MANAGEMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR LA GESTION DES DÉCHETS

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 143, An Act respecting the Management of Waste in the Greater Toronto Area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act / Projet de loi 143, Loi concernant la gestion des déchets dans la région du grand Toronto et modifiant la Loi sur la protection de l'environnement.

The Speaker: I believe the member for Markham had the floor when we left off.

Mr Cousens: It is somewhat difficult to get into the hard duty of Bill 143 after one of those moments in which this House had such a wonderful spirit and where there is just an obvious outpouring of love and affection for a leading citizen of Canada and certainly an ambassador of Her Majesty the Queen. Yet now I have to get into this, which is Bill 143, An Act respecting the Management of Waste in the Greater Toronto Area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act.

There are a number of points I would like to make pursuant to my initial presentation of last Tuesday when I had a chance to begin my comments. Today I specifically asked the Minister of the Environment if there could be a delay in the time frame in which the public could respond to her pamphlet, Waste Reduction Office Initiatives Paper 1: Regulatory Measures to Achieve Ontario's Waste Reduction Targets.

This document was released on October 9 and the minister expects to have all the comments submitted to her for consideration by December 6, less than a two-month period for that consultation process to take place. Indeed, there is so much to this that I question how possible it is for business to have an opportunity to put the thoughts together that would really be required with such a comprehensive and important document.

I do not think there is anyone in this House who would not agree with what she says in her press release of October 9, "We are moving away from consumerism towards the conserver society." That is a belief I share, our party shares, and as I have talked to industry, it also believes in. Yet what we now have to have happen is a sharing and participation in that process, a method by which those who have concerns about this document have an opportunity to explain their views and present them honestly, intelligently, fully and completely—and time, as well, for the government to respond to it.

The worry we have is that when you have such an abbreviated time frame in which corporations and people have to respond to such an important paper, there is not sufficient time to give it the effort that is really required by such an important statement.

I have asked the minister to delay the December 6 deadline. Although today she said, "People can continue to react," I fear that when you have such an abbreviated time frame for people to respond to ministry papers, it causes them to throw up their hands and say, "They're not going to listen." Then what happens is that these regulations will go into effect next year—

Hon Mr Wildman: Do you want more time?

Mr Cousens: I need more time. It is becoming a major concern of industry about this government. They need some kind of time frame in which not to be surprised. If the government is going to come along with short time frames in which things have to be reacted to, it makes it very difficult for business or anyone else to react in the time frame given by this New Democratic government.

I am asking for an extension beyond December 6. The minister today did not make a commitment to extend it beyond that time frame. I ask again now in this House that the minister reconsider the December 6 deadline and allow a greater time frame. Let a press release—one of the many she has been good at presenting—come out and say, "You've now got a more realistic time frame, until the end of the first quarter of 1992, and up until that time we'll continue to receive comments from those who have to make them." That is my first point, that there be a delay in the time frame for responses to the regulatory measures.

People who are watching the Legislature and understand what is going on do not understand something of the pressure of time we are under. Bill 143, of which the regulatory measures are part, came into the House for first reading on October 24, and now, just over a month later, we are into second reading of this bill. The minister has said she would like to have this bill passed and put into law by the time we rise for the Christmas holiday on December 19. That is, again, one more month in which we would hope to achieve the minister's objective of completing the debate on this bill. Also, there has been some willingness on the part of the government House leader to have public hearings on the bill. Those public hearings would be held between now and December 19, something less than a four-week period of time.

I implore the government to understand something of the time it takes to resolve the concerns that are raised in this bill. I genuinely believe there is not sufficient time between now and December 20 to have this bill go out for the kind of public hearings that are required. The implications of this bill go far beyond the greater Toronto area and establish a precedent that can impact, in effect, municipalities all across Ontario. Some 837 municipalities may well have some comment they want to make on this bill.

The bill has only been out for a month, yet the minister wants, within one more month's debate, to have it passed and put into law. I really cannot believe that is a sufficient amount of time for the kind of debate that should take place around Bill 143. Though our caucus has reviewed this bill, we will be talking in greater depth again at our caucus meeting tomorrow on whether we can speed up the whole process. But I am worried that if we short-circuit the opportunity for extended debate from people across the province we will have made decisions in this House and not had the opportunity to listen, as we should, to those viewpoints.

The minister and the government House leader may well try to invoke special powers that force the passage of this bill before December 20, when we rise. I sincerely hope they will not. I sincerely hope that this government will concur with our request, the request of the Ontario PC Party, that there be full public hearings on Bill 143 in which not only the municipalities of Metropolitan Toronto and area but all those other municipalities that want to participate in it will have a chance to come before the standing committee on resources development or some other committee to voice their concerns. I have to say that is a tremendously important issue.

The fact is that the Minister of the Environment has only had one bill before this House since this government took power on October 1, 1990. The first bill from the Ministry of the Environment is this Bill 143. We have not had to deal with any other legislation from this minister.

Mrs Caplan: It is not from the Minister of the Environment.

Mr Cousens: Well, it is the ministry of the greater Toronto area, but it is really an environmental bill. The member for Oriole points out that it is the ministry of the greater Toronto area. She may not be aware that when you bring up part IV of that bill, which really pertains to the Environmental Protection Act, it is a bill that could well be placed by the Minister of the Environment rather than by the minister of the greater Toronto area. That does not matter. The issue is that this is the first bill we have had before the House from this minister and the minister is expecting the House to deal with it very expeditiously.

I do not believe we can possibly deal with it at the speed which this minister is asking for; so what I am really asking for is an extension to the consultation time for the regulatory measures and I am asking for an opportunity for public hearings to take place on Bill 143.

1600

When I closed off my remarks the last day, I was commenting and I really had not the chance to say in greater detail my concerns about the Leader of the Opposition who, during the election campaign leading up to September 6, 1990, when the New Democrats won a majority government with 38% of the vote in Ontario—

Mr Jamison: It's still a majority.

Mr Cousens: Oh, it is still a majority. I respect the fact that they got the right to govern and they can do what they want. Well, they can do what they want in this province; all we can do as a responsible opposition is to challenge those issues that need to be challenged and hopefully find agreeable amendments that will allow changes to be made that will help make it a better system.

The fact of the matter is I was condemning the Premier for the statements he made prior to his election as Premier, when in fact he was near the Keele Valley landfill site and said at the time that there would be a full environmental assessment before any changes would be made to the Keele Valley landfill site. That is the kind of statement he made that caused many people to say: "Here's a person who has a sense of the environment. You can't just arbitrarily change Keele Valley without a full environmental assessment." The fact that he said that gave people a sense of confidence that when he became Premier he would remember what he said when he was Leader of the Opposition.

I just want to put on the record how on June 27 this year I asked the Premier: "What did the Premier say, as Leader of the Opposition, when he was within spitting distance of the garbage dumps, about what he was going to do when and if he was Premier, about those garbage sites?" His answer, which is written in Hansard on page 2401, does not answer the question.

Some people wonder why we call it question period. It is called question period because we seldom get answers. When I asked the Premier what he said, he would not admit in this House to what he said. He went on to say, "I would say to the honourable member, and say it very directly to him, that we were faced with a very difficult choice. I will put the choices to him." Then he went on, and what a non-answer I began to get. The non-answer really was not consistent with the kind of statement the Premier made when he was Leader of the Opposition.

I think of the biblical quote which says, "Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgement ye judge, ye shall be judged," for he who beholdeth the mote that is within his brother's eye and doth not behold the beam that is within his own shall be judged.

This very Premier had the opportunity of calling the previous Premier, David Peterson, a liar. When he was Leader of the Opposition, the Premier called David Peterson a liar. Now that he is Premier, the parliamentary system we are in makes it very difficult to call anyone a liar. I do not want to do that, nor would I do it. The onus falls upon him not to become something that he calls someone else. The fact that the Premier called David Peterson a liar makes me question just where he was coming from at that time. The onus falls upon him to set the example. If he is calling someone else a liar, one would not want him to fall into that same hole of mistruth.

I am concerned that in fact the Premier of this province has come along and has made the statement that he was going to do something with regard to Keele Valley and Britannia. He said there would be a full environmental assessment. Now that he is Premier, he and the Minister of the Environment are not prepared to go for a full environmental assessment.

What I would like to suggest is that he come clean and really say clearly what he meant to say back in the election campaign of September 6, 1990, or that he find some way within the political system for the people of Ontario to keep politicians honest.

If you are going to be a politician and you are going to make statements and you get elected on the basis of them, and then you do not live up to them, there should be some way in which the public at large can throw you out of office before the end of your four- or five-year term, or some way in which the public can be served. The public is not served by a politician who says one thing before he is elected and then once elected has quite a different position.

Is it any wonder that people have such a low regard for politicians? Once you do that, you destroy the trust you are trying to create. They trusted the Premier when they voted for him and his party on September 6, and now to retract fundamental promises that he made during that election campaign is something I take as a very serious breach of trust to the people of the province.

I have made the point strongly enough. The answer is not to be found in this House. I only say that we have to change the parliamentary system in some way so that we can have accountability of those who are elected to office so that they are then, in some form, accountable in an ongoing way for changes in policy, changes in thinking or changes in statements. The fact is that one seldom, if ever, gets an apology out of a government. Then when they come along and have a policy diametrically opposed to what they promised, it creates just a tremendous stigma around this profession of which we are part.

There were a couple of issues that I commented on earlier in my remarks; I would just like to go back to a couple of them. I want to thank the number of people who have written me and called me since I made those remarks, and I want first of all to be very clear on the record that when I talk on the subject of incineration, I am not taking a position that I favour incineration. The issue of incineration is something that I would like at least to have assessed by this government rather than closed off as a policy decision.

These are some of the questions coming out of the whole debate around incineration: How much garbage from the greater Toronto area and from Ontario is going across the border to the United States? How much of that garbage is ending up in incinerators? How much of the emissions from those incinerators comes back across Lake Ontario and the Great Lakes into Ontario through toxins and other substances that are carried by the air?

The questions have not been answered. I think they would be very difficult questions to answer by virtue of the fact that no one has really been able to quantify how much garbage is going across to the United States and how much garbage is being incinerated.

The fact of the matter is, if this government has a policy that is anti-incineration, why then does it allow and encourage so much transportation of garbage out of Ontario? First of all, it is a lot cheaper for companies and businesses and municipalities to send their garbage south of the border where the tipping fees are considerably less than they are here in Ontario. Because it is cheaper to send it down there and because they get rid of a lot of their garbage through incineration, we in Ontario then suffer all the ill effects of those incinerators that do not have the scrubbers and clean emission policies that are part and parcel of an incineration program that really has been well thought out and has gone through a full environmental assessment.

There are incinerators that churn out a tremendous amount of bad emissions and there are some that have more controls to them. I saw one of them in Minneapolis last year in which the emissions from an incinerator are far less than from coal furnaces, and yet that same incinerator is generating electric power for some 30,000 people.

All I am trying to say is that there is an issue on incineration which the minister has closed her mind to as if it cannot even be opened up or discussed or reviewed because it is a policy decision by the minister.

The challenge I have is very similar to the one being raised by Metropolitan Toronto council. Metro council has raised the question in its own efforts to try to come up with a solution, and on September 13 came along and established a task force that is reporting to the works committee on December 11, just some two or three weeks from now. An interim report will be presented to Metro council on the whole subject of incineration.

I looked at the members of the task force. They are the kinds of people I would want to hear from: Dr Steven McColl from the University of Waterloo; Dr Doug Chambers from Senes Consultants; Dr Murray Haight, University of Waterloo; Dr Don McKay, University of Toronto; Dr Virginia McClaren, University of Toronto; Dr John Hicks, Ryerson Polytechnical Institute; Dr Rodger Schwass of York University; Dr F C Hooper, University of Toronto.

The Metropolitan Toronto works committee has asked that this task force come back to conduct an in-depth comparative review of incineration versus landfill using all available evidence on the environmental, economic, social and health-related impacts of these two technologies to determine whether and under what circumstances one disposal technology would be chosen over the other and to deliver a report for public release to be presented to the works committee in March 1992.

My position is one that says they are in the process of gathering the latest up-to-date information on incineration; would it not be helpful for the minister to review and listen to and understand prior to making her decision, which she has made in Bill 143, excluding any further consideration of incineration as a way of reducing waste in Ontario? That is the challenge I have—only that she leave her mind open to it instead of precluding all the thinking by saying there will not be incineration. To do so opens up the opportunity for other options.

May we go on the record that before there be any further steps towards incineration, there be a full environmental assessment on the matter? Let it go through the most detailed study possible to make sure that if the province decides to proceed with further incinerators—we already have some—that we do it with the latest technology, that we do it in the best possible way and that we do not reduce our reduction program, our reusing program or our recycling programs, that anything we do when dealing with what is left over after the 3Rs is something that leads to another benefit for the province.

I know there are many people who have mixed views on this subject. Within my own caucus there is not full unanimity, yet on important issues like this we seldom have total agreement by everybody, nor do we ask for it. But just allowing a minister in her position, where she has tremendous power as Minister of the Environment, to make a decision without even looking at other data is something that concerns me.

Last evening I took 45 minutes to look at an environmental video film on Stop the Incinerator. It is a report that has been put together by Mr Jon Hand. He has put together a workshop on the whole issue of incineration. He raises the issues that many people look at when they deal with incineration. I have a summary of his views. They point out what Paul Connett, one of the leading spokespeople in the United States against incinerators, has had to say and how state-of-the-art changes have made it a cleaner form of getting rid of waste.

There are so many myths around this subject. Why do we not at least expose all sides of the issue to an open, intelligent, scientifically based analysis that could be done through an environmental assessment? That in itself would allow us as Ontario citizens to say that we agree or disagree with the whole concept of incinerators. I realize that there are some 1,900 incinerators in Japan. I realize as well that we have some four million homes being provided with electrical energy from the energy-from-waste program through incineration. Is that not a positive R that comes out of the recovery of a benefit from waste through incineration? Are we not in a way able to deal with the issues around solid waste? If we are able to reduce the mass of that in landfill sites, then will we not need less landfill sites if we are able to reduce the amount by compacting it through burning?

All I am saying is that when we look at what Mahatma Gandhi did, he kept his mind open to change. He was always looking for the ultimate truth. Why then does the Minister of the Environment not allow a greater study to take place on the whole subject of incineration rather than closing her mind to it, as she has done already? It is a major issue. I do not pretend to have the answers on it. I do have the answer with regard to the fact that I am looking for an approach that allows that at least to be considered as an option, not excluded as an option but looked at and assessed and analysed. Then, when we are finished the whole thing, we will at least know where we stand rather than have the belief system of the New Democrats forced on the province in a way that does not reflect the kind of broad-minded thinking that could take place—broadly based thinking is really what I mean.

One of the other benefits that has come out of the use of incinerators—I have a report from Proctor and Redfern Ltd. We are really the leaders around the world in the kind of thinking that is coming out of such firms and engineers as Proctor and Redfern here in our province. They have said that if you look at what you can do with methane, you can take that methane and use it for the generation of electrical energy. You are also able to reduce the amount of global warming, because methane, as we know, is one of the major contributors to the greenhouse effect. If we began to look at the recovery of energy from waste, that could yield a tremendous amount of electricity.

I have some numbers here from initial studies they made, and I will just put it into the record. The recovery of the energy directly from one million tonnes of waste in an energy-from-waste plant would yield electricity worth approximately $43 million at five cents a kilowatt-hour.

Can we not look at it? I beseech the Minister of the Environment to at least open that up for further consideration.

Mr Jordan: Is the Minister of Energy listening?

Mr Cousens: The critic for Energy asks if the Minister of Energy is listening. I hope he is. I see him in the House, and I am glad he is. I think it is not just a matter of the ministry. The point from the member for Lanark-Renfrew is a very valid one, that everyone has to be involved in the environmental crisis we are having. It is not just the Environment minister; it is also the Energy minister and all the government that begins to buy into viable solutions that could work to help us deal with this problem of waste and garbage.

Another issue I want to touch on briefly, to which I referred last week, has to do with the shipping of waste from the greater Toronto area. I want to thank the people from Kirkland Lake, who have since sent me a package on what has happened in Kirkland Lake with regard to the whole issue of shipping Metro's waste to the Adams mine site. They have corrected me in part. The municipality had a question on the ballots on November 12: "Are you in favour of a full environmental assessment of the Adams mine solid waste disposal and recycling project?" Some 69% of the people who voted in Kirkland Lake were in favour of that kind of decision. The referendum in Kirkland Lake supports having an environmental assessment on the Adams mine site. All they are asking for is the same thing I am asking for, that there at least be a full and public hearing on the subject of incineration.

The minister is now in a position where she is making decisions that affect all of us in the province without subjecting her thinking to an environmental assessment. All I am asking is that the minister open that up as a possibility.

When we start looking at the possibility of shipping Metro's waste to Kirkland Lake, we have another way in which we could reduce the cost of disposing of the waste in the greater Toronto area. I had not been aware of this, but the 5R solution—we are going to overwork the Rs, I know, but waste by rail is one of the Rs presented in this document. They point to a success story in Seattle, Washington, where they use rail services to transport the city's solid waste to a disposal site 430 kilometres from Seattle. The Union Pacific Railroad operates this double stack container train to Arlington, Oregon, daily. The waste compaction, loading and delivery systems are all state of the art. The containers and rail facilities are kept clean and neat and the municipal authorities are pleased with the efficiency, safety and environmental benefits of rail. If in fact we have a model that is working, such as this example in Seattle, Washington, why will the Minister of the Environment not open up her mind or her policy or the policy of the government to at least look at this as an option for Kirkland Lake?

We are saying the proposal to transfer Metropolitan Toronto's and the greater Toronto area's waste to Kirkland Lake would mean we could transfer municipal solid waste in 48-foot enclosed containers. They would double stack the containers on rail flatcars at CN's intermodal facility and then they would transport by rail, using Canadian National and Ontario Northland, to the Adams mine site near Kirkland Lake, some 600 kilometres north of Toronto, for recycling and disposal.

We are talking about jobs, we are talking about cheaper tippage fees than we have by continuing to use landfill sites within the greater Toronto area, and we are talking about an option that has at least to be looked at. The fact is that this minister has closed that as an option. I do not know how we do it, but it is costing more to do it otherwise.

We are talking about the economy of the north. I raised this as a question last week to the Minister of Northern Development and Mines, the member for Sudbury East. It was unfortunate, because the previous question that had been asked of the minister had to do with providing air transportation in northern Ontario. The minister went to great lengths to say, "I've been listening to the communities in the north, and they want to have different kinds of flight services around the north." Then I asked her what she was doing with regard to Kirkland Lake. The people in Kirkland Lake have asked the same minister to look at an environmental assessment to use the Adams mine site for the storage of garbage from the greater Toronto area in Kirkland Lake.

On the one hand, the minister was listening to her communities with regard to air service, yet the community of Kirkland Lake has asked her to look at an environmental assessment to take Metro's garbage at the Adams mine site and she will not listen to it. She would not listen to it; she will not listen to it. She is locked into the same closed-minded view that the Minister of the Environment has. They do not have to make up their minds; they do not have to take the decision. All I am asking is that they subject it to an environmental assessment. Through that process, the public will know that its best interests are served, because the environmental assessment process will allow all the considerations to be laid on the table. Why not do it that way? But this government refuses that kind of open-mindedness to another consideration.

I am extremely frustrated at the inability of this government to at least look at these two considerations. I reiterate that it is not my position that we should ship the garbage to Kirkland Lake. It is not my position that we should incinerate. I am saying we should look at them through a full environmental assessment, and then we will know whether it is right or wrong. That is how the decision can be made. It does not have to be made by the minister in her office, where she is listening to Greenpeace or some other group. These have very good motives and intentions, but she should look at all the facts. That is what I want to see happen. The failure of this government to do that is a concern to all of us.

There are a number of issues within Bill 143 that I would like to address in greater detail. I want to thank the chairman of my own environmental advisory council in Markham. A number of years ago, when I was beginning to really understand the importance of developing an environmental understanding of issues, I formed a committee that has continued to meet at my call in my constituency to talk about environmental concerns. Last week, I had breakfast with Mr Ken Hoyle, who is chairman of my environment council. He is also a landscape architect and genuinely concerned about long-term interests and the way in which we as politicians can develop policies and create an environment that helps everybody to prosper and live together.

I have a quote from Ken Hoyle, and I want to talk about this for a moment. He said, "The needs of society must be balanced with the rights of the individual." What we are seeing with the bill that has been presented by the Minister of the Environment is that the needs of society would dominate over the rights of the individual. In fact, when Bill 143 is made law in Ontario, there are many rights that individuals will lose.

I am trying to work out in my own mind the harmony between the rights of society and the rights of the individual. Should the rights of society cause the rights of the individual to be taken away? I believe Mr Hoyle is absolutely right that they should not be taken away, that the rights of an individual are sacred rights that have to be protected. If we have to do something to find ways of working within those rights, then we should do so, rather than unilaterally, arbitrarily removing those rights through legislation.

This leads to one of the fundamental flaws of Bill 143. Bill 143 is going to take away the safeguards of an individual. It is going to remove the rights that have been built into law previously that protect individuals through the Municipal Act, the Planning Act and the regional acts that pertain to the municipalities of York, Durham, Metro and Halton. These whole areas are all going to be impacted by the changes being proposed by the minister.

All I am asking for is that the minister find some sense of balance. If the government brings in legislation that takes away the rights of an individual or a municipality—and before the law a municipality is treated as an individual—that affects all the people who live within that municipality. Over time, they have come to expect certain guarantees of protection because of the existing law structure in Ontario.

Under this bill, Bill 143, the minister is taking away a number of those rights. What she is saying is that "a regional or metropolitan municipality shall comply with this section" even if to do so would require the contravention of an act referred to in subsection 5 or any regulation or any other agreements that have been made with that municipality.

I cannot believe it. In other words, with one small stroke of the pen, the acts that have been developed over 100 years, the agreements that have been created over a long period of time, are null and void. There is no recourse, because when the majority of this House votes on this bill, it means not only the Planning Act, the Municipal Act and the regional acts that affect all the greater Toronto area, but every one of those acts, as it pertains to a landfill site, can be disregarded.

I find that a very serious step. I have a solution for it. There is another way around this problem, but not to take away the rights of those municipalities and groups. It is not just the few acts I have talked about. I am referring now to some of the legal considerations that were presented by the Metro legal department. I thank the member for Etobicoke West for sharing some of his thinking with me, and I am sure when he is commenting on this bill, as our critic responsible for the greater Toronto area, he will be touching upon some of the removals of rights coming out because of Bill 143.

I want to comment on six or seven of those acts, in addition to the ones I have already mentioned, where, because of this bill, the power and protection of those acts is removed.

First of all, the Environmental Assessment Act: The proposed extension to Keele Valley is subject to the requirements of the Environmental Assessment Act. While that undertaking is being implemented by the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, it is being done pursuant to the direction of the minister, as contained in the minister's report. There is no indication in the material which is being served on Metro that an exemption from the Environmental Assessment Act will be given outside the normal policy framework of the Ministry of the Environment.

The Environmental Assessment Act was established as a way of understanding the relationships between municipalities and the government of Ontario. Now as we come forward with changes to the act and Bill 143, all those previous considerations that had been dealt with over a period of time are null and void.

With regard to municipal approvals, we are dealing with one municipality and there is another battle going on with Mississauga and Peel in this ministry. In the absence of the consent of Vaughan to any amendment of the agreement to allow for the extension of Keele Valley beyond existing final contours, legislation is required for a unilateral amendment to the agreement to provide at least for a hearing before the Ontario Municipal Board on the refusal of Vaughan.

What is happening is that this government has understood the frustration Vaughan has with the proposed changes to expand and build upon the Keele Valley landfill site and that in fact Vaughan is going to do everything it can to make sure there is a full environmental assessment on it. If the government tries to railroad the expansion of Keele Valley without that environmental assessment, then, rightly so, the city of Vaughan is going to do everything it can within its power to cause the government to rethink its position. The only way the government can rethink its position now is to change the law, because it is not able to use reason or common sense or to keep its promises in order for it to happen otherwise.

Under subsection 66(3) of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, no land may be acquired in a local municipality without the approval of that municipality. The change in Bill 143 allows anyone to go and act in another municipality without that municipality having anything to say about it. Come on.

As set out below in the list of approvals required in connection with North Avondale, "The consent of the regional municipality of York to the clay will be under the Regional Municipality of York Act." They are saying:

"How are you going to get that clay? If in fact there is trouble getting the clay, this government is going to come along and find a way of doing it."

Now I am in favour of the intent behind the bill. We have to come up with a solution to the problem of having a landfill site that is going to be able to deal with the needs of the greater Toronto area. But maybe what we need to do, and my solution, is that we need to change the Environmental Assessment Act so that we have a speeded-up process by which we can cause all the things being considered to be focused upon in an environmental assessment.

If people are trying to delay and protract the hearing and drag it out over a long period of time, what we should be doing is changing the Environmental Assessment Act. We change that to say that under this new process we are going to get an experienced judge in there and he or she is not going to allow frivolous delays to the whole thing; it is going to go snap, snap, one, two, three, four, and when we are finished, we will have all the facts and the data brought out before something like a court which hears what is being said. Someone is going to have the strength of his convictions to say: "You are wasting time. You are trying to delay it. You have a NIMBY syndrome. You are trying to stop it because it is in your own backyard."

If that is the case, a change to the Environmental Assessment Act will allow us to deal with these issues under existing laws. The government should respect the laws that have been created that we have dwelled under for a long period of time.

Mr Wiseman: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I do not mean to interrupt, but I am trying to follow the debate section by section as the member is dealing with it. I am trying to ask him what section he is at.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): The member does not have a point of order. The member for Markham will resume the debate.

Mr Cousens: I appreciate what the member is saying. I think it is difficult to follow me. The point I am trying to make is that there are a number of issues with regard to the section I was referring to in part III of the bill, section 17, where the minister is taking away the rights of municipalities, primarily through section 5 and section 7. In those sections the minister is removing rights under previous acts that have been agreed to in this House previously. My point is that there are a number of examples of that.

Those examples include the ones I have mentioned: the Environmental Assessment Act, some of the municipal acts and the Regional Municipality of York Act. I also point to the Environmental Protection Act. There are a number of sections there where approval is required. Because of this bill, all these sections we are referring to that are part and parcel of previously understood agreements will be null and void and not part of the considerations. That worries me. I am saying the government should not change the law so drastically that those are removed. There are further examples of that which I will touch on.

When passed, this bill will mean there will be no legal recourse for a municipality to say: "Do you have the approvals for a waste disposal site and a waste management system?"—these are questions under different acts; that one is the EPA, part V—"Have you worked out under the Ontario Water Resources Act the approval for sewage works? Have you worked out under the Aggregate Resources Act for clay extraction? Have you worked out the approval of construction of temporary sediment ponds under the Lakes and Rivers Improvement Act?"

"Has this government worked out its expropriations under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act and the Municipal Act? Have they taken into consideration the official plan amendment and zoning bylaw amendments under the Planning Act, 1983? Has this government taken into consideration the Regional Municipality of York Act regarding its approvals? Have they taken into consideration the Metropolitan Toronto act regarding the approval of Vaughan under subsection 66(3)?" There are another seven or eight issues that come out of this issue.

What about under the Environmental Protection Act? Where is this government going to be under the EPA, given the continued view of Metro staff and other staff that the clay needed to go into this site is far greater than what is available right now? Where are they going to get it from and how can that be handled?

The OMB approval will be required under section 64 of the Ontario Municipal Board Act. It gets kind of tricky, but what the government is dealing with there are additional approvals that are required under existing acts.

If it means we have to take away all the history of legislation in the province to handle our garbage dumps, that is wrong. We can say "Here is another approach we take; that is, look at an environmental assessment process that speeds it up and yet forces everything to be considered within that." There is no reason we cannot do it that way. The government should not run roughshod over every act, every law and every agreement that has been made. That is exactly what is going to happen with this bill. It is serious business.

By the way, the concern that came out today in the response I had from the Minister of the Environment on this issue had to do with the fact that this is going to affect every municipality in Ontario. We are establishing a precedent here in Ontario for future laws that are going to affect every municipality. If it good enough for the greater Toronto area it is going to be good enough for Sudbury, Sarnia, Cornwall and all the places in between. Whatever we do here has an impact on them and therefore they should have every opportunity possible to come and lay out on the table what their concerns are. The Minister of the Environment should listen, open her ears and consult. She should listen to the other points of view, and through that, try to find some way of working out the details.

The whole issue of this government, having been such a strong proponent for people's rights, now removing so many of those rights touches upon one of the fundamental flaws of the government. What the Premier and his government are prepared to do is put the needs of society ahead of and above the rights of the individual. I believe that is where you get to that difference of view I and the member for Simcoe Centre would have. The members on this side of the House would say that somehow the government has to work in harmony. The rights of society have to be worked out with consideration of the rights of the individual. You work it out so they are in harmony and balance together; you do not come along and unilaterally dominate the rights of society over the rights of an individual.

If we in this country had property rights in the Constitution, this law would not be allowed. If the minister had her own environmental bill of rights in law now—thank God she does not. Thank goodness this Minister of the Environment did not bring forward her environmental bill of rights. At the beginning of this session of the House, the Liberal member for Halton Centre, when she was the critic for the Environment, put into the record the identical bill of rights the now Minister of the Environment brought out a couple of years ago, so the Liberals are on record that they want to have a strong environmental bill of rights. If we had that environmental bill of rights in law as it was originally presented by the present Minister of the Environment, there is no way this law could be passed.

Again, what we are talking about is working out the balance between an individual's rights and society's rights, and I do not think we should ever lose sight of the fact that this is part of the harmony the government has to work out. You do not just legislate it. It is done through dialogue and discussion, as people say, "This is what I believe, and here are my rights under the existing laws." Then you have a type of court process that protects them from having rights taken away. That is the kind of thing I am calling for.

In fact, I am not in favour of people saying, "Not in my backyard." I do not think there is anything worse than this constant nagging feeling that people have: "Hey, not in my backyard."

I really resented it when the minister responsible for the greater Toronto area and Minister of the Environment, the same person, the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, made that accusation to the people of the city of Vaughan last week. She did it in such a slippery way. She said, "I can understand"—I am paraphrasing—"how they would be very upset to have the Keele Valley landfill site in their backyard and I can see why they would be angry."

She should get off it. It is far deeper and bigger an issue than people saying, "It's in my backyard." We are dealing with serious, fundamental philosophical differences. May I suggest that if the government allows the time for other municipalities and businesses to react to it, it is going to have a good discussion.

Maybe one of the reasons the government wants to push this legislation through so quickly is that it will not allow that discussion. There will not be the dialogue, and then suddenly people will wake up on January 1 with the new laws in place, and they are not going to like it. They are going to say, "I didn't have a chance to react to it. That's not fair."

What the government needs to have is a lead time before it brings in new laws. When they bring in a law as far-reaching in effect as Bill 143 is, in removing the rights of previous laws and previous agreements, they are dealing with a change that I consider requires open public dialogue. The government should not try to close it down before it is started, and that is what this government is trying to do. They are trying to prevent that dialogue from taking place, and they are going to use all the fear tactics. They will say, "We'll have garbage in the streets, we'll have all kinds of"—come on.

I was told by the government House leader that he would have in my hands, by Thursday afternoon last week a list of the reasons it was important for this bill to be passed within a very short period, before December 20. I do not have it yet. I am going to a caucus meeting tomorrow and I still do not have it.

It is more important that we have a long-term strategy that the province understands and is able to work with, rather than have something shoved down our throat without the full dialogue taking place on it. I refuse to allow my rights and the rights of the people of Ontario to be treated so frivolously. We have to make sure that those people who have concerns about this at least have a chance to react.

There is more I could say on that issue. I close by saying on that particular issue that the needs of society must be balanced with the rights of the individual. This bill does not do that, and that is something that has to be looked at. I am most interested in knowing what all the municipalities of the greater Toronto area have to say about it, I am interested in what other environmental groups have to say about it. I think that dialogue is going to be a very important discussion that will take place within the new year.

One of the concerns in part III of the bill is one of those things that—I have never really accepted the fact that governments should be living beyond their means. There is a certain amount of debenturing that goes on in every municipality and school board, and the problem we have is that more and more we have to try to live within our financial means within a fiscal year so that as councils and the government of Ontario move into the future, we are not borrowing and increasing the debt for future generations and people who come after us. That applies as well to the treatment of waste sites and disposal.

One of the sections in Bill 143 says, "Section 64 of the Ontario Municipal Board Act does not apply in respect of any waste management system or waste disposal site used, maintained, operated, established, altered, improved, enlarged or extended by a municipality in order to comply with this section." That is really saying that any municipality that wants to build up a debt or incurs any spending beyond this fiscal year will be able to have a debt created around the garbage problem within its municipality.

There are precedents for it. There are situations where this province has gone ahead and given municipalities the right to build up a debt on certain issues, but this government should not do it again. They should not continue to allow this idea that you can pay for it tomorrow. We have to find ways of dealing with our expenses fiscally responsibly within our means today and not create the long-term debt problems that, for instance, this province is now having, that the federal government has. Every government in Canada seems to be great at spending money they do not have in the bank, and that is not something I am in favour of at all.

I am concerned as well that this bill will not require hearings on decisions made by the director or by the minister with regard to landfill sites. The option for an individual to come back and have hearings on whatever it is that is being decided with regard to his municipality or the potential landfill site or the property on which the government is looking is removed.

We have to make sure that when we live in a democracy, we continue to fight for the democratic rights of the property owner and of the public at large and do not take those rights away. I think if we continue this at the rate we are now, there is going to be a rebellion in Canada, because people are increasingly frustrated at government interference into the way they have to do business, the way they have to live, government interference in their property. It just does not seem to end. The fact is that some of it is required, but I truly believe there has to come back that sense—I want to protect the rights of the property owner to know his property is safe from someone else going in on it, and that if he has a concern he has a way of expressing that concern.

That leads me to another of my concerns, the Expropriations Act. This bill builds into it the whole sense that the government, when it wants to take over someone's property for a potential landfill site, first of all can get something like a warrant that allows it to go on that property and do testing. They can evaluate it, and there is no limit to the amount of time they could take to do that assessment of the property, and when they decide they want to buy it, then Bill 143 builds into it the same guidelines that exist now under the Expropriations Act for the province.

I am surprised. Why does the ministry not look at how the Expropriations Act works, and why not bring in a few other considerations outside the Expropriations Act? Under the Expropriations Act, a person who has "injuriously affection" would be someone who is a neighbour to a property that has been expropriated by the government for a landfill site. What happens then is that there are two or three elements that person has to react to.

Section 1 of the act defines "injuriously affection" as "(a) where a statutory authority requires part of the land of an owner, (i) the reduction in market value thereby caused to the remaining land of the owner...." So there is an aspect where the rest of the land around the expropriated land is reduced in value. Another aspect is "(ii) such personal and business damages, resulting from the construction or use, or both, of the works as the statutory authority would be liable for if the construction or use were not under the authority of the statute."

Mr Callahan: It's like local improvement.

Mr Cousens: It is like local improvement, yes. Here is where we get into it: You have now taken over someone's property and a neighbour is saying, "I have a problem with what has happened there." I have deliberately dug out the Expropriations Act so that we can just put it into the record, and this is one of the amendments I want the government to consider, at least as a way to circumvent the problem.

Section 22 of the act says that the claim for compensation for injurious affection is limited to only one year: "Subject to subsection (2), a claim for compensation for injurious affection shall be made by the person suffering the damage or loss in writing with particulars of the claim within one year after the damage was sustained."

How are you going to know if a landfill site on a neighbouring property is going to cause a plume or the effect it is going to have on your property? You are going to come along and have a quick reaction and say, "I'm going to get dust, I'm going to get smell, I'm going to have other problems," but some of the other effects of a landfill site next door to you may not be known immediately, may not be known within a year. Yet the law as we have it within Bill 143 would limit anyone who is going to be claiming for injurious affection to only one year to claim that.

That is not enough, not when we are dealing with the kind of long-term implications of such environmental acts as the creation of a landfill site within a community. That is another section within part III of the bill that needs to be addressed. Hopefully, the government will accept some amendments that will allow us to get around that issue.

I have problems with the minister's concept of trying to enlarge two of the largest landfill sites in the province: Keele Valley and Britannia. I read a paper on it over the weekend. I was able to do some further studying on it. It has to do with the weight of the landfill on the clay layer underneath it.

Several things happen. There is a four-foot layer of clay under the Keele Valley landfill site. That four-foot layer of clay acts as a blanket to protect against leachate coming through and getting into the ground water underneath. At the Keele Valley landfill site 50% of that clay layer is already penetrated by leachate. We have another two feet to go. I do not know whether the leachate will go through at that point. Maybe the clay becomes such a hardened substance that it is not going to go through. This is something I want to have subjected to a thorough environmental assessment.

The waters underneath the Keele Valley landfill site are really the eastern branch of the Don River. The Don River headwaters are on the same parcel of land. The Don Valley headwaters are on the same parcel of land as the Keele Valley landfill site. If there is a problem with that clay layer being impacted negatively because of the increased size of the landfill—the specifications of the landfill site were for a certain size. If you are going to add 30% or 50% more gross volume to it, as that pushes down on the clay barrier underneath, does that in fact cause more seepage to go through into the headwaters of the Don River?

I do not know the answer to that question and I do not pretend to know the answer, but it is the kind of question that is fundamental to the understanding of the long-term impact of an expansion of the Keele Valley landfill site. If we are going to pollute the headwaters of the Don River right at their origin, we are never going to clean up the Don. We are never going to be in a position where we can fish and eat the fish we catch in it or swim and do other things in that river.

We have succeeded in having all governments face up to the Rouge River system and we are now in a position where something beautiful is going to happen there: We are going to keep it. It is going to live. It is going to be a living ecological system. Why can we not begin to have the same sense of purpose for the Don River? Here we are with the Keele Valley landfill site right at the headwaters of the eastern branch of the Don River. If there is anything we can do to guarantee the long-term life of that river, to make sure clean, wholesome, good water is coming into it, without the seepage that is going to possibly come from Keele Valley, then we should look at that. That should be looked at through a full environmental assessment, not through the short-circuited route this government is suggesting.

We are talking about something that touches upon everybody in the greater Toronto area. What we are really seeing is when we start to have some of the heavy metals, gases and toxins escape from this leachate system, and we are talking about how we deal with that. The leachate alone is not dealt with well. The leachate is all the juices and gases that come out of the garbage that is compressed. It is now pumped up and then put through the water system in the greater Toronto area. The water purification system is not made to deal with the kinds of heavy metals and the substances coming out of that leachate.

We are going to have far more leachate coming out of these expanded dump sites. How are we dealing with that as well? A second question comes out of the expansion of these two sites, and that is how we are dealing with the leachate that is pumped out and taken for purification and the leachate that could possibly go through the existing clay layer and end up going into the headwaters of these systems.

There are a few other considerations I have with regard to this bill. They have to do with part IV of the bill. Part IV of the bill touches on a number of issues.

Mr McLean: It's a major part.

Mr Cousens: My friend the member for Simcoe East is right. It is a major part. It has a lot to do with these regulatory guidelines that the minister dropped on us on October 9. The minister has let these out for public comment. They have a lot of impact on what industry is all about.

I think every one of us has to be pleased with the intent the Minister of the Environment has, because if we do not begin to do something about packaging guidelines and reducing the amount of packaging, and therefore the amount of waste, right at the source, we will never conquer the problem. She is really trying to do a number of things through her regulatory measures.

She is also following through and asking for a number of methods by which she will be able to do audits. Each company will be required to have an audit on its own waste systems and those audits will be subject to scrutiny by the province. I think that is a good idea, because through that process some companies are going to be able to quickly say: "I've got it. I know what I should be doing differently." They will come up with their own recommendations. Just that study itself will be helpful for them in reducing the amount of primary sources they put into their products and the amount of garbage they generate, the amount of waste that is being thrown out and not reused. There is a concept here that is good. Let's not take that away.

As I look at part IV of the bill, the minister is looking for targets for larger municipalities to implement recycling and composting programs. I think that is good. She is requiring businesses and institutions to recycle and conduct annual waste audits and prepare waste reduction plans. I think that is going to be good too.

I think there is going to be a pile of money to be made in this whole garbage business. As one chap was saying to me, kiddingly, over the weekend, there are really three things that are guaranteed to raise money: drugs, prostitution and garbage. The whole business of garbage is really one of those things that generates an awful lot of cash for people involved in it. That is smart. The people who are saving on the amount of things they are producing by cutting back and reusing certain things are able to conserve in a way that gives them a bigger profit.

I like what the minister is trying to do in requiring municipalities to establish reasonable fees for disposing of trash at dumps. I do not know what "reasonable" is any more. Why is it a third of the cost to ship it down to Indianapolis, where the tippage fees are that much less than they are in the greater Toronto area? What we have to do is keep trying to find ways in which it is cheaper. People will go where the market will allow them to take it, so the fact that municipalities will have reasonable fees for their tippage—they could have it already, but they are really saying, "Look, let's do it further."

Then one of the things the minister does is have new regulations on packaging, containers and disposable packages. What I really want to touch on here is the question of Ontario's competitiveness. How do we deal with it? Are we in a position where we want to be different from the rest of Canada? If a company has a nationwide product, is it going to be in a position soon where Ontario's regulations and guidelines are so different from any other jurisdiction that in fact it has to have one set of packaging standards for Ontario and another packaging standard for other parts of Canada?

If the rest of Canada is that slow, I would say Ontario should lead the way. But if in fact Ontario can work with the other jurisdictions and develop a consensus of approach within this federation, then we will have gone a step in the right direction and we are working together. If Ontario is able to develop packaging guidelines that are not rammed through so quickly without discussion and dialogue, that too would be good. If Ontario is able to work with industry and say, "Look, it's going to take you two years to get rid of your existing inventories. It's going to take you a certain lead time in order to retool and manufacture and set things up differently. We'll work with you on that," that is what I call dialogue and consultation.

The fear I have is that the kind of dialogue we have from this government to industry is a one-way dialogue. It is not saying, "Here's what we're thinking," and giving them a chance to feed back how in fact they can implement these guidelines. This government does not seem to work that way. The minister already has tremendous power. When we give this government more powers, such as it has in this bill, then it can misuse it.

If I had a sense of confidence that the Minister of the Environment and the Premier were listening and working with industry, then I would have a sense that we are going the right way. What we have instead are the words of a government that says, "We want to do more," but the actual implementation is enough to turn people off and send them to Belleville or Buffalo, which is the question I raised in the House this afternoon.

Mr McLean: Or Beamsville.

Mr Cousens: Or Beamsville. Anywhere other than the greater Toronto area. It is becoming uncompetitive for business to stay in the greater Toronto area. It is becoming uncompetitive to stay in Ontario. What we have to look at is how we can, in developing environmental policies, develop strategies that will allow Ontario not only to maintain the leading edge as an environmental conservator society—we want to do that; I believe in that and I know our caucus believes in it—but somehow members opposite should work it through so they are not in opposition to the needs of industry to survive this economic situation we are in and they help industry to work into it so there is an implementation program that does not set it back further, that does not discourage business from coming into Ontario.

Anything we do in any area of this government has a ripple effect through all the other areas of what it takes to make our society strong. We must be able to develop policies and strategies that respect the needs of a conservator society; make a leading effort but do it harmoniously without setting Ontario back, understanding that we are into one of the worst recessions we have had in years. Therefore in order to work that through, is it not as important to look at making sure we keep jobs in Ontario? Is it not making sure we keep the economy strong and at the same time understand that we have an environmental agenda? Can the two not work together? I believe they can, but I believe what will happen is that this Ministry of the Environment, like the Ministry of Labour, disregards the needs of industry to try to work it through.

There have been classic examples where Ontario's industries have led the way. I do not think enough time is given to complimenting the leadership of Falconbridge and Inco for the way they have fought to reduce acid rain, sulphur dioxide emissions. They have tried and they have accomplished great things. Industries out there, as I talk to them, continue to be anxious to participate in making Ontario's a strong environmental voice. Yet let's make sure we do that at the same time as they remain competitive for their US customers. Let's make sure they are competitive as well with the rest of the provinces within Canada so that anything we do within the environmental agenda is done in harmony with considering the economic consequences of it.

Let there be an economic statement that comes out and says, "This is what it's going to cost; this is what it's going to do." That does not take away the urgency of doing something about packaging. It does not take away the urgency of reducing the amount of garbage we are creating. We know that, but let's ramp up to it in a way that allows us to deal with it honestly and effectively and in a sound economic way. Do not cause us as Canadians to lose all our competitive edge. We could have the cleanest environment in the world and no business going on here. How then do we justify it all? That is part of the harmony I am calling for. I know some of these New Democrats disagree with that, but they cannot forget business. It has to be out there. They have to strengthen it. The government cannot come along and attack it all the time—and that is the government's view. The members opposite think they are just going to come along and beat business up all the time. I do not agree with that. They should work with business. The government should allow business to do something together with it.

Mrs Mathysen: This is utter, complete nonsense. You are making this up as you go along.

Mr Cousens: The members say I make complete nonsense. I have to tell them, all they have to do is work with business. They should not just come along and shove this kind of thing down their throats all the time through regulation. They just come along and make a change, and all they do is force it on them. They should listen to them, talk to them, work with them.

The government cannot just be arbitrary in everything. In some things it has to be, but when it is dealing with environmental law, let's make sure the world we are working within in Ontario buys into it. We educate them on the need for it.

I believe in environmental principles. I believe in the fundamental principles being presented by the Minister of the Environment. I agree with the kind of statements she is making on becoming a conservator society. I disagree wholeheartedly with the implementation program she is launching in this province with this Bill 143. I disagree with it and I believe that other people too, when they see the bill, if they are given enough time to look at it, will express deep concerns about what this bill is doing.

Mr McLean: They should read it.

Mr Cousens: The honourable member for Simcoe East says they should read it. The problem is the bill was tabled in late October. We are into debate now and the minister wants to have it passed by the time we rise on December 20.

I have grave concerns that the issues being raised in this bill really have to be addressed beyond what members say in this House and what members of the Legislature say in committee. We have to invite municipalities, AMO, environmental groups, people who are in industry who are going to be impacted by the regulations and changes that she is proposing, to have a chance to comment on it.

If we listen to them, we could well come up with some changes to the bill that will accomplish our mutual objective, which is a safer, cleaner environment, and yet find ways in which we have been able to develop a consensus. The consensus only exists now with the New Democrats. They have a consensus within their caucus, and if they have their way, Bill 143 will be passed and the debate will be over, and then the anguish begins. My feeling is that we should not allow that to happen without there being ample opportunity for all those who have concerns about this bill to have had expression on it.

The solution lies in not taking away the rights of municipalities, not taking away the rights of individuals. It calls for some different approach to it. Let there be an environmental process through an Environmental Assessment Act that is revised that will speed up the process. Then, within a given period of time, we will have completed the assessment and analysis of all the ramifications of what this bill is calling for.

You could subject the minister's view about no incineration to it. You could subject the minister's view about no shipment of waste from Metro Toronto to Kirkland Lake to it. You could subject the whole issue of Keele Valley expansion and Britannia expansion to it. You could subject the whole issue of a site within the greater Toronto area and each of the municipalities to dispose of its own garbage to it. You could subject a lot of our thinking. If any of us has those ideas that are seen as irresponsible and not with it, then you are at least saying, "There's the court that's going to deal with it." They will have the data and information and research to allow that group to develop a statement that is going to mean something.

Mr Speaker, if you cannot tell, I am very concerned about what Bill 143 is going to do to the rights of individuals and municipalities. I know this bill is going to pass; I know the New Democrats have the numbers to force this through the House. But I believe it has to be subjected to public dialogue and scrutiny. At that point at least the minister might understand just how strongly people feel on it. If we do not give them the opportunity, they will not have a chance to express that view. I believe this is part of the democratic right.

This minister has been in hiding. She has made very few statements in the House; she makes more of them out of the House. This is the first piece of legislation that the minister for the greater Toronto area, who is also Minister of the Environment, has brought forward since she took office on October 1 last year. It is a significant piece of legislation and is worthy of extensive dialogue. I am calling on the government for that. I called on it for an extension to the debate on it today in question period. I did not get an answer then and I will continue to ask that question.

I think I can close my presentation today. I challenge the Minister of the Environment to a public debate on Bill 143, in which she and the Liberal critic and I will have a public hearing to discuss this so there is a chance for the public at large to begin to understand something of this bill. I think that is one of the things we could well do on it. I hereby challenge the Minister of the Environment to a public debate—her time and her place—so we can have the public there. She can make her presentation, the honourable Liberal member can make his statement and I will make mine, and then we can have some dialogue from the floor.

That can be one of things that can persuade the minister to know whether or not there is a groundswell of concern over what Bill 143 is all about. I believe that such a public debate would be an excellent way in which we might begin to put the issues on the table. What members have heard through this presentation is one person, the MPP for Markham, talking about environmental issues, but I know there are many others who have many other thoughts on it.

Rather than having it railroaded through, this would give us a real opportunity for a discussion on it. Who knows? That public debate might well be enough to persuade the minister to understand that there are concerns out there about this bill, and it is not just myself and our PC caucus that are talking.

There is much more to be said on this bill. It is going to be debated in the House this week, tomorrow and on Thursday as well. I know there are many others who wish to participate, so I will close off for now.

Mr McLean: I want to comment briefly on my colleague's remarks with regard to Bill 143. He lays it out very well. He missed a few bases, but touched most pretty well.

There are major concerns in this bill. We look at the environmental assessments for the sites, which will not be required to contain discussions of any alternatives to the landfill sites—that is in part II—and we look at part III, which my colleague touched on, that a certificate of approval for a waste management system or waste disposal site may be issued or amended without requiring the Environmental Assessment Board to hold a hearing. I cannot believe what I am hearing and seeing in this bill from the very minister whom I remember standing in this Legislature and talking about full environmental assessment hearings.

We look at the amendments to the Environmental Protection Act, the very area of concern that could affect the whole of this province, not only the GTA, and we look at some of the definitions and the amendment in section 24 that the explanatory note says "would effectively broaden the regulation-making power by changing 'other wastes' to 'other materials.' The definition of 'waste disposal site' and 'waste management system' would also be broadened."

Section 33 is a major one. It is near the end. The explanatory note says the "amendment would broaden the scope for making regulations in relation to waste management systems and disposal sites." What we are doing here is giving the minister total power, through regulation, and also through the other act she has, through the Lieutenant Governor in Council, to change and make powers. It is totally unacceptable. That is why we really object to this bill. It gives those people the total power they want.

Hon Ms Churley: I want to comment briefly on one aspect of the member for Markham's comments, particularly on incineration and his comment that the minister should be including that in her environmental assessment.

I would like to point out that there have been lots of studies on incineration done worldwide by now and there is no lack of information on what incineration does. Until we get to a point where we are separating garbage properly we should not even consider it. Members know that the very act of combustion in burning garbage causes the creation of furans, dioxins, mercury, lead and other kinds of poisons that affect people, and it goes up in the air and spews for miles all around.

Members also should know that these incinerators are very expensive. Garbage as a fuel is a very low-grade, terrible fuel and you have to maintain these fires at a very high temperature at all times, which then creates competition among the other 3Rs. The garbage is needed to burn in the incinerator, which is a problem for our society when we are trying to move to (a) neighbourhoods or at least districts taking care of their own garbage, and (b) a more responsible 3R society. When we set up that kind of competition for the garbage, we have a problem.

I have outlined just very briefly in these few minutes some of the problems associated with the burning of garbage. If you include that at this time in the options to look at in environmental assessment, it is a very complicated engineering solution to a problem that at this point in time we have to take on as communities, and we have to take on in a responsible way of dealing with our garbage and not creating it in the first place.

Mrs Caplan: The member for Riverdale has provoked me to respond to some of the statements she has made, which I believe are quite irresponsible.

She mentioned worldwide studies. I would suggest to her that the results of those worldwide studies on the production of energy from waste suggest that if we are looking for an environmentally safe approach rather than putting a dump in the middle of the most heavily populated part of this province, she should look at the results of the worldwide study—

The Deputy Speaker: Your comments should be on the member for Markham's speech.

Mrs Caplan: I am referring to what the member for Markham has said and the response from the member for Riverdale, who I believe does not have all the facts.

Mr White: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The member should be addressing herself to the member for Markham's remarks.

Mrs Caplan: I would like to, in my response during this two minutes refer to the comments of the member for Markham and the response to his remarks from the member for Willowdale, because they are important. The statement was made that neighbourhoods have to take care of their own garbage. That is the kind of ideology and rhetoric which entering into this debate is less than helpful and is not responsible.

I think there is a lot of information which is complicated by the kind of rhetoric we have heard in this House. Hopefully all members will want to see the very best information on energy from waste, which is often referred to as incineration, on the kinds of impacts we have when dumps are placed in highly urbanized areas, and that we will all share our commitment to protection of the environment through the gathering of and the sharing of valuable and important information. It is not helpful to the debate to hear the kind of rhetoric and ideology which has been expressed from the government side of the House.

Mrs Marland: This debate is really about whether the public and the municipal councils which are elected to represent the concerns and views and opinions of the public will have input. One of the things the member for Markham has been asking for is that we allow that process to take place with this very significant piece of legislation. With these comments on the member for Markham's speech, we are getting off into areas that are non-issues.

I too have an opinion on incineration; I have a very strong opinion on incineration. The issue we are dealing with today is whether this bill should proceed in its present form or whether we should have it referred to committee and have the public have its chance for input.

This legislation is setting aside the rights of the people of this province. It is totally ignoring the concerns of municipalities in this province, including my own.

In the region of Peel, interestingly enough, I say to the members opposite, we already have an incinerator which has been approved and is under construction, and it went through the environmental assessment hearing. I am not in favour of the incineration of municipal solid waste. I stood in this House and supported the Minister of the Environment in her statement of prohibition on incineration of municipal solid waste, but that is not the issue we are dealing with today. We are dealing with Bill 143 and the fact that it ignores the rights of the people of this province to have some comment on a bill that takes away all the acts that exist today to protect them.

Mr Cousens: I thank the member for Mississauga South and the member for Oriole. The kind of insight they have to protect their constituents and the rights of people, which the member for Oriole was also referring to, is fundamental to what it is all about.

A friend of mine who was out in Saskatoon has a sister who looks after hospital admissions, and 25% of the people who come into hospital admissions give their religion as NDP. I raise that because sometimes, if you have something that is like a belief system, you will present it as your view without having any kind of validation using reasoned background or understanding of rights. The problem with the New Democrats is that they operate under a set of religious-type principles and belief systems rather than something that is sound and based on a scientific background and that has a little more meat. They have a philosophical belief system that does not take into consideration the balance we need in society. That was really manifested in the statements by the member for Riverdale.

I cannot believe that members of the government do not have a bigger and broader understanding of the balance that is needed to make this a society that works. They will have their beliefs, but they are not based on anything other than some kind of doctrinaire system. They are not willing to expose it to an environmental assessment. They are not willing to expose it to some thought processes. The challenge stands. I challenge the Minister of the Environment to a public debate on Bill 143, and I invite the Liberal member for Brampton North to share in that, so we can get remove from it some of the mystique and some of the mystery that government members have and deal with the issues.

The issues are hard and they are real and they have to do with rights—the rights of the individual and the right of a person who is elected to office at a municipality to represent his or her people. Those rights are being taken away by this bill.

Mr Duignan: I am very pleased to rise and speak in support of Bill 143. I believe Bill 143 brings profound changes to waste management strategies, which are very evident in the bill and which are so badly needed in this province. It is the longsightedness of this strategy that I hope will change the attitudes of people in our society, which will help to ensure that our future generations will have a healthy environment in which to live.

Bill 143 is not just about the setting of or looking for long-term sites, or indeed dealing with the gap. It is also about the 3Rs: reduction, reuse and recycling. More important, Bill 143 is about the changing of attitudes and values in our society. When you think about it, Ontario produces somewhere between 10 million and 14 million tons of solid waste each year. We consume more energy and generate more garbage per capita than any other nation on earth. Clearly, this must be changed.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the two members, if you want to have a discussion, to hold it outside. Thank you.

Mr Duignan: As a society, we have traditionally considered our used products as waste, when in fact they are valuable resources. This attitude is what has created the waste capacity crisis in most of the GTA. We must start changing people's attitude so they view these products not as waste or articles to be thrown away, but as waste resources that have value in being used again. Not only can we help prolong the depreciation of our natural resources here in Ontario, we can also begin to solve of the waste capacity crisis in this province.

We find ourselves in a situation where landfill sites are reaching capacity and no new sites have been found in some of the greater Toronto area. I want to speak in particular to my region, the region of Halton which, interestingly enough, has been excluded from the Interim Waste Authority's search for a new dump site in the greater Toronto area and which has also been excluded from the first three parts of this particular bill. Halton region started to look for a site way back in 1976 because it knew the existing site at that time had about a 10-year capacity left. This is now 1991. This dump is not prepared to be open until November, 1992. It took 16 years to go through the process, and the cost and the anguish the taxpayers of Halton have gone through should not be repeated in any other area of the GTA.

Also, when we look at some of the cost summaries the Halton region had to go through in setting up a new dump, the Environmental Protection Act studies prior to 1980 cost $1 million. The EA studies and the EPA studies after 1980 added another $3.1 million to that cost, and the hearings alone were $3 million. I understand that the joint board hearings themselves did not conclude—

Mrs Marland: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I think more people might be interested in hearing the member for Halton North, and I do not see a quorum present in the House at this time.

The Deputy Speaker: I will ask the table.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Journals: A quorum is present, Mr Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: A quorum is present.

Mr Duignan: It is interesting that the joint board hearings began on May 5, 1987, and concluded, after 194 days of evidence and arguments, on November 8, 1988. That was one long and costly process to the people of Halton. The estimated cost of the dump at the end of March 1991, to this point, is about $127 million. I understand that cost is to rise to about $150 million before the process ends.

Also, Halton region has a very aggressive 3Rs program. It is one of the leaders in the GTA. It reuses, recycles and reduces some 23% to 25% of the solid waste now produced in the region.

We do not want to see the costly process, as I indicated, repeating itself for the rest of the GTA. I believe Bill 143 will cut down on both the cost and the length of time it takes to bring a landfill site on stream. I believe the Minister of the Environment is to be commended for her heroic efforts to improve that process.

We know the situation has reached a crisis point in Ontario. I believe the time is now to implement strong and decisive measures to ensure that the wasteful habits of our past are changed so we can no longer continue to waste our valuable resources. I believe Bill 143 represents those strong and decisive measures. It also provides the legal framework to implement the waste management strategy our government has been developing over the last year. This strategy represents the decisive measures needed to turn the situation around.

In her first speech as the Minister of the Environment, the minister reiterated our government's commitment to obtaining the objective of 25% diversion of waste from disposal by 1992 and 50% by the year 2000. This is a clear commitment to make waste reduction the main priority in the government's waste management strategy.

This commitment was followed by a statement in the Legislature on November 21 of last year in which the minister announced the new direction of the province's environmental policy, which would be to change Ontario's consumer way of life into a conserver society. The minister also announced on February 21 of this year a waste reduction action plan to accelerate waste reduction in the province so that the committed waste diversion targets could be obtained. This plan is the cornerstone of a new conserver society.

This action plan has four important parts: (1) the implementation of a strong regulatory measure to reduce at the source the flow of valuable resources which now end up in landfill sites, (2) the development of the financial and technical systems needed to divert these materials from landfill sites to productive use and reuse, (3) the encouragement of healthy markets for materials recovered through source separation programs, and (4) the development of public education programs that will provide all the people in Ontario with the information they need. This is to be done through the provincial waste reduction office, whose mandate is to develop and implement new and effective policies, programs, laws and regulations to promote 3Rs activities throughout Ontario.

The minister has also made it clear that the responsibility for waste must be accepted by the communities generating the waste. We can no longer afford to find a hole or a mine somewhere in the province and ship it out of sight, out of mind, because this would be contrary to conserver values that are the foundation of our government's waste management strategies. If we produce the waste, we must be prepared to deal with it in our own backyards.

The facilities for disposal of waste should be located as close as possible to the source of waste generation. I know my friend and colleague the member for Markham has some good ideas when he talks about recovery of material from waste, and I would invite him to my riding. I issue him a challenge to come to my riding and look at one of the initiatives happening in my riding, a pilot project funded in part by the federal government's environmental partners fund and also by the Ministry of the Environment and the provincial Environmental Youth Corps, which pays for some of the staffing in this particular project. It is called Waste Wise, and it is a course beyond the blue box.

What happens here is that anything goes to this particular depot: used clothing, books, furniture, sporting goods, toys, games, carpeting, office supplies, housewares—everything that can be reused. They also take in broken small appliances such as lawnmowers, snowblowers, tools, sewing machines and toasters. A group of volunteers come in and fix those particular appliances. They also take all suitable textiles, scrap metal, paper, plastics, wood, etc. The proceeds from these resales go to educating the people in the community about how we can reuse and recycle. It is a pilot project, and I have some information if any members are interested in it. I think it is a worthwhile project that can be implemented in any community.

The member for Markham also spoke about incineration. As the member for Mississauga South is totally opposed to incineration, so am I, because I have studied a lot of information and have seen nothing to this point which would lead me to support incineration. That is not to say that some time down the road we may not have technology that would deal with some of the problems that come with incineration.

One method of handling municipal solid wastes, as indicated, and one which is inconsistent with the 3Rs, is incineration. This is because it relies on a steady, large quantity of mixed waste to keep incinerators running. The result is an inflexible system that provides little opportunity for waste reduction programs to be implemented.

On April 2, a ban on all future municipal solid waste incinerators in Ontario was announced by the minister, with a review of the ones currently in operation. Once an incinerator is up and running, it requires a large quantity of mixed waste. The waste that is the most efficient fuel for the incinerator is also the waste that is most easily separated for diversion into recycling programs. This includes paper, plastics, etc.

The environmental problems associated with the incineration of municipal solid waste are well documented. Indeed, there is quite an amount of information on them. The combustion of this waste during incineration releases a wide range of air pollutants, including dioxins, furans, carbon dioxide and heavy metals such as mercury, lead and cadmium. Moreover, between one quarter and one third, by weight, of the original material entering an incinerator remains as bottom ash and fly ash. This ash must be disposed of in landfill sites. The fly ash is considered a hazardous waste and must be landfilled in special sites.

I believe our government's historic ban on the incineration of municipal solid waste makes Ontario the first major jurisdiction in North America to do so. The minister has also announced strong measures to deal with the waste crisis in the greater Toronto area. The three-part strategy includes initiatives to accelerate 3R activities in the GTA, find three long-term landfill sites and deal with the shortfall of land capacity until the three long-term sites are open. This has involved extending the lives of the two existing landfill sites in the GTA.

In October the minister announced the first in a series of waste reduction initiatives that will lay the foundation for achieving the provincial waste reduction objectives. These draft regulations will be phased in starting in mid-1992 and will make waste reduction mandatory for Ontario businesses, industries, institutions and municipalities.

The proposed regulations would include having larger municipalities implement recycling and leaf and yard material composting programs, and certain industrial, commercial and institutional sectors recycling materials, conducting annual waste audits and preparing waste reduction plans.

I believe Bill 142 and Bill 143 will give the legislative framework for the minister to implement these regulations. The proposed amendments to the Environmental Protection Act in Bill 143 allow for the acceleration of the 3R program of our government. The measures undertaken by our government since coming into office clearly outline a logical waste management strategy. Bill 143 is just one part in the overall strategy dealing with waste management. It also provides the legislative framework for an Interim Waste Authority to carry on its research for long-term sites in the GTA. It ensures the health and wellbeing of the people within the GTA by ensuring that there will be a landfill capacity, and it promotes the 3R program to ensure that our waste diversion goals are met.

I believe Bill 143 is needed to manage and to solve the immediate waste crisis. It is also needed to change our wasteful ways, and it is needed so we can never find ourselves in a waste crisis like this again. We need Bill 143 to ensure that we leave our environment in a safe and sound state for future generations to come.

Mrs Marland: One thing the speaker has omitted to comment on is why it has taken his government one whole year to bring this legislation before us. His government has been in office in fact for more than one year, almost 14 months, but given the date this legislation was tabled, I simply will deal with the void of one whole year.

At the time the Minister of the Environment was the opposition critic for the Environment, I was the opposition critic for my party. She shared my concern about the risk of waiting any longer to find a solution for the garbage crisis. Here we are one year later and the garbage crisis is in such a crunch that this socialist government is not even willing to go to the public and go through the public process because there is no time. Suddenly it is an emergency.

We knew it was an emergency a year ago. The member for Halton North says we should be prepared to deal with it in our own backyards. I want to tell him that in the region of Peel we were dealing with it in our own backyard. We had a site selected. We were going to the environmental assessment hearing until the Liberal government put a halt on that particular site and that particular hearing. We were actually down the road to solving our own garbage crisis in Peel. But here we are a year later and we have a government that will not listen to the public and that ignores the Planning Act and the Municipal Act which are in place to protect the public.

Mr Sutherland: I want to compliment the member for Halton North on his comments and pay a little more attention to the Waste Wise system he mentioned that has been set up in Halton North. I know many people in my area and particularly those people associated with the environmental group Earthroots Coalition who have been down to tour the Waste Wise centre in the member's riding have been very impressed by the setup there.

Also, most recently when Earthroots sponsored an environmental conference in my riding, Dr Paul Connett, who I believe the member for Markham referred to in his speech, had also been up to visit Waste Wise and was very complimentary about what it is doing there. He was complimentary not only of the environmental impact but also the social impact in terms of how they have many retired people who come in. For example, people bring old bicycles or old radios in and these people who have some skills in electronics or in repair work come in and fix these bicycles or radios and make them reusable again.

I think all of us as members should try to find some time to visit the member's riding to see how this is set up and to see whether we can encourage our local groups and local organizations to take a leadership role as they have done in the member's riding and see if we cannot get that set up in our own ridings.

I compliment the member and the people in his riding who showed the initiative and leadership on the environmental issue and who have a true understanding of how we are really going to solve our environmental problems, and particularly garbage problems, through the 3Rs by not only recycling but reducing and, more important, reusing whatever resources we can.

Mr McClelland: I would like to make a couple of comments about the speech rendered by the member for Halton North. I think it is interesting that the member raises on one hand Bill 143 as a means by which the province can get moving towards the waste reduction targets that are not only wanted but indeed essential, as the member has said, and at the same time he brings forth an example from within his own riding where there has been tremendous progress made.

I simply suggest to him that in so doing he raises the very plain truth of the matter that Bill 143 is not a requirement to proceed with the waste management initiatives that ought to be undertaken in this province and that it is a very thin disguise in terms of its very agenda, which is to empower within the ministry the right to place sites and to provide orders without any recourse to the general public.

The member for Halton North stood in his place in this House and asked the Minister of the Environment if she would overrule an order that was rendered from a board that was seized of a matter with respect to the siting of a waste management operation within his own riding. The minister in response said it will lie with the people who have seen the material put before them, the duly constituted board, and their decision will be made on the information that was presented, having regard to due process.

This is the member who wanted to stand on behalf of his riding, where the people quite frankly were saying, "We don't want it in our area and will the minister overrule?" The minister said: "I will not. I will adhere to and follow the recommendations of the board." What does Bill 143 do? It says effectively there will not even be a board hearing and that any matters in terms of waste management will not come before a board for public scrutiny. That is one of the great ironies of the bill before us.

Mr O'Connor: I want to comment with regard to the member for Halton North. I think he raised a number of really important issues, one of them being the fact we have to change the way we live and become a conserver society.

The member for Markham mentioned earlier the fact that we talk about rights. Let's talk about the rights of children of the future. Recycling is not about to happen unless we have some changes to packaging. That is something we have to look at.

The member also mentioned the April 2 ban on incineration. He is right when we consider that incineration flies right in the face of the 3Rs. The fuel that people are using to fuel incineration is a resource that should be used and recycled right away. It is not something we should be trying to bury in a hole someplace. We should be trying to use it.

He mentioned the fact that Halton underwent a long process in developing a landfill site. This is something that needs to be recognized; they did that. This bill addresses the fact that Durham, Peel, Toronto and York have to deal with their situations. Halton has had to deal with its own. That is something the member talked about. Something like this does not happen overnight. There is quite a bit of work that goes into it in advance and in preparation.

In his comments the member remarked on a lot of initiatives the minister has taken to get this far. We are a way from it yet and hopefully we can proceed so we can find some landfill sites long before we get to a gap situation. We had better continue to work on it diligently. I think the member has spoken quite highly of the merits of this legislation and of the recycling programs within his community.

Mr Duignan: I appreciate the kind remarks of my colleagues and indeed of all members in the House. In particular I reference the member for Brampton North. The minister has made it very clear that the Halton region is not subject to a new landfill site, and if we look at Bill 143, it excludes the Halton region from that particular process. That is excluding the Acton dump, which is indeed another issue altogether.

However, Bill 143 deals in an area in particular; that is, the crisis proportions of waste management that exist in the greater Toronto area. I believe this bill represents a decisive step towards resolving that situation. Bill 143 also deals with the amendment to the Environmental Protection Act to facilitate intensified acceleration of the 3R activities in the greater Toronto area as well as the province as a whole, because we have to get serious about recycling, reusing and reducing. If we do not, we will continue to have this crisis year after year, decade after decade, until we get serious about what we are doing with our waste.

Mrs Caplan: I am pleased to rise and participate in the second reading debate on Bill 143. I point out that the time today is very short and on behalf of my constituents in the riding of Oriole I have quite a lot to say about this important piece of legislation.

The first thing I would like to say is that many of the goals, many of the objectives, much of the rhetoric we have heard from the Minister of the Environment, is shared by my constituents. Certainly we all want to protect the environment for future generations. Certainly we want to see the kind of regulations brought into place that will make sure that everyone in our society does what he or she can to become aware of what he can do.

My constituents in the riding of Oriole and the residents of North York were among the very first to participate in recycling depots. I remember when I was a member of North York council the activities of the committee on the environment, headed up very ably by Mrs Ruth Johnson for many years, was a model for other communities across this province. Recycling depots were established in the city of North York, and we were very excited about the awareness people in the city of North York had. We were one of the first to implement the blue box program.

It has been extremely successful. I noticed a news release just this week from Ontario Multi-Material Recycling Inc, the association for recycling, and it has pointed out how successful that blue box program has been right across the province. It is one of the things I am particularly proud of as a member of the former government, that the efforts of the member for St Catharines won worldwide recognition when the United Nations saw fit to award his efforts and our efforts as a government to implement the blue box program.

When we talk about the environment, when we talk about our commitment to a better future for our children for the kind of environmental protections, I do not think there is any member of this Legislature who would disagree with those goals, with those objectives and with those important principles of each of us doing what we can to protect the environment for future generations.

Having said that, I want to point out to all members of this House that Bill 143, An Act respecting the Management of Waste in the Greater Toronto Area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act, is not being carried by the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore as Minister of the Environment but is being carried by the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore as the minister responsible for the greater Toronto area. I believe the reason she is not carrying this bill as Minister of the Environment is that any Minister of the Environment in the province of Ontario, in fact any Minister of the Environment in this country, would be embarrassed to table a piece of legislation such as Bill 143, which disregards the rights of individuals to participate in a process which overrides every piece of environmental legislation that has been tabled in this province.

Some people have said this is the first piece of environmental legislation the new minister has tabled. In fact, the Minister of the Environment has not tabled a piece of legislation in this House. In more than a year in office, we have seen nothing from the Minister of the Environment. This is a piece of legislation tabled by the minister responsible for the greater Toronto area, which I believe is a deception. I believe it does not serve well the interests of the people of this province. It is precedent-setting and it is of grave concern.

When I speak about the grave concerns, on a number of occasions in this House I have talked about the cynicism in this province that people feel towards all politicians, particularly those who tell them one thing at election time and do something else after they have the opportunity to govern. They feel cynicism because politicians stand in their place in community meetings and in this Legislature and say one thing to them when they mean something else.

My constituents in the riding of Oriole are very concerned when I tell them that this piece of legislation does not do what the minister for the greater Toronto area and the Minister of the Environment, the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, says it is going to do.

This piece of legislation has four parts. When this House meets at another time I will have the opportunity to look at those parts in further detail, but for the beginning of this debate I would like to place on the record what one municipal leader, Lorna Jackson, the mayor of Vaughan, has to say about this piece of legislation. She writes to the Premier, whose bill this is, and says:

"Dear Premier: I am writing to express my concern with respect to your government's introduction of Bill 143, An Act respecting the Management of Waste in the Greater Toronto Area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act.

"This bill purports"—I underline the word "purports"—"to deal primarily with recycling and packaging proposals, which we support. A careful reading of the bill, however, indicates that its true purpose and intent are quite different. By this act, all existing legislation—the Environmental Assessment Act, the Environmental Protection Act, the Municipal Act, the Ontario Municipal Board Act, etc—and any contracts which may affect the life of the Keele Valley landfill, located in the city of Vaughan, and the Britannia landfill, located in the city of Mississauga, will be set aside to extend the life of these sites.

"The citizens of Ontario and the municipalities which represent them will lose the rights and protection provided by the legislation now in place. The hearings and reviews the citizens of the province in general and the citizens of Vaughan in particular have come to rely on are now to be withdrawn by this draconian measure.

"The amendments to the Environmental Protection Act which are part of this bill raise the spectre that other citizens in other communities will similarly be denied these rights and protections. In particular, subsection 136(4) allows for the making of regulations directing municipalities to establish or enlarge any waste disposal site in the province.

"You and your government have always supported public consultation and the need for people to be heard. Now your government is removing our rights, as established not only by the Environmental Assessment Act but by every other applicable piece of legislation. Your party was not elected to remove these rights, but rather to support and enhance them.

"We ask you to please reconsider this bill. The sections dealing with the expansion to Keele Valley, Britannia and potentially any other waste disposal site in Ontario can and should be removed and considered separately. To demonstrate your government's commitment to environmental rights in Ontario, we trust you will take this step."

The reason I put this on the record today is that there are many municipal councils, not only in the greater Toronto area but those right across this province, newly elected on November 12, who will want to have an opportunity to view this bill in detail.

We know this bill has four parts, and each part is significant enough that I would suggest it could stand on its own, but even if it did not stand on its own, each one being a separate piece of legislation, surely part IV, which is in fact amendments to the Environmental Protection Act, should be considered as a separate piece of legislation and parts I, II and III, which affect profoundly the rights of individuals in the greater Toronto area, should also be considered separately.

I look forward to further debate on this important piece of legislation. On behalf of my constituents in the riding of Oriole, it raises many issues of environmental protection, as well as the rights of citizens, and I hope the government will reconsider the draconian nature of this legislation over the period and the course of this second reading debate.

ENVIRONMENTAL LEGISLATION

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 33, the question that this House not adjourn is deemed to have been made. The member for Brampton North has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Minister of the Environment concerning Bill 143 and its implication re the environmental bill of rights. The member has up to five minutes to debate the matter and the minister also has five minutes to reply.

Mr McClelland: The issue that brings us here this evening for this mini-debate with respect to a question for the minister last week is very simple. By way of supplementary question, I put to the minister a question as follows: "Is it not true that, had her environmental bill of rights been in place, the bill would have had to be added to the list of bills that she is ready to wipe out in order to get Bill 143 in?" I was speaking specifically to section 17 of Bill 143, which enumerates a number of acts that will have no force and effect in light of Bill 143 for purposes of implementation of Bill 143.

We only have five minutes tonight. Mr Speaker, let me tell the people viewing at home ahead of time what the minister is probably going to say. She is probably going to talk about waste management. She is probably going to talk about the crisis that is upon us and the need to move forward. She is going to talk about waste reduction measures that Bill 143 will afford her the opportunity of pursuing. She is doubtless not going to respond to the question that was put to her a week ago, because it is very self-evident that had an environmental bill of rights been in place, she would have had to include an environmental bill of rights in section 17 of Bill 143.

Let me very briefly read into the record, Mr Speaker, the explanatory notes of the then Environment critic, now Minister of the Environment, which are consistent with the proposal and the framework within which she has sent out for study and consultation the proposed environmental bill of rights.

Her bill of rights says that, "The bill would also provide for public notice and review of certain approvals, permits or other environment-related orders before the approvals, permits or orders come into force." That is in the explanatory notes which the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, the then opposition critic for the Environment, put in her bill of rights in November 1987.

In December 1989, during debate in this House, the minister said: "The position of this party"—the New Democratic Party—"is very clear and it is different. First of all, our commitment is to the Environmental Assessment Act. If we were saying that we could exempt any sanitary landfill project from the Environmental Assessment Act, we would be moving backwards." What does Bill 143 do? It says, among other things, that we can expand existing sites without any due regard to an environmental assessment.

I am going to put the question again, and perhaps again and again until we get some kind of response. The question to the minister was, if she had her environmental bill of rights in place, would it not have had to be included in section 17 as being overridden by the provisions of Bill 143? The response given last week by the minister was wonderful. She went on to say that I would be pleased to know that preparation of the draft environmental bill of rights was well under way. I am pleased to hear that as, I am sure, are all members in this House and people across Ontario. That is not the nub of the issue.

The issue again, I say very plainly to the minister, is, is it not true that had her environmental bill of rights been in place, she would have had to include that as legislation that would have of necessity been overridden by Bill 143? Today in response, in the five minutes we have, the minister may acknowledge that this in fact is the case, and then she will go on to explain why it is necessary to do that.

Fundamentally, that begs the question: at what cost in terms of people's rights, in terms of the things the minister said were fundamentally important to her, things that she said her party was different in? She believed in things. She said it was the cornerstone of her environmental agenda, that on being elected, she would immediately bring forward an environmental bill of rights.

I am not here to talk about that necessarily, but it is interesting to note that one of the basic premises of an environmental bill of rights is an opportunity to make sure that public hearings are held before all approvals, permits or orders come into force. Furthermore, a bill, as proposed by the then opposition critic, the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, said that it would allow action to be brought to the Supreme Court by any person for the protection of the environment.

It is plain on the face of it that Bill 143 flies in the face of the philosophy then espoused by the now minister. I say to her again, it does not require a great deal of debate. In fact, we can wind this up in less than the five minutes allotted. Is it not true that had her environmental bill of rights been in place, of necessity it would have had to be included in section 17 of Bill 143, which would override the application of the said environmental bill of rights in order for the minister to implement her waste management program?

Hon Mrs Grier: In respect to the specific question posed by the member, that had my environmental bill of rights been in place would there have had to have been an override, let me say to the member that when an environmental bill of rights is in place and when it has been debated and when it has evolved from the normal process of legislation in this place and beyond this place, there will be a clear answer to this issue.

What is very fascinating in all of the debate around Bill 143 and in the question posed by the member in the House the other day about which he expressed dissatisfaction with my answer, I do not hear any member on the other side denying that there is a crisis or a need for action to deal with the waste management problems of the greater Toronto area, problems that have accumulated over these many years and problems for which we are now paying the price for the shortcomings and lack of planning by past governments.

What is also evident from the questions, from the debate and from the presentation we have just heard from the member is that the members opposite have not read the orders about which they profess to be so concerned. I am sure that if the member for Brampton North had read the order I have given to Metropolitan Toronto, he would know that I have ordered Metropolitan Toronto to take a number of actions that would be required were there to be an Environmental Protection Act hearing or an Environment Assessment Act hearing.

I have ordered them to do a site survey, to look at the leachate collection control and disposal system, to look at the contaminant plume from closed landfill sites located north of Teston Sideroad, to look at possible ground water contamination, gas generation, collection and control, storm water management, liner performance, final cover, buffer zones, side operations, monitoring and after-use plan, all of the environmental concerns that are allegedly on the agenda of the members opposite.

In addition, I have ordered Metropolitan Toronto to give the people of Vaughan, the people of York and the people of Metro an opportunity to participate in those studies, review those studies and play a role in the decision-making around what is an emergency order, an emergency order that is required to resolve the problems that have accumulated over many years.

That community involvement program, I told Metro Toronto, had to be developed and implemented by the municipality and should include establishment of a liaison committee, development of a communications plan and opportunities for people to do what the member thinks they ought to do, to participate in this discussion, to understand the technical reports that have to be done and to participate in that decision-making.

The member will know, as would his chorus in the front row, that should there be an application for a project under the Environmental Protection Act or under the Environmental Assessment Act, the culmination of what is essentially a fairly privately conducted process is a public hearing. What we are suggesting and what we have ordered Metro Toronto to undertake is a very public, very involved program of doing the technical studies that are always done by a proponent. I would also point out to the member and to the Greek chorus in the front row that there is nothing in this legislation that precludes any more extensive public hearing than that which I have outlined.

The issue is that we are facing a very serious crisis. In order to solve that crisis, the previous government had a solution. It would short-circuit the environmental assessment process and open up greenfield sites without an environmental assessment.

What this government has decided is that this is not a good way to protect the environment, but that if one has a shortfall and gap before the long-term sites are open, it is preferable to continue to use existing sites that have approval, existing sites for which we have required studies to be done to indicate that there is no impact on the environment.

That is a more responsible process than what had been suggested previously. That is a process that allows the people most directly concerned to be involved, and that is a responsible, decisive and proactive approach to a crisis and to an emergency that is with the people of the greater Toronto area.

The House adjourned at 1811.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Subscriptions

Subscription information may be obtained from: Sessional Subscription Service, Publications Ontario, Ministry of Government Services, 5th Floor, 880 Bay Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone (416) 326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1 (800) 668-9938.

Table des matières

La table des matières des séances rapportées dans ce numéro se trouve à l'arrière de ce fascicule, ainsi qu'une liste alphabétique de députés de l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario.

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi que celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday 26 November 1991

The House met at 1330.

Prayers.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

CHILD CARE

Ms Poole: This NDP government has promised to provide many things to child care workers and to those who use the child care system. I would like to take this opportunity to revisit those promises.

In January child care workers were promised a pay equity adjustment of $2,000. This was to be delivered in June. It did not arrive. Then it was to be delivered in August. It did not arrive. Then it was to be delivered in October and it still did not arrive. This is just another classic NDP ploy.

I have a message for the NDP government. They acknowledged the low wages of child care workers. They made a commitment, which they later called an achievement, but child care workers have not seen a dime. In addition, they promised the creation of 20,000 child care spaces and committed themselves to a quality child care system that was affordable, yet the subsidy waiting list of eligible families in Metro Toronto is 10,000 long.

Up to now, only 5,000 non-profit spaces have been delivered and, due to this government's policies, we have lost that many spaces in the private sector. Under this government, in the greater Toronto area so-called affordable child care is averaging $200 per week.

On Monday, when members opposite face the child care lobby groups that have been so disappointed by their government, they had better be prepared to tell them when they can see some action and this time give them a promise they will keep.

LABOUR LEGISLATION

Mr Stockwell: I have received many calls and letters from my constituents regarding the harmful effects that will result from this government's proposed labour law reform. All have expressed the same concerns that the reform package will cost both jobs and investment in Ontario.

This government is not listening. We know the Minister of Labour intends to travel around this province, hopefully to meet with both labour and business, yet when he drafted his 30-point plan, the business community was not consulted. That really does not surprise me. They are socialists, and we all know they take their direction from the big unions.

Let me just quote from a letter I received from a constituent of mine who does not belong to a union, nor does he own or operate a business. He is just a very concerned and frightened taxpayer. He writes:

"I am writing to express my concerns over the recent proposals from the NDP government to amend the Labour Relations Act. It would seem that the NDP are going out of their way to destroy what we have left of our free market economy"—hear, hear—"and the ability of individuals and companies to carry on business."

He goes on to say he believes the government should not be introducing any changes to the Labour Relations Act at a time when the economy is in recession or when there are so many other fundamental social, fiscal and constitutional problems facing us.

I urge the government to scrap this partisan, union-driven agenda and use its energy to create an economic environment that will create jobs and encourage investment.

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

Mr Mills: I want to draw the House's attention to the continuing problems the citizens of this nation are having in getting leadership from the federal government on the very critical constitutional consultations that are supposed to be happening now. I am addressing the House not to criticize the inability of the federal government to provide effective leadership but out of concern that we must not let this important discussion become mired in problems which will prevent our country from developing a constitutional base that will promote the healthy growth of our nation.

I am not stating this today out of any frustration that any problems exist in our process here in Ontario. In fact, I am pleased with the progress of the constitutional consultations and would like to extend thanks to our friends across the way for the co-operative role they are playing. What is important is that we in Ontario who have taken a leading role in the constitutional development process continue to provide the effective leadership that has been exhibited so far.

Our province needs a Constitution that works in order for us to build a sustainable economy, to know how to work with other governments and to provide the types of services our citizens need. I urge this House to continue to find ways to keep constructive dialogue happening so that the people we all represent can sincerely know that a workable Constitution will be crafted.

FIREFIGHTING

Mr Curling: Today many members of the Legislature have had the opportunity to meet with members of the Provincial Federation of Ontario Fire Fighters as they conduct their first Ontario Legislature conference here in Toronto. Some are now sitting in the members' gallery. I believe many members, myself included, will have an opportunity to meet with them at their reception to be held later this afternoon.

Before I discuss one of the important issues facing the firefighters all across Ontario, I would first like to pay tribute to the tremendous bravery and courage these firefighters show on a daily basis. Placing themselves as front-line emergency workers, our firefighters face tremendous danger as they seek to secure the public safety of ourselves, our children and our property. For their courage and dedication in this regard, I believe we must all salute them.

As members may already be aware, Ontario's fire services are primarily regulated by two pieces of legislation, the Fire Departments Act and the Fire Marshals Act. While these pieces of legislation have generally served both the public and the fire services well, we believe it is time to update this legislation to more adequately reflect the reality of firefighting in the 1990s.

In July 1990 the Liberal government formed a consultation committee comprising all affected stakeholders in order to develop a consensus on how the new fire services legislation should look. The committee is bogged down not by the lack of interest of all the stakeholders but by the lack of action on the part of the Solicitor General. It is our understanding that members of the committee have been told that the legislation update required by firefighters is not a priority. Obviously the Solicitor General would rather spend his time dealing with life-saving legislation like Sunday shopping.

We are calling upon the Solicitor General to move ahead—

The Speaker: The member's time has expired.

RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr Arnott: I have two positive and constructive suggestions for the Premier. Here are two things the government should be doing to promote rural industrial growth.

First, the Premier's Council on Economic Renewal has been meeting quarterly to chart a course for Ontario's future economic development. The Premier's Council recently established four task forces to deal with specific issues. I call upon the Premier to establish a fifth one to be entitled Rural Industrial Development. This would attract interest and government resources towards generating ideas to facilitate rural industrial growth and stimulate interest in our small communities that are wishing to attract industrial investment.

Second, the Premier should immediately assign the Minister of Financial Institutions to fast-track the establishment of a provincial funding corporation to underwrite and guarantee both industrial and community development bonds, following the model developed in Saskatchewan, which incidentally is light years ahead of Ontario in rural development issues.

Under this program a community group would form a bond corporation and make a proposal which would be received and reviewed by the provincial government. If the proposal were approved, the group could issue bonds which would be backed by the province. Interest on the bonds would be tax-exempt. This would develop a new source of investment capital with people investing in the future of their own communities.

Rural Ontario, and Wellington county in particular, has a great deal to offer industrial investors, including wide-open spaces away from the costly congestion of the city, a stable and loyal workforce, geographical access to a large market, available and affordable industrial land and communities with a high quality of life.

I call upon the Premier to implement these suggestions immediately.

WORLD COUNCIL FOR GLOBAL CO-OPERATION

Mr Hansen: I rise today to give my full support and endorsement to the Toronto appeal for the World Council for Global Co-operation. The World Council for Global Co-operation is an international peace organization headed by 11 Nobel prize winners from 10 different countries around the world. This organization serves a very important purpose. They are pleading for reallocation of funds currently being spent on the military and weapons to be used instead for humanitarian purposes.

According to the council, over $17 trillion have been spent over the past 30 years on arms while three quarters of the world's population lives in poverty. The council believes the reallocation would create a peace dividend that would benefit everyone. They believe global peace is best achieved by all countries working towards a common goal instead of trying to achieve national security on an individual basis.

I believe this lofty goal can be achieved through education and a change of attitudes. If three out of four people in Ontario lived in poverty we would be outraged, yet we choose not to look at the world around us. We must change our attitudes towards the less privileged countries by looking further than our own backyards.

I have handed out information packages on the Toronto appeal to all members of the House and I am urging everyone to support and endorse this worthy cause.

NORTHERN ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr Miclash: There is a growing sense being expressed by many people in the north that the problems of the north are not being addressed by this NDP government. During this time of economic hardship they are looking towards this government for leadership and a sense of direction, and instead they find apathy, confusion and a Premier who is more interested in escaping to Europe than in dealing with the hardships being faced by the people in the north. The people have grown more disillusioned, the business community increasingly more isolated and the government increasingly less effective.

The north must contend with problems that are unique to it not only because of geography but also because of history. In recent years the young people of the region have been leaving the area in large numbers for better opportunities elsewhere. Between 1981 and 1986 an estimated 20,000 to 25,000 young people left the north. This outward-bound migration bodes ill for the future of northern Ontario.

New ideas must be developed to further opportunities of growth and to change this negative trend. Jobs and economic stability will keep our youth in the north. This is where the government can take a leadership role and where it has failed up until now to do so.

There is a huge part to be played by the government in helping to diversify the economic base in the north to lessen its traditional dependence on its resource-based industries. This would not only create new opportunities for northerners but also provide them with a greater level of protection than presently exists from the uncertainties of the world resource markets. Leadership from this government is what is being sought by the people of the north, but unfortunately leadership is not what they are getting.

MOOSE VIDEOS

Mr McLean: My statement is for the Minister of Natural Resources and it concerns his promotion of unfair competition. In 1983 Andre Allen of Moose Hunter and Outfitters produced on film a two-hour video titled The Moose Hunter. In 1985 Mr Allen produced an updated version to teach hunters the proper techniques for moose calling, tracking, cleaning and dressing. Mr Allen, who has been involved in moose and wildlife conservation for more than 40 years, undertook at considerable expense and with considerable expertise to produce the video and wanted to promote it across Canada and in the United States.

Mr Allen indicates that in 1988 the ministry, without calling for tenders, entered into an agreement with an individual to produce an instructional video on moose hunting titled Moose Hunt: A Guide To Success. The ministry did not put this alternative video out to tender even though the ministry was aware of Mr Allen's video. The ministry has promoted the sale of the new video in pamphlets enclosed with moose validation tags without mentioning the availability of Mr Allen's video. The ministry's endorsement of one video over another promotes unfair competition. The minister has treated Mr Allen extremely shabbily. I would urge him to contact Mr Allen immediately to negotiate monetary restitution for loss of sales and loss of potential future sales.

BUSINESS PRACTICES

Mr Kormos: Members know I have a whole lot of real good, hard-working people down in Welland-Thorold, people like Gordon Stuart and his spouse, Edda Critelli. Those people are getting ripped off. Let me tell members now the scam is working. An outfit called JCS Ventures operating out of St Catharines is peddling Filter Queen vacuum cleaners door to door. They are charging people like Gordon and Edda $1,400 for a vacuum cleaner, using the classic, hyperbolic, high-puffed, high-powered, high-pressure sales techniques that are long, long traditions for these types of artists, and they are making them sign contracts with an interest rate of 26.7%.

Of course, these vacuum cleaners do not do what the sales pedlars say they are going to do, so what people like Gordon Stuart and Edda Critelli did was say, "We'll stop making the payments." They were not told the paper was sold to an outfit like Trans Canada Credit Corp. Trans Canada Credit repossesses this $1,400 vacuum cleaner and peddles it to one of its buddies for a mere $214. That is a scam. Then these people find themselves in high-priced lawsuits, under real pressure, having to defend themselves under the most unscrupulous and unconscionable circumstances.

People should not be buying products like Filter Queen as long as Filter Queen and its distributors peddle their garbage like this. I want to hear from people who are listening now who have been ripped off in similar ways, because we had better start doing something about it to protect those good, hard-working people.

VISITOR

The Speaker: I invite members to welcome to the chamber this afternoon Mr Alexander Bey of the German consulate, who is seated in the members' gallery east. Welcome.

ANNUAL REPORT, PROVINCIAL AUDITOR

The Speaker: I beg to inform the House that I have today laid upon the table the annual report of the Provincial Auditor, covering audits completed through August 31, 1991.

VISITOR

The Speaker: I would cordially invite the members to welcome, in the Speaker's gallery today, the Provincial Auditor for the province of Ontario, Mr Douglas Archer. As Mr Archer will be retiring at the end of this year, I believe this is a good opportunity to thank him on behalf of the Legislative Assembly for his many fine years of dedicated public service. Thank you.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

FOREST INDUSTRY ACTION GROUP

Hon Mr Wildman: As part of the government's commitment to economic renewal, a number of ministries, led by the Ministry of Natural Resources, agreed to form a forest industry action group to address economic challenges in Ontario's forest products industry. The action group's approach will be a co-operative one. It will bring together business, labour and government in an effort to find effective and lasting solutions to the industry's current problems.

I am pleased to announce the appointment of John Valley as assistant deputy minister, forest industry action group. Mr Valley, a native of Thunder Bay, has a broad range of experience in the forest products industry and associated natural resource, mining and energy matters. Since 1982 he has been a vice-president with Boise Cascade Canada Ltd and is currently the company's vice-president, administration and corporate affairs. Prior to joining Boise Cascade, Mr Valley spent six years in management positions with Algoma Steel in Sault Ste Marie.

Mr Valley will join us in mid-December. His first task will be to consult widely with senior business and labour leaders and come back to me with an action plan as soon as possible.

The forestry industrial sector is a key element in the social and economic fabric of this province. Ontario produces more than $12 billion worth of forest products annually and accounts for about 20% of Canada's exports of wood and wood products.

Our forest products industry generates larger net export earnings than any other part of our economy. It is responsible for more than 160,000 jobs and is the anchor for about 40 communities across the central, eastern and northern parts of the province.

But the forest products industry is a cyclical one and for some time now it has been experiencing a serious downturn. Markets are weak, demand for newsprint is down substantially and pulp prices have fallen by one third in the past year. Lumber prices also are low because of fewer North American housing starts and a soft market overseas.

There are many reasons for this downturn. They include the impact of the recession generally and the high Canadian dollar, trade disputes with the United States over softwood lumber and changing demand in the marketplace. The industry needs to develop a long-term industrial strategy to address these changing variables. It needs to find ways to create stability so that forest products companies and communities which depend on the forest products industry are less vulnerable to the cycles and downturns that have typified the industry in the past.

The government is committed to a strong, healthy, prosperous Ontario forest products industry. We are also committed to sustainable forestry. That involves a redirection of our forest program so that Ontario's forests are managed in a way that ensures the long-term health of forest ecosystems and recognizes a diverse range of forest values.

But sustainable forestry also means a sustainable forest products industry and sustainable forest communities. Sustainable forestry can contribute to Ontario's economic renewal by ensuring the sustainability of our forest resources, making the forest products industry more competitive in the future.

Mr Speaker, as a government we are not alone in our belief that effective and long-lasting solutions to the challenges created by the recession must come through a co-operative approach, with business, labour and government working together to achieve common goals.

Over the past few years, a number of independent reports examining the forest industry have recommended a co-operative approach by business, labour and government. More recently, I hosted a meeting in late October which brought together forest industry representatives, labour leaders and a number of my cabinet colleagues.

The consensus from these discussions was that the pressures of global competition are very serious and that a tripartite approach was essential for meeting the challenges facing the forest products industry. It was also clear that we must act now rather than later. Leadership at this point is essential.

The forest industry action group will have my full support and the full support of this government as it seeks ways to help Ontario's forest industry meet the challenge of the structural and cyclical pressures that it must deal with.

RESPONSES

FOREST INDUSTRY ACTION GROUP

Mr Ramsay: In opposition we have to consider day to day how we approach issues brought forward by the government, and at times it is necessary to be aggressive and tough when the government does things that we over here disagree with. But I must say to the minister that he has got this right, and I will tell him that. This forest industry action group is exactly what is needed. A new strategic look at the industry as a whole is the right thing to do. The timing is right on.

I must say that the choice of John Valley, a key person from the corporate side of forestry, is the right appointment to head this up. I happen to be a personal friend of Mr Valley. I know him and I have worked with him in his dealings as a northerner with issues involving his company. Many of my caucus, and I know others in the House here, have a high regard for John Valley. It is the right appointment. I know Mr Valley is a native northerner who has run operations in the north and now lives in the south who knows the forestry industry. He knows all the people in the industry and it is my sense that he has the respect of everybody in the industry. To bring somebody from the private sector in to captain this is the right idea and bodes well for the future of the forestry industry.

I know as a northerner, and my colleagues know, that forestry is one of the main resources, one of the main components of the northern economy. That and mining are what the northern economy have been centred on, and by and large will continue to be. As the minister knows, we have to look at forestry in new ways. We have to make sure we have sustainable forestry. We also have to look from an industry standpoint at how we can add value to that resource. That is something I see this group committed to and which my caucus will certainly support.

I have a couple of questions for the minister with regard to this group. He has announced, since being minister various other consultative groups in the forestry industry the one on sustainable forestry and, of course, we have the timber environmental assessment that has been ongoing for eons. How is the minister going to co-ordinate all these various activities? It is going to be very important for certainty in the forestry industry that we know there is one voice coming out of the industry for expressing the needs.

I must also reiterate the tremendous need for this right now. We have lists of layoffs in the forestry industry right across the north and they are continuing every day as we speak. In Iroquois Falls, 150 workers laid off; in Kenora, Boise Cascade being shut down for the month of December; with many industries in Thunder Bay, also temporary layoffs. It is very important that this committee get off the ground.

I would also like to say that this government has talked about partnership. Maybe this is an opportunity for the government to put its money where its mouth is because partnership is certainly needed, and this committee is certainly tasked with that challenge. I would say to my friend John, if he is listening, when he heads this group up and sits down with management people he should ask them and union people to doff their institutional hats, to sit down together and once and for all really talk about what is the best thing we can do for this industry.

I would say to management that maybe sometimes we have to take the word "boss" out of our vocabulary. I would say to the unions to put the word "partnership" in their vocabulary so we really start working together and make this industry viable for the north. If it is viable for the north, it is going to be good for all of Ontario. That is going to be very important—a sustainable forestry industry with value added that will provide jobs for northerners and people in southern Ontario and provide for a viable, sustainable economy for Ontario.

Mr McLean: I commend the minister for initiating this important measure to address issues of concern in the Ontario forestry industry. As the minister notes, the forestry industry is an important sector in this province's economy. More than 160,000 jobs in some 40 communities are dependent on this important industry.

I hope this newly formed industry, the action group, will address the major issues facing all the forestry industry. Ontario is perceived as a highly taxed jurisdiction, and the subsequent high cost of doing business in this province is a concern for potential new investors.

The Ministry of Labour is proposing radical new labour law reforms which will obviously have a major impact on a labour-intensive industry like forestry. Also, the 11.8% increase in hydro rates for 1992 will have a major effect on the forest industry and the pulp and paper mills. They require large supplies of affordable power. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, through the introduction of Bill 118, has failed to address this important requirement.

In summary, I trust the Minister of Natural Resources will provide a wide mandate for this action group so it can study all issues facing the Ontario forestry industry. I have one question for the minister and I would like some time to be able to get an answer. It has to do with this very important Orono nursery, and the Minister of Natural Resources is very well aware of that. It grew six million trees in the last three years. It employs 100 people, with wages amounting to approximately $850,000.

The Orono nursery is one of the most cost-efficient in the province. It is producing trees at $5 per 1,000, which is cheaper than all the other nurseries. The Orono nursery sold 2.8 million trees to private land owners for reforestation projects in southern Ontario last year. The Orono nursery is 1,300 acres in size; 500 acres are used for growing trees and the remaining land is wildlife habitat.

I would like to know if the minister will confirm that he is planning to close down this nursery, as well as nurseries in Dryden and Thessalon, which will result in the reduction of seedling production from 165 million to approximately 120 million. That is a very good issue, when he has this study group studying what has happened with forestry in Ontario and when he is planning on closing down three of these nurseries.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ANNUAL REPORT, PROVINCIAL AUDITOR

Mr Mahoney: I notice with some interest that the Treasurer is frantically reading the latest published Provincial Auditor's document. I suggest he wait until the movie comes out; it will be much more entertaining.

My question is to the Premier. In reference to this document, he told the people at some length during the last election campaign and has continued to do so during his year and a half in government that he indeed was going to be different. I looked through the document this morning in the lockup to see if I could find where he could live up to the claim that he indeed was going to be different.

I refer the Premier to page 77 of the report, where we deal with the auditor's examination of expenditures surrounding Surrey Place Centre, as he knows, a non-profit corporation funded primarily by the Ministry of Community and Social Services and servicing handicapped children, adults and their families in the greater Toronto area.

While the Treasurer has been looking for lost hundreds of billions of dollars to try to keep his deficit below the $10-billion mark, the auditor simply found $750,000 that could be saved without affecting the quality of care. I refer the Premier to $200,000 spent on housekeeping, compared to similar agencies that spend $100,000; $210,000 spent on accounting and human resource staff, which is double that of other similar agencies; $60,000 on three full-time staff to handle photocopying and mail delivery and $30,000 for someone to prepare snacks for the staff during their breaks.

The Speaker: Would the member place his question, please.

Mr Mahoney: With this kind of report on Surrey Place Centre under his government, will the Premier instruct the minister to investigate this obvious waste, eliminate it, make the savings and continue to provide good service to this client group?

Hon Mr Rae: First of all, let me thank the member for his question and wish him well in his travels over the next while, and let me express my appreciation to the auditor again for the public service he has rendered not only to the government but to the people of the province, and to answer with a very simple "yes" the question from the member for Mississauga West.

Mr Mahoney: We will look forward to the results of that from the minister, seeing how those moneys can be saved. I am sure the Treasurer is delighted that the Premier just found him $750,000 as a result of my question. I am happy to help him with his budgeting any time I can.

To go on to some of the other documentation, the report of the auditor with regard to the Liquor Control Board of Ontario—perhaps the Premier could take a look at that section; I do not have the page number handy, but he will find it in the index—we remember that the Premier appointed the chairman, Mr Brandt, who we all know was one of the finest leaders of the Progressive Conservative Party, at least one of the finest it has had lately. I will sort of leave it at that.

There are several questions regarding how the board is spending taxpayers' money. Can the Premier tell us if he is happy with the auditor's findings that taxpayers are funding LCBO retirement dinners, golf days and curling bonspiels? Further, he reports that they are running a private fleet of cars, much of which is for the private use of the staff at the board. Does the Premier condone these types of activities and, further, does he think Chairman Brandt's response to the auditor's charges is sufficient?

Hon Mr Rae: With respect to the comments on the liquor control board, first of all, let me say it is my understanding that the employee in question with respect to the ineligibility of expenses and other irregularities is no longer an employee of the liquor control board as a result of decisions taken by the board.

The Chairman of Management Board of Cabinet has written very clearly to all agencies of government expressing the government's concern about practices with respect to expenses and with respect to their salaries and other issues, so obviously any such report or comments by the auditor trouble me. We expect a satisfactory response from all boards and agencies of the government.

Mr Mahoney: I am delighted that it troubles the Premier, but I have not heard exactly what he intends to do with it. I refer him to the example of $4,000 in ineligible expenses that was discovered some years ago. The report indicates that $50 of that was required to be paid back. What I really think we want to know from the Premier is whether he is satisfied with this kind of response. It was not referred to the committee that is established by the LCBO to deal with these kinds of problems. It was simply dismissed in the response by the chairman of the LCBO, and it clearly is an indication that this kind of waste and insensitivity to spending taxpayers' money is alive and well in this government, I tell the Premier.

What I would like to know is, is he going to call this chairman in? Is he going to sit the chairman down and tell him that the taxpayers have no intention of funding golf days and bonspiels, have no intention of allowing for a private fleet of cars to be made available for the staff, have no intention of allowing for taxpayers' money to be wasted in such a fashion? The Premier said he was going to be different. We want some concrete examples of how he is going to do it.

Hon Mr Rae: Let me repeat what I said to the honourable member, because I do not think the answer sank in. What I said to the honourable member was that the services of the employee in question—which the member raised in his third supplementary—have been terminated by the liquor control board, which is determined to get restitution for what it feels is a fair amount with respect to any expenses incurred which are not appropriate. The board is taking responsibility for that.

Let me also say that it is Mr Brandt's clear responsibility as chairman of the board to pay very close attention to the comments made by the Provincial Auditor. It is equally our responsibility to ensure that this happens as well, and we will do so.

Mr Mahoney: As usual, the Premier answers one small part of the question. It is fine that they are looking for restitution, but clearly he did not address all the other issues of waste in that particular agency. Recognizing that I am not going to get a satisfactory answer, I would like to place another question.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr Mahoney: Yesterday in this House it was reported by my leader, and it was reported today in the paper, that the Premier announced in a scrum outside this House—where most government announcements are made these days, I might add—that he has personally fired the NDP vice-president, Jill Marzetti, from his Consultation Central Co-ordinating Committee, or whatever it is they call that. Will the Premier today confirm for this House that he will be removing all the political appointments? I believe there are some 18 executive assistants who are purely political staff appointed to this particular committee. Will he confirm that he will be removing all political appointments from this committee and tell us what guidelines he will put in place so that this odious practice does not recur?

Hon Mr Rae: Again, let me answer as succinctly as I can. The answer to the member's question is, in a word, no, because surely the member would realize a distinction between staff members who are employed by ministers and who are involved in the responsibility of the government of the day consulting with one another and discussing with one another the work of the government, who are in a different position, I would argue, from the provincial secretary of a political party. This is not a partisan exercise. This is intended to provide information to the public and to give the public a chance to respond to us.

Mr Mahoney: Pardon my reaction, Mr Speaker. To say it is not partisan when the government appoints executive assistants to ministers—surely the Premier is not suggesting that the personal executive assistant of a minister is not a political appointment. Obviously that person's job expires when the minister's expires. Clearly that person's job is tied to the role of the minister. Government members can shake their heads all they want, but that is very clear. It is equally very clear that these people are political staff.

In the chief government whip's memo it is stated that two meetings of the CCCP have already taken place.

Mr Bradley: Freudian slip.

Mr Mahoney: Is that not what it is called? Am I mistaken? That is what I thought it was called.

Having had two meetings would imply that the committee, including Jill Marzetti, has been together for some time. Recognizing that the Premier has been on the River Thames and he has been in Paris at the opera and he has been travelling around the world, what I would like to know is if the Premier can tell us when he became aware of the committee's existence. Was it indeed yesterday when my leader asked the question? When and how did he approve the committee's mandate and membership? If he cannot answer that, I would like to know if he has any idea what his staff in his office are doing running around setting up political patronage committees to try to promote the image of the government.

Hon Mr Rae: I say to the honourable member, first of all, I did not go to the opera. Second of all, I learned of it yesterday.

Mr Mahoney: I am trying to look for an answer. That kind of flippant response is really not what the people of this province expect.

Now he has to ask the Treasurer what I just said. Let me repeat it. That kind of flippant response is not what the people of this province expect. He should start acting like a Premier and answer the questions that are being put to him, in fairness.

We want to know how and when he put this committee together. The real tragedy in this whole CCCP committee mess is that once again he has taken the germ of a good idea that could have helped further consultation in the public process and he has absolutely butchered it with ideological zealots and partisan flunkies in an inept attempt at NDP political correctness. That is all he has done.

I want the Premier to know that what scares people is his insistence on politicizing everything he touches. I understand rumour has it that he is even abandoning the only real consultative committee he has at his disposal and he is hijacking funds from the Ontario Round Table on Environment and Economy to pay for the propaganda machine he is setting up with the CCCP committee. How does he justify abandoning the round table and how does he justify establishing a propaganda committee to simply promote all the nonsense his government is trying to perpetrate on the public of this province? He should answer the question this time.

Hon Mr Rae: The member's campaign is obviously taking off. But I want to say in very direct answer to his comment that the allegation he makes in his question with respect to the round table is completely, totally and utterly false. Wrong.

CROWN CORPORATION SPENDING

Mr Harris: My question is to the Premier. Since he was off on his tour of Europe, he may not be aware of the audit which was done on his deputy ministers. It revealed many of his deputies were wining and dining at taxpayers' expense. Now we find out that the rot goes much deeper.

The Provincial Auditor has revealed that senior officials in at least two of Ontario's crown corporations are also living the high life. At the Ontario Waste Management Corp, one senior official who lives in Metropolitan Toronto spent an average of $140 per night to stay at a downtown Toronto hotel. He did not do this just once; he billed taxpayers for a night of rest and relaxation 28 times. The corporation, in defence of this practice, thought it was okay. It condoned the practice for a senior official who lived in Toronto and rented a hotel 28 times.

Does the Premier condone this expenditure? If he does not, what does he intend to do about it?

Hon Mr Rae: No, I do not condone this behaviour. I do not think anybody does, particularly at this point in our history when we all realize just what the province is going through. No, I absolutely do not condone it. What we intend to do is follow the auditor's advice with respect to making it crystal clear, as clear as we possibly can, throughout the public service what the expectations of everyone in this House and the public are with respect to the conduct of public servants.

Mr Harris: I appreciate the answer, except that I have been bringing these issues up for the past year and every time I get the answer: "No, we don't condone that. Watch, we are going to stamp that out. You'll never see this again." Yet week after week and month after month we get more examples.

No wonder the Ontario Waste Management Corp is called that. They are certainly wasting taxpayers' dollars. Two senior officials spent $15,000 on entertaining. They took their own employees out for lunch 381 times. There were no outsiders. They were not even getting some free advice for buying these lunches. They took their own employees out for lunch 381 times, for $15,000. There are only 365 days in the year, and these employees, I suggest to the Premier, are the higher-paid employees. They should be able to afford their own lunch. According to the auditor, they are paid salaries significantly higher than comparable government positions.

Crown corporations set their own salaries. I know there is some direction but obviously, from the auditor's report, the direction is not enough. Will the Premier immediately agree to implement strict guidelines for salary levels in Ontario's crown corporations? More important, will he see that these guidelines are followed?

Hon Mr Rae: The member makes a good point. The crown corporation in question was established, at arm's length from the government, by a government of which I believe he was a member. The period in question is one which I think can fairly be said to be shared by all three governments with respect to the problems of overspending which have been clearly documented by the Provincial Auditor. The minister has met with the chairman of the corporation to express the very strong concerns of the government and our profound disagreement with these practices.

With respect to the second point, I can only say to the member that obviously it is something we will consider. I see some practical and legal difficulties with what he is proposing, but his intention and goal with respect to restraint in these corporations are ones we share, and they have been conveyed directly to these corporations by the Chairman of Management Board on behalf of the government.

Mr Harris: The Premier is telling me there is great difficulty. He had no difficulty in politicizing Ontario Hydro, bringing his own NDP person in, setting him up and doubling his salary. He had no difficulty in doing that, so he should not tell me he has difficulty. These are Ontario crown corporations that exist at his leisure.

Hon Mr Rae: That is at my "pleasure."

Mr Harris: Maybe the Premier enjoys it. It is a pleasure for him to see all the waste, but it is not much pleasure for the taxpayers.

The auditor really has not told us anything new. Time and time again, I have brought these issues to the fore. I get the answer: "Oh yes, we agree with you. Thanks for bringing it up. We're going to make sure it isn't going to happen again." Obviously, that type of response to my repeated questions in question period is not enough, because all we get is the rhetoric here in the Legislature. We see example after example.

I am not blaming the Premier for past expenditures, for the waste that took place when my predecessors were in government or when the Liberals—that is when spending really took off—were in government.

The Speaker: Will the member place his supplementary, please?

Mr Harris: I am blaming the Premier, though, for still moving 180 degrees in the wrong direction and not doing anything about it. We need direction from the top. What assurance can the Premier give us, other than the rhetoric I get day after day, that he is going to put measures into place to control his own civil service and the crown corporations and that he is not going to tolerate, subject obviously to some penalty, this type of extravagant expenditure?

Hon Mr Rae: I think the member has given a very good expression of my own thoughts on this issue.

Mr Harris: Next week we will be back again, I am quite certain, because I do not sense from the Premier a serious commitment to solving these problems.

HAZARDOUS WASTE

Mr Harris: My second question is for the Minister of the Environment. The minister has no doubt seen the auditor's report on waste management in her ministry. Would the minister tell us what health hazard is posed by the fact that 17% of hazardous and liquid industrial waste generated in this province appears to be flowing into our sewers and then into our lakes and streams?

Hon Mrs Grier: I certainly share the member's concern about the flowing of any waste into our sewers and into our river systems. That is why I am very proud our government has enhanced and increased the strength of the municipal-industrial strategy for abatement program to make sure we get down to zero discharge of persistent toxic contaminants into the waterways of this province and begin to do something about a problem that has existed for a very long time.

Mr Harris: The minister has done absolutely nothing since she took office to move us forward in any way. We have had rhetoric. She has talked about doing it but she has done nothing. According to the auditor's report released today, the Ministry of the Environment appears to be content to breed a whole generation in Toronto and across Ontario of mutant ninja turtles. That is the only thing I can conclude.

The auditor reports that the Ministry of the Environment failed to ensure that hazardous and liquid industrial waste was actually being shipped and received appropriately. If the minister does not know what is happening to this waste, what assurance can she give this House that it is not in our sewers and it is not a serious health risk for the people of this province?

Hon Mrs Grier: In his first question, the member referred to direct discharges into the waterways. Now he is focusing on the auditor's report. I think that is entirely appropriate. We have this information and I share his concern that the manifest system is obviously showing a number of discrepancies and is not following hazardous waste as it was designed to do. The only reason I have been given for that happening is to some extent the increased volume of generation of hazardous waste. The system in the central region alone was established with 3,000 generators in 1986 and it now has 12,000. What we are doing is reallocating staff and appointing people to make sure the discrepancies and errors the auditor has pinpointed stop happening.

Mr Harris: It is a matter of priorities. The auditor today indicated that government, trying to be all things to all people, is not doing the very basics—protection of health and welfare, for example—it should be doing. The government has 10,000 more civil servants than when we left office, 9,000 thanks to the Liberals and another 1,000 thanks to the incumbents. They hiked the cost of the civil service 16% in one year; that was the year-over-year cost. Yet when we come down to these issues they do not seem to know where the waste is going. In fact, they do not know where it is coming from, either. They have done nothing about it.

The Minister of the Environment is responsible for waste management in this province yet she has no control over what is happening. Obviously the ministry has failed, and to date the minister has failed, to improve this situation. I want to know what the minister is going to do and what kind of priority she is going to give with all the new money she is spending to make sure this mess is cleaned up.

Hon Mrs Grier: Cleaning up the messes of the past is a very high priority for my ministry, but let me respond with respect to the auditor's statements that there were discrepancies in the manifest system of hazardous waste, something that concerns me very much. The auditor says there were 3,000 discrepancies occurring each month. I am delighted to be able to tell the House that measures were initiated as soon as we became aware of that, and the figure now is 600 a month.

I regard that as too many and I have assigned somebody specifically to sort out how many of those discrepancies are clerical errors, as some of them are, and which, as the member has indicated, pose threats to the environment or the health of the people of Ontario. Those will be resolved, because that is my responsibility and that is what I intend to do.

CONSULTATION COMMITTEE

Mr Scott: Some of my constituents who watch this performance on television are beginning to complain that it is a farce and that the questions are not answered by ministers of the crown. I am going to use my period in question period to try a little experiment and ask a question of the Minister without Portfolio, the government whip, about this committee, the existence of which was revealed yesterday.

Mr Bradley: Political committee.

Mr Scott: The political committee. I am going to ask three simple questions which I want viewers to listen to carefully and to see whether we get an answer to them or whether we get a lot of baffle. The minister should pay attention, please.

The first question is, who suggested this committee to her in the first place? The second question is, who appointed her to the committee to be its chairman? The third question is, what, including advertising, was in round figures the estimated budget the committee was going to work with? Three simple questions, and I would like answers.

Hon Mr Rae: Mr Speaker—

The Speaker: The question was directed to the chief government whip.

Hon Mrs Coppen: Mr Speaker, I refer to the Premier.

Hon Mr Rae: I think it is important that the member should understand that the government has all kinds of internal consultative committees. It is not an unusual thing at all. It is part of the overall work of the government and it is entirely appropriate that the Minister without Portfolio should be involved in this way, as the chief whip and Minister without Portfolio in the government.

Mr Scott: I guess my constituents and the viewers will have to make their own judgement about whether the minister was able to answer this question, but I think what happened is quite revealing. I frankly believe this cockamammy scheme—well-intentioned, no doubt—was devised in the absence of the Premier in Europe. But if there was ever an example of who was responsible for it, it was given to us by the chief whip of the NDP government, who referred all questions connected to it, including its budget, to the Premier. This is his plan to broaden the political base of his party, as the memorandum says, and I would like to know how many millions in advertising budget was allocated to this cockamammy scheme.

Hon Mr Rae: No money has been allocated yet with respect to this overall communications activity of the government. It is an overall communications responsibility. As I said in the House yesterday and as I said outside, and I will say it again, any communication by this government with respect to the consultation process will come out of existing funds for communication and in fact represents a saving to the taxpayers of the province.

Interjection.

The Speaker: Order. Does the member for St George-St David have a point of order?

Mr Scott: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I just want to remind my constituents that we are batting zero for three of the questions.

The Speaker: Would the member take his seat so that the member for S-D-G & East Grenville can ask his question.

1430

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr Villeneuve: Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture and Food told the Ontario Federation of Agriculture's annual meeting that the NDP government of Ontario had no additional financial assistance for the federation at this time, and certainly left it with the impression that very little money would be forthcoming in addition to what it already has in agriculture. The federal government is giving Ontario farmers more than $118 million in additional dollars and it will be available over the course of the winter. That is about three times as much as the $35.5 million that the government was able to find.

Can the minister explain why, after this emergency aid announcement, Ontario agriculture is receiving a smaller percentage of the budget than it did in 1980-81, which was a very difficult time, or through the drought of the mid-1980s?

Hon Mr Buchanan: First, the member is correct that the message delivered to the OFA banquet by the Treasurer and myself yesterday was that there will probably be no more emergency aid. That is correct. Times are difficult fiscally. At the same time, we did find the $35.5 million in emergency aid to farmers. I would say to the member that I believe, and farmers in this province believe, that the reason we got federal money is that the province took the lead in providing that $35 million up front. It was on that basis that the farmers were able to go to Ottawa and leverage additional money. I think that by the Ontario government taking the lead as it did, we were able to get that extra $118 million for the farmers of Ontario.

Second, we got about $119 million in new money for agriculture in this year's budget spent for farmers in Ontario. That is significant and as much as the federal government put in.

Mr Villeneuve: Ontario farmers not only have the major financing problems facing them imminently because of very low prices; they also have very serious concerns over the structure of the farm tax rebate. The previous government changed that around quite considerably and then brought it back. Right now farmers are wondering what the minister is going to do with the farm tax rebate.

Indeed, taxes are going up continuously because this government is not funding what it mandates municipalities to do. Farmers should not even be paying that tax on farm land and farm buildings. The minister has structured it—makes him look good—that he reimburses $154 million, which he is rebating. It should never be paid in the first place. What does the minister intend to do with the farm tax rebate structure?

Hon Mr Buchanan: There are several things. One of the early things we did as a government was to set up the Fair Tax Commission, which is certainly going to look at property tax on farm land and the fact that education tax, which is being paid by farmers and then rebated through the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, will have to be examined as to its fairness as a way of collecting taxes to fund education.

In terms of the earlier part of his question, that program is being reviewed by Treasury board. We are looking at a number of programs in this government to see if there is some way of achieving some savings. The member's party is often talking about increased spending and what we should be cutting back. We are now examining a variety of programs across the government to see if savings could be achieved. That program happens to be one of the programs that is under review. We are not intending to change it in any major way, but it is under review to see if we can achieve some savings by looking at that program.

DETROIT INCINERATOR

Mr Lessard: My question is for the Minister of the Environment. I know members of this House will be aware that the province of Ontario has been involved in litigation in the state of Michigan as a result of the Detroit incinerator. I was surprised to read this week that the Essex-Windsor waste management committee has released a number of options to deal with waste management at the end of 1992 when the Maidstone landfill is scheduled to close.

I was surprised as well to read that on that list of options was the option of transporting or exporting garbage to the incinerator in Detroit. I would ask what steps the minister is prepared to take to ensure that this option is not explored any further to export Windsor's garbage to the state of Michigan for incineration.

Hon Mrs Grier: I appreciate the opportunity to comment on this issue because I know, and the member has shared with me on a number of occasions, his concerns about the problems faced by the Essex-Windsor waste management committee in dealing with their waste management problems, problems with which they are not alone, but about which our ministry, through the act before this House at present dealing with waste reduction, certainly has a comprehensive policy to attempt to resolve.

I was surprised, as was the member, to find that the series of options released by the Essex-Windsor waste management committee on the ways of solving their problems included the option of exporting to the Detroit incinerator, because I certainly supported my predecessor, now the member for St Catharines, and have continued the suit by the province of Ontario in order to try to get the Detroit incinerator either shut down or operating with safe devices.

I am glad to see that a public meeting is being called for Windsor for December 12 to discuss the options that have been laid out. I am sure the good citizens of Windsor who have expressed on so many occasions their concern about the Detroit incinerator will quickly ensure that this is not an option that is pursued. I would support them in that endeavour.

HOSPITAL BEDS

Mrs Sullivan: It is interesting that they are still allowing shipping of waste for incineration in Niagara, but my question is of the Minister of Health.

The Ontario Hospital Association has estimated that some 3,292 hospital beds will be closed in Ontario by March 1992. The Provincial Auditor noted in his report that in 15 hospitals selected for his study, some 770 beds were closed for the 1990 fiscal year and that there was no evidence that the branch team had monitored bed closings in at least 12 of those hospitals.

The ministry policy has been that there should be no change in the number of beds in protected programs—mental health, emergency, critical care, specialized tertiary programs—without the prior approval of the ministry. Would the minister confirm to us today that no bed closures in Ontario are being made without the approval of the ministry and monitoring of all the community needs by the ministry?

Hon Ms Lankin: With respect to the comment in the Provincial Auditor's report that 770-odd beds have been closed since 1985 not in accordance with the policy that the ministry should give approval, I want to point out to the members that in 1989 the previous government changed the policy with respect to that. It indicated that hospitals would not have deficits funded and moved to the policy that the member speaks of with respect to protection of certain programs.

The information I have received at the ministry with respect to approval of any beds being closed that are within any of those protected programs is that this is not happening and that it is being reviewed as those suggestions are made. However, I have had meetings with professional associations which have suggested that this may not be the case. I have asked for some work to be done to look into that to ensure that we are getting adequate information and that monitoring is being done.

The member will also know that I have sent a direction both to the hospital association and its members and to the district health councils to hold meetings in districts and regions to look at this very issue.

Mrs Sullivan: People across Ontario are of course very concerned that hospital beds are being closed because of financial pressures placed upon hospitals by the government rather than because of health care needs in their communities. I want the minister to reconfirm to the House that from now on each one of the 3,292 beds that will be closed by the end of this fiscal year will have her blessing and her approval as Minister of Health.

Hon Ms Lankin: I am not going to change policy on the spot in the House. The policy established as of 1989—as the member well knows, because she was in the government that established the policy—is that deficits will not be funded. We continue to put in place and support that policy. What I have done is ask that within each community the district health councils sit down with the members from the hospitals in their communities to look at the effect of whatever budget planning those hospitals are doing this fiscal year and next fiscal year on the delivery of needed services to their community and that these decisions be based on health outcomes and community needs. I hope that will meet some of the concerns the member is raising.

LABOUR LEGISLATION

Mrs Witmer: My question is for the Minister of Labour. There have been two separate studies on the economic impact of the proposed changes to the Labour Relations Act. One was done by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the other by the firm of Ernst and Young for the All Business Coalition. Both these studies concluded that approximately 500,000 jobs could be lost. The minister has repeatedly denied this and has argued that there will be no job losses as a result of his proposals. Yet he has failed to produce an economic impact study to support his position.

Given that jobs continue to disappear each day in this province, and given that 500,000 jobs are predicted to disappear if the minister goes ahead with the changes to the Labour Relations Act, will the minister tell us today whether this government has conducted an economic impact study on the labour law changes? If not, can he tell us why he refuses to do so when so many potential jobs are threatened?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I think the member is aware that there have been no real studies done to date at all. The studies she is referring to from business are really surveys of their members and not thorough studies of the issues before us.

Mrs Witmer: They have done studies. They have done economic studies. I believe that is extremely important because every day I continue to hear from people throughout this province who indicate to me that they are going to be forced to eliminate jobs as a result of the proposed changes.

I would like to read from two letters. The first is from the owner of Cottingham Tire and Auto Service in Tilbury. His letter was sent to the Premier. "I know in my own place of business that if these laws came into effect that I would be forced to lay off at least two of my 12 employees."

I also know that the Premier recently received a letter from the president of the Superior Tire Group which states that, as a result of the minister's action: "Rather than take expansionary opportunities or even remain stable, we have decided to severely downrisk our overall investments. Our workforce will be reduced by 25% coupled with a reduction of outlets, two companies and various sales areas."

The Speaker: Would the member place her supplementary, please.

Mrs Witmer: These are not isolated incidents of job losses. These people are telling us that jobs will be lost if the minister proceeds. In the absence of an economic impact study and in the face of so much evidence to the contrary, how can the minister be so certain that his proposals will not create further economic hardship for the men, women and children in this province and how can he proceed at this time when the jobs of so many workers are so clearly at risk?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: Surely the member can understand that when we have a discussion paper out there which we have not even gone through the process with yet and when we do not have legislation, it is pretty hard to do a study on what the results are going to be of a discussion paper that has not led to the legislation as yet.

COURT SYSTEM

Mr Johnson: My question is to the Attorney General. A number of lawyers in my constituency have contacted me with respect to the advisory committee which the minister established in July of this year to make recommendations about screening of criminal charges, disclosure of the crown's case to the defence prior to criminal trial, and resolution or plea discussion. No one disputes that these matters are vital to the administration of criminal justice in Ontario, but it is precisely because these issues are so important that some of the lawyers in my community resent the fact that only the interests of crown lawyers are being represented on this committee.

Does the minister not agree that the criminal justice system is of interest to our entire community? Should we therefore not extend the representation of the committee to include some of these interested parties? Surely the minister will recognize that an advisory committee constituted like this one cannot help but draw one-sided conclusions.

Hon Mr Hampton: I thank the member for the question. My sense is that perhaps his question is related to some articles that recently appeared in the Law Times about the committee which is known as the Martin committee. I want to categorically disagree with the statements made in the Law Times. The committee, which is chaired by former Justice Martin, is a committee which has crown attorney representation on it. It also has defence counsel representation on it. It also has representatives of police associations and police forces on it. It has representatives of the federal Minister of Justice on it.

It is, in fact, a well-balanced committee which is searching for an answer to a problem that has been longstanding and controversial for anyone involved in the criminal justice system.

ASSISTED HOUSING

Ms Poole: My question is to the Minister of Housing on the Provincial Auditor's report. This year over $500 million of the $900 million of the ministry's budget will go to the building and subsidizing of non-profit and co-op housing—a healthy chunk, members will admit.

The Minister of Housing will be aware that the auditor's report was critical of the fact that those most in need were not necessarily the ones who received placement in non-profit housing. In a time of recession, when the demands for subsidized housing are increasing and when our limited government resources must be targeted to those most in need, the government is not enforcing funding agreements to ensure that tenants in deep need referred from local housing authorities are actually placed.

I would like to ask the minister when she will ensure that people across this province who are referred to non-profit and co-op housing by the local housing authorities actually receive the housing in those units that the province's taxpayers have paid for.

Hon Ms Gigantes: I believe the member is confusing two questions which the auditor addressed in his report, which I unfortunately have not had an opportunity to read yet. I look forward to reading it. But as I understand it, he addressed the question of the sharing of lists for placement by co-ops and non-profit groups and also the question of whether the core need was being addressed by non-profit and co-op housing developments in Ontario.

As for the latter, about 72% of those who are finding housing in co-ops and non-profit developments in Ontario currently are rent-geared-to-income tenants, which means those developments are meeting a very large need among people who need assisted housing. That is the goal and it is largely being met. We have to decide what levels we want to have in terms of rent-geared-to-income housing within co-ops and non-profits. As the honourable member knows, this question is being addressed in the housing policy framework review.

Ms Poole: I really find it quite ironic that the minister tells me I am confused and then goes on to admit she has not even read the Provincial Auditor's report. I happen to have read it, so I know what is in it. I will quote for her two sections:

"In some cases, referrals by LHAs to non-profits and co-operative housing agencies are not done according to OHC's point system. That is, the most needy are not necessarily referred.

"Conflicts have occurred from non-profits using different selection criteria than the LHAs to place tenants. Non-profit housing corporations prefer to use their own selection criteria and select tenants from their own waiting list."

The minister has just said she is consulting with the housing policy framework report. It seems to me again ironic that she said she is consulting on it but she has already handed them the money. Would she please explain to me how the government can ensure that the people most in need of this housing will be given appropriate priority when she is negotiating the issue after she has already given them the funding?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The member knows full well the local housing authorities have a placement system which is entirely separate and different from those that have been used by co-ops and non-profits in this province for years. That was the policy of the previous government. We have indeed asked people in Ontario to give us their opinions on that. I do not know what the member is suggesting. Is she suggesting that in every co-op in this province all placements should be from the local housing authority lists? If she is, that represents a huge change in policy, and I would like her to elaborate on how she thinks that would fit in with neighbourhoods in this province.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

Mr Jordan: My question is for the Minister of Energy. About 10 days ago the minister informed me that if the people in the riding of Lanark-Renfrew did not want to participate in the $7-million lightbulb sale they did not have to; he had another 129 ridings that did. I want to inform the minister that half the people in Lanark-Renfrew have received these bulbs and they wish to return them. The ones who have not received them would like to know how they can be excused from paying their share of the $7 million.

Hon Mr Ferguson: I will try to share with the House what I think is perhaps a much better and brighter idea than has been traditionally used in the past. I am disappointed that half the residents of the member's riding do not want the lightbulbs and the other half do not want to participate in the program. Quite frankly, the program has been well received across Ontario. People are extremely pleased with the program. In fact, on a daily basis my office is getting calls asking for more bulbs. They are asking for six-packs at this point. It all goes to a good cause.

Mr Jordan: The people in Lanark-Renfrew are still going by the minister's statement that they do not have to participate, and naturally will not have to pay their share of the $7 million. My supplementary is, why, with the unemployment situation in Ontario, were these bulbs manufactured in Quebec?

Hon Mr Ferguson: I fail to understand why the member opposite seems to be so dimwitted about this program. I cannot understand it. The reason the bulbs were manufactured in Quebec is because there has been a real failure of past governments to recognize that this is an emerging technology, this is the cutting edge of the future, and this government is committed to ensure that jobs—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Will the member take his seat.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Minister, would you succinctly complete your response, please.

Hon Mr Ferguson: In conclusion, I would like to inform the member that Quebec is part of Canada. We buy goods from that province and it buys goods from this province.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Dadamo: I have a question for the Minister of Health. In light of the financial constraints on the province today, can she assure the citizens of Windsor that the long-term care facility for the city of Windsor which was promised by the past two governments over the many years is on track? The constituents of Windsor-Sandwich are eager to hear her response to this question.

Hon Ms Lankin: I think I have had this question put to me more often than any other. Let me yet again assure the folks in Windsor and all the members for the Windsor area that planning is on track, that the support for the long-term care facility continues and that it will be developed.

I think perhaps some of the concern that has been raised of late is as a result of the report that has gone out to consultation from the district health council and the hospitals in that community that has talked about the number of acute care beds that need to be taken out of the system and the possible amalgamation of hospitals. In fact, in my meeting with that group, the representatives of the hospital—

Interjection.

The Speaker: The member for Burlington South, please come to order.

Hon Ms Lankin: In my conversation with the folks from the district health council and the hospitals in the Windsor area, they made it quite clear that the review they had done was premised on the basis that the long-term care redevelopment would continue, and that is in fact our understanding and agreement at this time.

Mr Dadamo: What impact, if any, will the Comprehensive Health System Planning Commission have on the delivery of health care in southwestern Ontario?

Hon Ms Lankin: Mr Speaker, I am sorry, I could not hear all of the question because of some of the noise from across the floor, but I think the member asked for the connection between this and the comprehensive task force planning that had gone on. With respect to that report, which is often referred to as the Orser commission, as many members will know, an interim report has been released and it has gone out for consultation across the community, and we hope we will be receiving the final report in the near future. There is a blueprint for hospital expenditures that will be contained within that for the whole southwestern Ontario region, but how each community relates to that and the way in which those recommendations are embraced or moved on I think will remain to be seen. But I do not expect at all that it will disrupt our plans for the long-term care facility, which I think is the main question.

Mr Miclash: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: On November 5, 1991, I directed a similar question to the Minister of Health with regard to a very important issue on long-term care in the town of Dryden and the establishment of a home there. The minister assured me she would take another look at it and get back to me with an answer. At this time, three weeks later, I have still not heard from the Minister of Health on a similar issue, a very important issue to the people of Dryden, my constituents in the riding of Kenora.

The Speaker: The member for Kenora does not have a point of privilege, although it is obviously a policy question which he may wish to place during question period.

MOTIONS

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS

Mr Cooke moved that standing order 85 respecting notice of committee hearings be suspended for the considerations of Bills Pr53, Pr81, Pr85, Pr86 and Pr99 by the standing committee on regulations and private bills on Wednesday, November 27, 1991.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

LONG-TERM CARE

Mrs MacKinnon: I wish to present a petition representing members from the riding of Lambton county dealing with the Ontario Nursing Home Association and long-term care.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

DISTRICTS OF NIPISSING AND PARRY SOUND ACT, 1991 LOI DE 1991 SUR LES DISTRICTS DE NIPISSING ET DE PARRY SOUND

Mr Eves moved first reading of Bill 159, An Act respecting the Amalgamation of Municipalities in the Districts of Nipissing and Parry Sound / Projet de loi 159, Loi concernant la fusion des municipalités situées dans les districts de Nipissing et de Parry Sound.

Motion agreed to.

Mr Eves: The purpose of this bill is to prevent the amalgamation of municipalities in the districts of Nipissing and Parry Sound if the municipalities themselves do not consent, where they have organized government or a local services board or, failing that, by the majority of residents in an unorganized municipality. Members may recall that I introduced this bill a couple of weeks ago. It has now been translated and cleaned up by legislative counsel, I might add.

Mr Scott: May I request unanimous consent of the House to revert to motions?

Agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Mr Scott: Under the rules, I have to give notice of a motion which will be brought tomorrow to ask the House unanimously to reappoint the honourable member for Lincoln as Chairman of the standing committee on finance and economic affairs.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

WORKERS' COMPENSATION AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES ACCIDENTS DU TRAVAIL

Mr Mammoliti moved first reading of Bill 160, An Act to amend the Worker's Compensation Act / Projet de loi 160, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les accidents du travail.

Mr Mammoliti: Today I would like to introduce my private member's bill, An Act to amend the Workers' Compensation Act. Its purpose is to extend the January 2, 1992, deadline of subsection 5a(9) to facilitate more discussion between labour and employees, something that is truly needed.

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

WASTE MANAGEMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR LA GESTION DES DÉCHETS

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 143, An Act respecting the Management of Waste in the Greater Toronto Area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act / Projet de loi 143, Loi concernant la gestion des déchets dans la région du grand Toronto et modifiant la Loi sur la protection de l'environnement.

The Speaker: I believe the member for Oriole has the floor.

Mrs Caplan: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I am pleased to be able to continue the debate today. As I said yesterday, I have quite a number of concerns about this particular piece of legislation, Bill 143, and I would like to take some time because I know my constituents in the riding of Oriole have the same concerns as members of the public from right across this province.

One of the big concerns they have is not only for protection of the environment, which is something I think we all share. Every member of this House speaks forcefully and with passion about our commitment individually and our desire collectively to protect the environment for future generations. But we also believe it is extremely important that the people of this province have an opportunity to participate fully in the debates and discussions, that their rights are protected so they can, with confidence, know that what is happening in their communities is environmentally safe, is environmentally sound and is in the public interest and the interest of their community.

Many things have happened over the last 15 months which have caused great concern to me and to my constituents in the riding of Oriole, and I have had a number of people mention this to me. I think it is important that we take a bit of historical perspective on Bill 143 so that we fully understand where we are today and why there is such concern about this piece of legislation.

I said yesterday that this was a piece of legislation that is being tabled not by the Minister of the Environment but by the minister responsible for the greater Toronto area. One of the things I said was that the reason I believe this is not being carried by the Minister of the Environment is that any Minister of the Environment would be embarrassed to bring forward a piece of legislation that so removes the rights of citizens of this province, of municipalities, to have a say in what is happening in their backyards, in their communities. Any Minister of the Environment would be really concerned about the precedent-setting nature of this piece of legislation.

Bill 143 is An Act respecting the Management of Waste in the Greater Toronto Area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act, and it has four distinct sections. I will be spending some time looking at each of those sections individually, but what I would like to do for a minute, just to put it into proper perspective, is to begin by looking backwards, because I think it is important to understand how we arrived at this place and why I have so many concerns about this piece of legislation.

As we know, the government changed in September 1990, and one of the first things the new Minister of the Environment did was to stop an Environmental Protection Act process that was looking at some interim sites. Even before that, during the election campaign of the summer of 1990, the Premier, who is here today, then Leader of the Opposition, went to every potential site for waste disposal, pretty much in every community across this province, and made a very clear commitment. His commitment was that there would be no new sites developed and no expansion of existing sites without a full environmental assessment process.

There is much confusion in the minds of people of this province, given the numbers of different pieces of legislation. Most people do not know the difference between the Environmental Protection Act and the Environmental Assessment Act. They do not understand that both are designed to provide for environmental protections and environmental assessments.

One of the fundamental differences between the two pieces of legislation is that the Environmental Protection Act allows for a site-specific examination to determine whether that particular site is environmentally sound for the purposes that are being proposed, whether it is landfill or anything else. It permits under that piece of legislation and requires under that legislation a full and complete examination of the environmental impact on that site, and permits and it requires full, open, public hearings so that the public in the immediate area of that proposed site can come forward to hear the evidence being presented about the suitability of that site for whatever the intended purpose is, whether it is landfill or anything else. If it is a hearing under the Environmental Protection Act, people, ordinary citizens who are interested, groups, municipalities, anyone who wishes, can attend the hearings, hear the evidence that is being presented and then make representation and let those who are making the assessment under the Environmental Protection Act very aware of the community's concerns. That is the Environmental Protection Act.

The difference between that and the Environmental Assessment Act is that the Environmental Assessment Act requires a look at alternatives rather than looking only at that one specific proposal, some would say in isolation of everything else. The Environmental Assessment Act requires a broader examination of all the alternatives, of other alternatives, to determine which would be the most environmentally safe. So the Environmental Assessment Act requires a full examination: a full identification of alternative sites, a full examination of those sites and then a comparison to determine which is the most appropriate, which is the safest, which is the best environmentally. I think everyone would agree that this is a very significant difference from the Environmental Protection Act.

The Environmental Assessment Act also has a requirement for full and open public hearings on each of the alternatives that are being proposed. The Environmental Assessment Act permits individuals, groups, organizations, associations and municipalities to come forward and make their representations and express their concerns, as well as hearing the evidence that is being presented.

I think it is important to explain the difference because, when the minister stands in her place and makes some of the kinds of statements we have heard over the last 15 months, people—particularly my constituents, but they are no different than other people across this whole province—become very confused. We know there were sites proposed for an interim landfill that were undergoing public hearings under the Environmental Protection Act.

The minister had neglected to say that. When she says that sites were going to be considered without a full Environmental Assessment Act hearing, she is correct. But the presumption and the assumption and the message she is sending out is quite inaccurate and incorrect, because she knows full well that there were hearings ongoing under the Environmental Protection Act to ensure that those sites met the environmental standards requirement; if they did not, they would not have been permitted.

The action she took shortly after becoming Minister of the Environment stopped that process under the Environmental Protection Act and did not replace it with anything. In November—only two months, actually, after her appointment, two months after the change of government—the minister made her first statement in the Legislature. She revealed her consumer action plan. What she really did at that time was restate the policy of the 3Rs, which, as I said yesterday, was the policy of the former government, the policy of the member for St Catharines, of whom she was so critical. The only big change was that she reordered the 3Rs and put reduction, then reuse and then recycle as her priorities.

That was in November 1990. She announced at that time that she would establish a public sector authority that would be finding long-term solutions to the waste management crisis in the GTA, and that the waste management authority was to be set up—she referred to it as an Interim Waste Authority—to begin co-ordination of a long-term site search. It was not until October 1991, almost a full year later, eleven months later, that legislation was introduced to give this Interim Waste Authority its mandate.

People have a legitimate concern about what took so long. What was the minister doing during that full year when she could have established the waste authority? In her November 1990 statement, which was a year ago, the minister made statements indicating that there would be no garbage gap in the greater Toronto area because her waste reduction regulations were going to be so effective that she was sure people in the greater Toronto area would be successful in diverting enough waste from landfill so the lifespan of the current landfill sites would be sufficient and adequate until long-term sites were found and approved.

We know today that she does not believe that to be true. However, there are a lot of questions about the capacity that exists within the existing landfill sites. It is not only the success of the 3R programs that were begun by the previous government under the excellent leadership of the member for St Catharines but also, I think, the impact of the recession that has meant less waste going to landfill. Unfortunately, we have seen tremendous cross-border shipping of waste, garbage which is being diverted to the United States, partially because it is lower-cost, but that has also meant less waste going to the existing landfill sites in the greater Toronto area.

Some have questioned the need for this draconian, autocratic approach, and some have suggested there is no urgency to this legislation at all. Some—the most cynical, and I think they have good reason to be cynical—have suggested that the timing of this legislation coincided with—I do not want to use the word—

Hon Mr Rae: Then don't.

Mrs Caplan: The Premier is reading my mind. He knows what I am thinking and he knows that when I am cynical, it is with good cause. Some would say the timing of this legislation coincided deliberately with the elections of the municipal councils. This legislation was tabled a few days before the elections, just before those municipal councils were actually elected and before any of those municipal leaders had an opportunity to be consulted or be fully aware of what was being proposed. Some would suggest that the fact that it was tabled on a Thursday afternoon without a minister's statement in this Legislature, a few days before the municipal elections, was no coincidence at all; that it was designed deliberately to low-bridge one of the most significant pieces of environmental legislation to hit this Legislature, I would suggest, in decades.

The precedent-setting nature of this legislation cannot be overlooked. The government had it tabled just before the municipal elections with a demand by the minister that this receive third reading by Christmas. It was tabled on October 24 and the minister has requested that it receive second reading, committee hearings and third reading passage within a matter of weeks. We will be looking at each section of that legislation and the concerns being expressed.

We have municipal councils taking their oath of office on December 1, in the first week of December. To suggest that those councils could properly and adequately respond to public hearings in the first week of December raises the kind of concern and cynicism I have been talking about in this House for a long time. The message it sends to elected representatives at the municipal level and to the people of this province, particularly in the greater Toronto area—as it becomes known what this is really about, I suggest the government will have concerns from people right across this province.

Back to the historical perspective: In December 1990 the Minister of the Environment announced that a task force would look at the drafting of an environmental bill of rights, despite the fact that she had drafted and introduced a bill while in opposition. I can understand that one's perspective from opposition is a little different than one's perspective when in government. Having experienced both, I think it is very important for members of the public to know that members of the New Democratic Party are finding, I think much to their own chagrin, that the simplistic, easy answers they often proposed while in opposition are not working in government. They are simply not practical and they are not working.

Mr Grandmaitre: They are not logical, either.

Mrs Caplan: They are not logical, as my colleague the member for Ottawa East says. I agree with him. The simple, quick, easy answers the member for Etobicoke-Rexdale seemed to have, whether it was an environmental bill of rights or any of the other simple answers to difficult problems and challenges facing our society simply are not practical, are not logical, are not workable and are not supportable. We find many of those still contained in the rhetoric and the doctrinaire response coming from members of this NDP government.

People would like to see an environmental bill of rights. I believe the existing package, this piece of legislation, Bill 143, would have to override any environmental bill of rights, because the content of this legislation, which overrides every piece of environmental and planning legislation in this province, takes away the fundamental rights of the citizens of this province. It runs completely contrary to the principles of an environmental bill of rights or any bill of rights. It runs totally contrary to participatory democracy. It runs totally contrary to the principles enshrined in the Environmental Protection Act, which many had seen as inadequate, particularly many on the NDP front bench when they were in opposition, because it only required an assessment of an individual site.

The Environmental Protection Act did require that it be fully assessed, but it did not require comparison. It did require full and open public hearings. It did require engineering studies to be made public and available for public comment. This piece of legislation requires none of the safeguards of the Environmental Protection Act and overrides the protections of the Environmental Protection Act and every protection that communities have to ensure that what is being done in their community is proper, safe, good planning and environmentally sound. It takes away their right to speak out in a public forum about that which is happening in their own community.

In February 1991, the Minister of the Environment addressed the eastern Ontario mayors, wardens and reeves conference. She announced her waste reduction action plan, which outlined the regulations she would be bringing forward to ensure that Ontario achieved the Liberal government's target of 25% diversion by 1992. We believed that 25% was a reasonable goal and target by 1992.

In opposition, the Minister of the Environment and her colleagues felt this was inadequate, and yet in February 1991, six months after the election, she committed herself to that same Liberal target and goal of 25% diversion, and we applauded that.

We said she was aiming her plan in the right direction. It was aimed at municipalities to encourage them to establish recycling programs and municipal composting facilities. She said these would be mandatory in all municipalities. I am not one who believes everything the government does should be mandatory and should require enforcement, but in this particular case I believe the approach for a waste reduction action plan which included all municipalities and allowed them to develop their plans and mandated that kind of an action plan was appropriate.

But it was from February until October, an additional eight months, until it was finally announced that there was a draft regulation for consultation under the waste reduction action plan. After being so supportive in February, we had to wait until October, and then there was consultation.

The minister also announced in April 1991 that the search for the long-term landfill sites for the GTA would have to be conducted within the boundaries of the regions. That was a very significant announcement and it really paved the way for Bill 143.

When I say it was significant, it was significant because Metropolitan Toronto had been actively seeking a solution. They knew whatever agreement they reached would be subject to the Environmental Assessment Act. Members will remember that a few minutes ago I said the Environmental Assessment Act required comparative analysis of numerous sites to determine which approach was the most environmentally sound. That is important because it is different from the Environmental Protection Act, which only requires assessment of a specific single site.

As an option, and I think it is important to stress that it was an option to be considered, Metropolitan Toronto was negotiating with the community of Kirkland Lake in northern Ontario for a plan that would have seen the development of a new industry, turning garbage into jobs and an old abandoned mine shaft into a site for solid waste.

The announcement in April 1991 killed the Kirkland Lake discussions, killed even the opportunity to examine that as an option under a full environmental assessment hearing. We know that during the recent municipal election there was a referendum on the ballot in Kirkland Lake and it was clear.

Nobody was saying: "Are you in favour of having this dump site? Are you in favour of this plan, yes or no?" That is not what the question was. The question was, "Do you support an examination of this as an option and a full Environmental Assessment Act process and hearing on this proposal?" That is what the question was: "Should this be considered?" Some 70% of the people who responded said yes, it should be considered as an option; yes, the studies should be done to determine whether or not this was an appropriate, environmentally safe option and whether this was a better option than any of the other sites and options that were being proposed within the greater Toronto area.

My constituents in the riding of Oriole put their garbage out or put it down the garbage chute, and it is picked up by North York works department and hauled away. My constituents do not know whether that garbage goes to Beare Road, Keele Valley, Britannia; they did not know if it was going to the Commissioners Road incinerator. All they knew is that their garbage is being taken away.

My constituents do not consider their backyard to be Vaughan. They do not consider their backyard to be Mississauga or Scarborough or the city of Toronto and yet, when the minister has made statements that you have to keep your garbage in your own backyard, my constituents scratch their heads and say: "The greater Toronto area is the most densely populated part of our province; 40% of the population of the province lives within the greater Toronto area. Why is the minister insisting that we should have, and be forced to put, garbage sites in the most densely populated part of the province? Why would she not allow a site to be examined under the Environmental Assessment Act and considered in a part of the province where very few people live?"

"Surely," they say, "if the minister really is concerned about the best environmental option, the best and most sensitive response, she is not serious that everybody is expected to keep his garbage in his own backyard. She is not suggesting we turn our ravines and our valleys in the major urban areas into garbage sites."

Surely she is not suggesting she will designate where our backyard is. She told Kingston that its backyard was Ottawa. She is telling North York that its backyard is Vaughan. My constituents do not think Vaughan is their backyard. She could convince them Kirkland Lake is their backyard if that was the most environmentally sound and sensitive thing to do or if that was the best environmental option for disposal of solid waste. My constituents want to know what the best answer and best approach are.

The denial of the opportunity to assess that option is seen as arbitrary, doctrinaire and the same kind of simplistic rhetoric we heard when this minister and the New Democratic Party were in opposition. It has been almost a year and a half. In many areas we have seen policy changes and we wonder why the minister will not consider a more environmentally sound approach to finding the best option. It simply does not make sense that she would force and require existing landfill sites to expand without appropriate environmental hearings and that she would force and refuse considerations of options such as Kirkland Lake simply because of ideology—not after the commitments the Premier made in the summer of 1990 and not after the reputation the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore earned as critic for Environment.

My constituents are telling me they simply do not believe the government is doing this. Part of the discussion on Bill 143 is to alert the public that the government is taking away the environmental protections and the environmental rights to hearings. They are taking them away on two specific sites: Keele Valley and Britannia. They are taking them away in Durham. The implications are that this sets a precedent for every community across this province.

It was in June 1991 that my colleague the member for Halton Centre revealed in this Legislature a copy of a cabinet document on how the government planned to deal with waste management, and in their terms, the waste management crisis they had created by their lack of action in a full year in office. I, for one, was particularly disappointed with the response from the Premier. He permitted the Ontario Provincial Police to investigate how the member for Halton Centre happened to receive this document.

Hon Mr Wildman: That's wrong.

Mrs Caplan: I said he allowed an OPP investigation to continue. The Premier continues today to say he is going to permit the Ontario Provincial Police to interrogate and investigate members if they happen to receive information about the government's intentions. I say to the Premier who is here today that I know he had reacted to similar suggestions of his rights being infringed upon if there had been a suggestion he could not receive documentation, information or communication from a member of the civil service. I can imagine what his reaction would have been as Leader of the Opposition to have the Ontario Provincial Police interrogate him about a leaked document he received. I believe the Minister of the Environment overreacted. I believe, in fact, that she betrayed her own principles in suggesting that somehow and in some way the public did not have a right to know what was being considered by this government.

It was a shameful day that the Premier would not intervene and say, "Members of this Legislature will not be investigated." This is the Premier who promised whistleblowing legislation that would encourage civil servants to make the public aware. This is the Premier who supported, as I did, freedom-of-information legislation because the public has a right to know.

I was very disappointed with the response when the member for Halton Centre presented this plan. It was in June 1991 that the minister made a statement in this House, in response to the documents the member for Halton Centre made public, that she had a three-part strategy for the greater Toronto area, which I suggest is precedent-setting for every part of this province. The public should be aware and alerted to what is really happening.

The strategy called for lifts on the Britannia and Keele Valley sites so that they would accept additional waste over and above the capacity they were originally approved for. These lifts would be forced on the communities without any public hearings. She also called on Durham to build a transfer site, a transfer station, to prepare for the shipping of its waste to Keele Valley once Brock Road West closes in 1992.

All these actions that were contained in the document the member for Halton Centre presented had been done and all these actions had been implemented, without any consultation whatever with municipal officials. That was in June 1991, almost a full year, or 10 months, after this minister had said: "There's no problem. There's no garbage gap. We can stop the environmental protection hearings on the interim sites that were proposed by the former government." That was almost a year after the now Premier travelled around to every site in this province giving his word, making a commitment that there would be no expansion of existing sites without full environmental assessments. He gave his word, and we wonder why my constituents and the people of this province are cynical, why they do not believe and they do not like any politician very much.

Hon Mr Wildman: You are not cynical, surely.

Mrs Caplan: The Minister of Natural Resources says to me, surely I am not cynical. I will say to the minister, whom I have worked with over the course of the last six years and for whom I have respect that yes, I am cynical. I am cynical when I see a piece of legislation that is a deception, because it says one thing and it does another.

This piece of legislation packages together some of the most draconian measures to deal with a so-called problem. I have to say that I am not sure there is a problem as severe as the Minister of the Environment is suggesting. I am not sure there is that problem. The people I am speaking to in the greater Toronto area are saying that the crisis can be responded to in better ways. The reason is that there is more capacity available in the existing landfill sites than had been predicted.

Because of that information, I would say to the Minister of Natural Resources that I am very concerned about the rush on this piece of legislation. The estimates now for Keele Valley are that it could be 1996 before it reaches capacity. There are suggestions that the Brock Road site and the Britannia landfill site may not reach capacity as originally anticipated. Yet it was in August 1991 that the minister issued her order to Peel region and Metropolitan Toronto to begin the studies required to prepare for the lifts for those two landfill sites.

The rest of this chronology is equally important. In October 1991 the Minister of the Environment announced a second task force to examine the drafting of yet another proposed environmental bill of rights. Many of us questioned the need for yet a second task force, but now I am beginning to understand why the second task force. Can members imagine the embarrassment of a Minister of the Environment to have to table a piece of environmental legislation at the beginning of October and then override it with a piece of legislation at the end of October? That is what would have happened.

So the environmental bill of rights was put off until some time in the future and in its place a piece of legislation, Bill 143, was tabled not by the Minister of the Environment but by the minister responsible for the greater Toronto area. That titling suggests that this piece of legislation will only affect the greater Toronto area, but that is not true. We will get to that in a moment.

On October 7, at the Recycling Council of Ontario's annual meeting with the minister, she released her draft waste reduction regulations and said there would be a two-month consultation. On October 24, Bill 143 was tabled in the House, and here we are today.

I felt this history was important because it sets the context for a piece of legislation that has raised concerns right across this province. I am not suggesting there are not problems—there are. I am not sure they have reached crisis proportions, but if they have it is because of almost 14 months of inaction by this minister, and when she finally does take action it is the kind of action which I believe should cause concerns and ring alarm bells right across this province.

I am going to refer to an editorial that I think sums up very well the box and the bind that we find ourselves in. It is a timely editorial, because it was printed in the Toronto Star just about a month before Bill 143 was tabled. If you will indulge me, Mr Speaker, it is very relevant.

The title of the editorial is "Gagging on Garbage."

"A baffling Queen's Park strategy for waste disposal is making Metro's garbage crisis worse, not better.

"High fees and new restrictions at local dumps are forcing companies to send their trash to the United States.

"A growing number of businesses are dumping or burning their waste illegally here at home.

"And now, politicians in Peel region say they will close the Britannia dump this year in defiance of a provincial order that it be kept open on an emergency basis.

"The trouble started last fall when Environment Minister Ruth Grier blocked Metro's plans to open two temporary dumps. Predictably, that put a tighter squeeze on existing ones that are rapidly running out of room.

"Last winter, she nixed Metro's long-term plans to send garbage to northern Ontario, adding to the uncertainty.

"Early this year, Grier admitted that a new long-term dump within the greater Toronto area may not be ready by the time the existing ones are full. But by then, her only option was to order the existing dumps to keep accepting garbage long after they are full—and without going through proper environmental procedures.

"Peel council's decision Thursday night to defy Grier has only raised the stakes.

"In light of such bungling, it's no wonder Grier has been turning a blind eye to the estimated 500,000 tonnes of local garbage that are being dumped south of the border. And it may explain why she has not beefed up enforcement measures to deter illegal dumping and burning of garbage.

"Meanwhile, the bustling cross-border garbage trade is costing Metro-area municipalities $36 million to $60 million a year in lost disposal revenues.

"Clearly, the minister has painted herself into a corner."

That is the Toronto Star editorial of September 16, 1991. It is very relevant to our discussions on Bill 143, because approximately five weeks after this editorial, this is the piece of legislation that was tabled by the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore.

I mentioned the timing, and I believe that is very important. Yesterday in this House I shared a letter I received from the mayor of Vaughan. I think the response from the representatives of local municipalities and regional governments in the greater Toronto area is a very important one, as well as the response from the people of Kirkland Lake. I think it is very important that I share with the House the reactions.

Let me tell members what the reaction is from the president of the Association of Municipalities of Ontario. For those who do not know, AMO is the umbrella organization which represents municipalities right across this province. While Bill 143 refers to the greater Toronto area, Helen Cooper, who is the mayor of Kingston and president of the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, is very aware of the precedent-setting nature of this legislation. She wrote to the minister on November 1, 1991. Remember, this legislation was tabled October 24, and within one week, this is the letter and this is the response from the Association of Municipalities of Ontario.

"Dear Minister:

"The Association of Municipalities of Ontario, AMO, and its member municipalities are gravely concerned about the Waste Management Act, 1991, which you introduced in the Ontario Legislature on Thursday, October 24, 1991.

"Although the first sections of the act pertain to municipalities in the greater Toronto area, they have serious implications for other municipalities across the province. The final section of the act has very far-reaching implications for municipal waste management in Ontario's municipalities. Together the various sections of the act have left municipalities across the province extremely concerned about such critical issues as municipal authority, municipal finance and environmental assessment and the manner in which your new act may impact on these municipalities.

"While some sections of the act may be supportable by municipalities, many others need much more detailed consideration and consultation. After considerable consultations with staff members of the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and the Ministry of the Environment, as well as municipal politicians and staff members across the province, AMO strongly urges you not to proceed with the legislation until extensive consultations on it can take place with municipalities.

"AMO and its member municipalities believe this is very critical in light of the scope of your new act and we urge you to immediately take steps to both halt the legislation and consult with municipalities on its content."

1600

This is signed by Helen Cooper, president of the Association of Municipalities of Ontario.

I know Helen Cooper. She is a reasonable, thoughtful, rational person. She has provided leadership in the municipality of Kingston as the mayor and she has provided leadership within the Association of Municipalities of Ontario. She is highly respected.

What was the response from the Minister of the Environment? What was the response from the Minister of Municipal Affairs? What was the response from the Premier's government to the Association of Municipalities of Ontario? The response was, "We want third reading of this act by Christmas."

I would say to the Minister of Natural Resources, does he wonder why I am cynical? Does he wonder why AMO is cynical? Does he wonder why the people of my riding of Oriole are feeling concerned and cynical and upset? Does he wonder why the people of the greater Toronto area are saying, "What's going on?" Here is an organization of municipalities and their president responding within one week of the tabling of Bill 143 by saying: "Wow, this is not just affecting the greater Toronto area. This is going to have huge implications for municipalities right across this province. You can't hoodwink us. You can't do this without consultation and without discussion. You're taking away our rights. We're concerned about the environmental impacts. We're concerned about the precedents this is setting. We believe this is premature."

The response from the government? "It has to be passed by Christmas." That is an unacceptable response and this government is going to hear that. It is going to hear it from me, as the member for Oriole, and I am so proud to represent my constituents in this House. I think they are going to hear it from the leadership of every municipality across this province because we are going to insist on public hearings and we are going to insist that every section of this bill be fully explored and considered so that its implications are fully understood.

I am not saying there are not some parts of this bill that are supportable. There are. There are some very good parts of this legislation. But it has been bundled together in a way which is confusing, and in its confusion, it is very upsetting to the people of this province when they start to understand what this really means, because this legislation is not what it seems.

The response to this legislation was also very rapid from the community of Kirkland Lake. Here is a letter dated November 22. As I said, this legislation was tabled October 24. Less than one month later, this was the response from the community of Kirkland Lake in a letter from the mayor:

"Dear Mr Premier:

"Re: The Waste Management Act, 1991

"I am disappointed to see that your Minister of the Environment, Ruth Grier, is continuing her pursuit of policies that have no regard for the input of the people of Ontario.

"Your government's attempt to fast-track the proposed Waste Management Act, 1991, through the Legislature prior to Christmas is another attempt by Mrs Grier to ignore the people of Metro, Vaughan, Maple, York, Kirkland Lake, Englehart and Larder Lake, as well as associations like FONOM and AMO.

"On November 12, the residents of Kirkland Lake voted 69% in favour of having an environmental assessment carried out on the proposed Adams mine solid waste and recycling project. Our region developed this project with Metropolitan Toronto. Your minister, in an attempt to circumvent any discussion on this project over the past year, is refusing to acknowledge that a superior environmental solution may be available to the greater Toronto area, northern Ontario and the province.

"Mr Premier, this bill must be delayed. It must have hearings, it must be reviewed in committee and your government must listen. To pass this bill as it is written is a violation of the existing intent of the Environmental Assessment Act, which calls for the evaluation of all reasonable alternatives.

"For the first time, north and south are united in a common cause and this issue will not die. I respectfully request that you meet with Kirkland Lake, Englehart, Larder Lake and Metro prior to this bill being passed. Perhaps you will have the courtesy and the concern to review a true provincial partnership which has been created to solve these environmental issues.

"Your minister has ignored this issue for too long, and for your government to pass this bill at this time would be most regrettable."

That is signed by Joe Mavrinac, the mayor of Kirkland Lake.

This letter, as I said, was dated November 22, less than a month after the tabling of this legislation. What was the response of the Premier to the mayor of Kirkland Lake, to his request for a meeting? The response was, "This bill should be passed by December." Exactly the concern and the fast track that was being demanded by the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore was the response from the Premier.

Mr Grandmaitre: "We'll do it and then we'll consult."

Mrs Caplan: "We'll do it. We're not going to talk about it. We're going to take away your rights. We're just going to do it."

One of the things that came to my attention, and it was interesting because it was on the very same day the mayor of Kirkland Lake sent his letter to the Premier, was an editorial in the Northern Daily News. I think it is important, because again, just as I read the editorial in the Toronto Star, it is important for members of this Legislature and for members of the general public to know what the response has been from across this province.

This is what the Northern Daily News had to say on November 22: "It's Time To Camp On The Doorsteps."

That was the headline. I see the Minister of Northern Development and Mines is here in the Legislature, and it quotes her in this article as saying:

"Any proposal with respect to moving garbage from the greater Toronto area to Kirkland Lake or anywhere else in northern Ontario would not be entertained, either by myself or by the Minister of the Environment or by this government."

That is a direct quote from the Minister of Northern Development and Mines reacting to a question in this House. It would not be entertained. It would not be considered. An environmental assessment would not be permitted to determine whether that is a better solution than putting garbage in the middle of the most densely populated part of the province.

The people of Oriole riding do not understand. They do not understand why, if it is okay to transport garbage from Kingston to Ottawa, if it is okay to ship garbage south of the border and if there is a community in northern Ontario saying, "Conduct an environmental assessment, see if this is an environmentally sound solution," it will not even be entertained.

The Minister of the Environment said it is unthinkable. What is unthinkable? If it is a better solution for the environment, why is it unthinkable? Why would she insist on not even considering another alternative that would produce jobs? There is a community in northern Ontario saying it should be considered. My constituents do not understand it. I do not understand this ideological, doctrinaire approach. I agree that no community should be forced to take the garbage from another region or another community. That was the policy of our government. Our government said no community should be forced into that situation; we said that very clearly.

We also said that if there was a proposal that was acceptable to a community, it should be considered as an option and explored under a full Environmental Assessment Act process. I suggest to the Minister of the Environment that this is a reasonable, sound environmental approach. I can say very clearly that to dismiss the Kirkland Lake option without an environmental assessment, in my view, is irresponsible in the extreme. I believe this government will have to start listening because I suggest if that is a safer option and it is more environmentally sound, it should be considered.

Let me read this editorial.

Mrs Marland: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I think the comments made by the member for Oriole on this very controversial legislation should have at least a quorum in attendance. I do not see a quorum at this time.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Journals: A quorum is present.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Order, please. A quorum is present. The honourable member for Oriole has the floor.

Mrs Caplan: I am referring now to the editorial in the Northern Daily News of November 22. This is what they had to say:

"Open-minded, flexible, in touch with the people, 'Let's use waste as a resource'—the New Democratic Party used to believe in all these things. The NDP has become a rigid, mainstream, typical political party making arbitrary decisions regardless of the effects on the serfs of Ontario. Instead of sitting down across the table as hated enemies have done in the Middle East, the NDP has decided it will arbitrarily expand two landfills in southern Ontario without an assessment of the effects on the environment. All this is happening because Environment Minister Ruth Grier 'cannot conceive' of shipping garbage to 'remote communities' like Kirkland Lake.

"We can't conceive of such irrational decision-making. We can't conceive of such outright political posturing. We can't conceive of such blatant disregard for the environment. We can't conceive of the NDP doing this to Ontario. We can't conceive that Ruth Grier, Shelley Martel and Premier Bob Rae would ignore virtually everyone else who is responsible for disposing waste. We can't conceive that our provincial leaders aren't willing to sit down and take a look at the effects on the environment through an exhaustive process like the environmental assessment. We can't conceive the NDP is willing to simply dismiss Kirkland Lake's demonstrated willingness, through the results of a recent referendum, to listen to the proposal.

"The NDP's upper crust are obviously taking solace in the fact that it's difficult for Kirkland Lake residents to camp out on their doorstep. Kirkland Lake doesn't have the time to sit and wait out the NDP. It's time to take this issue past meetings in Queen's Park. It's time to embarrass the NDP into listening to us. That tactic has proven successful in the past. It's time someone did camp out on their doorstep."

The bottom line in this editorial asks, "Are you listening, Mayor Mavrinac?"

Here is a northern Ontario daily newspaper, speaking very clearly on behalf of the residents and community of Kirkland Lake, calling for a full environmental assessment of an option that could well be more environmentally safe, appropriate and sound than putting landfill into an area where 44% of the province's population is living.

This editorial is an important and strong message to the New Democratic government. It is clear the government is not listening. It is clear they have been driven by a doctrinaire approach that is not responding to the realities of environmental considerations and the concerns of the people of this province. I believe that when the people of this province examine Bill 143, they will realize the short-sighted nature of the action that has been taken by the Minister of the Environment, who is also the minister responsible for the greater Toronto area.

The response has been disappointing. I have another letter, dated yesterday. It is a memo from Notre Development Corp and it was sent to me. This is a concern of a business in North Bay to the response of the minister and the government in the tabling of Bill 143. The memo says:

"The Minister of Environment is conducting an 'end run' around the people of the GTA, York region, Metro and the province by 'jamming through her waste management bill before Christmas.' At site search meetings held by the Interim Waste Authority in York and Metro on September 17, 19, 21, 24, 26 and 28, the staff clearly told all participants that it was their schedule to announce the 'long list of sites for new landfills by November.' They also stated that this time frame was necessary in order to meet their schedule."

A schedule of time study was attached to this letter that was sent to me.

"The announcement [of the long list of sites] has now been postponed. The minister is trying to fast-track the waste management bill 'before announcing the sites.' The minister is clearly interfering with the Interim Waste Authority, an organization which is supposed to be independent of Mrs Grier's ministry.

"Mrs Grier is guilty of manipulation and giving misinformation to the public. It is the minister's intent to put into law an act which the residents of Maple, York, Metro, northern Ontario and the entire province will not stand for if the details are made known.

"I attach an overview of the environmental aspects and benefits of the proposed 'rail haul option' to the province, to the GTA and to northern Ontario. These details can all be substantiated in depth.

"This bill must be sent to committee and changed. The minister is manipulating the process of environmental assessment, using the Interim Waste Authority and refusing to evaluate acceptable options for the GTA solid waste.

"Mrs Grier cannot substantiate her position under scrutiny. Your efforts to block this bill from passing before the Legislature adjourns are very important to the province."

This letter is signed by Mr Gordon McGuinty, president of Notre Development Corp. I received this yesterday and I believe it is an important part of this debate, because part of what we are attempting to do is alert the people of this province to the concerns that have been expressed, not just by the people in the greater Toronto area, not just by Mayor McCallion in Peel, who is outraged, not just by Mayor Jackson, whose letter I read yesterday, not just by Gary Herrema, the chairman of Durham region, who I will be quoting in a few minutes, but by people in northern Ontario, eastern Ontario and the president of the Association of Municipalities of Ontario. As more people are alerted to what this legislation really is about, they are not only cynical, they are outraged. They are outraged that this government would have the audacity to table this legislation on October 24 and demand passage, third reading, by Christmas, before the House rises.

The people of northern Ontario have many ways of making known their disappointment—the letter from the mayor of Kirkland Lake, the editorial in the newspaper—and I know for a fact they are aware they can contact their MPPs. I know as well that the Minister of Northern Development and Mines, a minister from the Sudbury area, and the Treasurer would be influenced if the people of northern Ontario let them know how they were feeling, because part of this democratic process is the opportunity for the public to be heard. Bill 143 takes that right away. It takes away the right of citizens to be heard at environmental hearings. It changes and sets a precedent for environmental protection in the development of new sites that I believe concerns and should concern people in communities right across this province.

I would like, if I could, to just take a look at the bill for a moment and look at it section by section so the people who are watching this debate will know why I am so concerned on behalf of my constituents and why words such as "draconian," "autocratic," "doctrinaire," "precedent-setting" and "bureaucratic" are all being used to describe this legislation by knowledgeable and thoughtful people who have had a chance to scrutinize Bill 143.

I would stress, as I begin looking at this piece of legislation, that what is needed in the greater Toronto area is co-operation, not alienation. This piece of legislation sets a precedent within the greater Toronto area not just in the area of waste management, but in the approach this government will be taking to problem-solving. There are many issues and many problems to be resolved in the greater Toronto area, and the approach they have taken will not foster co-operation. The approach they have taken will not bring all of the municipalities in the greater Toronto area together to work with each other.

Before I begin looking at each part of the bill, there is one other response that I think is very significant, and I would like to share this editorial from the Mississauga News dated November 13, just last week.

The headline says: "NDP Garbage Law 'Back Door' Policy: MPP—New Legislation Would Allow More Trash Without Hearing." When I say that this legislation will foster alienation, mistrust and cynicism, this editorial speaks louder and clearer than anyone could imagine. It says:

"The Ontario NDP government is practising 'back door politics' in its introduction of new legislation which will allow more garbage to be dumped in the Britannia landfill site without any hearings, says a Mississauga MPP.

"Mississauga North opposition MPP Steven Offer says he was surprised at how Environment minister Ruth Grier introduced her Waste Management Act, 1991, which has major consequences for dealing with the garbage crisis in Peel. Offer was sitting in his Queen's Park office watching proceedings in the House when Grier introduced Bill 143 at the very end of question period.

"If it was unparliamentary to whisper the introduction of bills, then she could have been thrown out,' Offer joked of Grier's announcement. He suggested the low-key approach of the bill 'is just back-door politics at its worst.'

"The Liberal Labour critic claimed Grier 'knows her activities with regard to the Britannia site are wrong' and suggested that is why she has categorically refused to meet with concerned residents. The dump was scheduled to close after 12 years of operation under an agreement between the city of Mississauga and the region of Peel but Grier has ordered it to stay open.

"One of the provisions of the new legislation allows Ontario to 'override' any such legal agreements to provide for additional usage of Britannia." That is extremely important. "The bill also legally establishes the Interim Waste Authority Grier has set up to find a new long-term landfill site for Peel. It requires the body to conform to Grier's earlier announcements banning incineration of garbage or transportation of garbage from the greater Toronto area outside its boundaries for disposal.

"A press release from the ministry says the legislation also addresses the short-term disposal crisis for regions such as Peel by removing any legal impediments to conforming with the minister's orders to dump more garbage at existing landfill sites. Offer says the legislation flies in the face of NDP campaign promises that dumps would not be established or expanded without thorough environmental reviews. The law would not require alternatives to be looked at. 'Other sites may be better environmentally, but they don't have to be considered,' he remarked.

"At their most recent regional council meeting, local politicians sharply criticized Bill 143. 'We might as well declare bankruptcy and get it over with,' remarked ward 2 councillor Pat Mullin. 'We're just a bunch of puppets here.'

"Chief administrative officer Michael Garrett said the bill has very serious implications for the region because Ontario 'can now direct every aspect of waste management' with Peel being forced to pay the bill. 'We're frustrated by the lack of consultation. We are frustrated by the lack of consultation,' said Garrett, who also remarked that those that drafted the legislation may not be aware of the import of some of its language. There is not even a guarantee that the bill will be referred to a standing committee of the Legislature for review, which would at least give Peel a chance to present its views.

"Mayor Hazel McCallion said Ontario wants to control waste management decisions 'and bill us. They'll have complete responsibility but the cost will be in our hands,' she added.

"'Mrs Grier has gotten herself in such a mess, she has to become a dictator,' remarked McCallion. 'We are just being shafted left, right and centre.'" This is the response from Mayor McCallion of Mississauga to this piece of legislation.

Many are very concerned about what this legislation will cost, not only in terms of the environment but also in terms of taxes on municipal property taxpayers. Not only are they concerned about what the cost will be within the greater Toronto area; they are concerned about the implications and the costs, human, financial and economic, right across this province.

Part I of the legislation continues the Interim Waste Authority. What is interesting is that this authority has the power to expropriate land for the purpose of establishing landfill and also is given the power to enter on land and carry out its inspections.

This is one part of the act that I believe is a little deceptive. It is given the name of Interim Waste Authority. However, I predict that once established it will not be interim at all, because this authority is going to have responsibility for the disposal of waste. The prediction is that these sites will be for the next 20 years. Why would the government call a crown corporation "interim" when it knows it is going to be around for the next 20 years?

When I said this bill was deceptive, part I is the first deception. If this government is going to do this, it should at least be honest with the people. They should call it the Waste Authority. If they want to give it a fancy name, they should give it a fancy name, but they should not say it is interim. There is nothing interim about this authority.

Part II of the bill applies to three specific landfill waste disposal sites and it specifies what the environmental assessments respecting each of the sites will require. The explanatory note says:

"One site is to be located in each of the regional municipalities of Peel and Durham and the third is to be located in the regional municipality of York or in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto or partially in both. The primary function of the sites will be the disposal of waste generated in the respective municipalities over a period of at least 20 years. The Interim Waste Authority Ltd, which is responsible for the sites, is required to use certain waste diversion information provided by the Minister of the Environment in estimating the needed landfill capacity."

This is what is the most offensive and I believe the most significant component of part II: "Environmental assessments for the sites will not be required to contain discussion of any alternatives to the landfill waste disposal sites other than certain alternatives involving waste reduction, reuse, recycling and other single sites."

Under part II of this piece of legislation: "Policies may be established for purposes of this part by the minister." It is arbitrary and draconian: "Policies may be established for purposes of this part by the minister. These policies must be considered in preparing assessments and approving the sites." Arbitrarily the minister will make those decisions. That is part II of this bill, and I know that is of grave concern to the people of Peel, York and Durham.

It is of concern to my constituents in the riding of Oriole because Peel, York and Durham are municipalities of the greater Toronto area where a significant population is living. They are very concerned that the expansion of sites in Peel and York without proper environmental assessment breaks faith with the communities where those sites were established some time ago. At the time those sites were established people knew what the rules were. Now with a piece of legislation this minister and this NDP government are saying: "All bets are off. All rules out the window. We will arbitrarily decide what is going to happen."

"Part III of the bill requires the regional municipalities of Durham and Peel and the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto to implement reports made to the clerks of the municipalities under section 29 of the Environmental Protection Act. This requirement applies even if implementation would require a municipality to do something which would otherwise require the consent of another municipality or which would contravene a municipal bylaw or agreement or a statute or a regulation designated in the regulations. The Environmental Assessment Act does not apply and Ontario Municipal Board approval is not required.

"A certificate of approval for a waste management system or disposal site may be issued or amended without requiring the Environmental Assessment Board to hold a hearing if the activity carried out with respect to the system or site is to enable a municipality to implement a report. The certificate may contain provisions overriding certain municipal agreements or conditions imposed by municipalities under certain statutes."

1640

I do not think members of the government caucus fully understand what part III really does. It says that before a certificate is issued, notice must be given, but:

"Subject to certain exemptions, if a person's land is injuriously affected by a waste management system or disposal site as a result of the implementation...but the land used for the site was not expropriated, the person is entitled to compensation for the injurious affection in the same way as if the municipality had expropriated...."

That is the extent of the protection offered.

I do not believe, as I said, that people are yet fully aware of just how this bill strips away the rights of the people of this province. What is really ironic is that this is the same Minister of the Environment who promised an environmental bill of rights, yet parts II and III of this legislation strip away rights, particularly and specifically from people surrounding Britannia and Keele Valley, at the same time as it sets a precedent for what could happen in other parts of the province.

I will just give members a couple of examples, and I am not exaggerating. As I read this legislation, part II of the bill is very clear when it says that it is absolutely not a requirement to hold a hearing. Under part II, "Waste Disposal Sites," the act requires that the sites be established, and in section 14 of Bill 143 is the following statement:

"(1) An environmental assessment for a landfill waste disposal site referred to in section 12 is not required to contain,

"(a) any description of, or statement of the rationale for, any alternative to the landfill waste disposal site other than"—reduction, reuse or recycling, or—"use of other...landfill waste disposal sites in the primary service area."

It is very, very clear in this section and in other sections of this legislation. For example, section 14 goes on to say:

"(2) The environmental assessment is not required to contain any description of or statement of the rationale for, or any description or evaluation of any matter relating to,

"(a) an alternative of waste reduction or reuse or recycling if that alternative would involve incineration of waste or the transportation of waste from the primary service area to any other area."

What that section says is that we cannot even look at the evidence or consider whether an incineration option is more environmentally safe. We cannot even consider or look at the Kirkland Lake option to see if it is better environmentally. This legislation says, "You cannot even consider it."

This legislation is not saying, "Let's find the best environmental solution."

Mr Cousens: Why didn't you guys do something about it? You had lots of time to do something and you did nothing.

Mrs Caplan: In response to my colleague the member for Markham, in fact he is absolutely wrong.

The Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr Cousens: Mr Speaker, they did nothing and now they stand up and pontificate about it. That was a real problem. If only they would have some sense of history.

Mrs Caplan: The member for Markham is absolutely wrong. I am not going to dignify his interjections with a response.

Part III of this act says there shall be no hearings. This legislation is the implementation of minister's reports.

Hon Mr Wildman: Is this a filibuster?

Mrs Caplan: The Minister of Natural Resources, who is not in his seat, interjects and asks the question, "Is this a filibuster?" The answer is no. This is serious debate and discussion on a piece of legislation that the Minister of the Environment and the NDP government have tried to rush through this Legislature in a manner which is unbecoming not only of the Minister of Natural Resources but of this government and particularly of the Premier and his colleague the Minister of the Environment.

The reason I say it is unbecoming is that I think one of the reasons my constituents in the riding of Oriole and people around this province are not fully aware of the implications of this legislation is that while in opposition, the Minister of the Environment was quite the defender of environmental rights and environmental protection, and this bill does neither.

It takes away rights and it does not require the best environmental solutions. It does not require examination of the best environmental options. It precludes looking for the best solution. I have read articles and I have read letters into the record today and I can tell members that part of the problem is that the people cannot believe the New Democratic Party is doing this. They cannot believe that a New Democratic government is doing this. I know there are members on the back bench; it is time they woke up and realized what this is really doing and the implications this might have for their very own constituents.

I suggest that while this says this is legislation for the greater Toronto area, it is not. The precedent for this legislation could well affect Ottawa and Kingston. There are agreements there. Just as this legislation overrides the agreements that were made by people in Peel—

Hon Mr Hampton: Mr Speaker, isn't there a time limit on this?

Mrs Caplan: It is unbecoming for the Attorney General to sit in his seat and interject. I think the reason he is doing this is that he is ashamed of the environmental record and the display of this piece of legislation. He is ashamed. He knows full well that this legislation overrides every piece of environmental legislation and takes away the rights of my constituents. I believe he sees his role as Attorney General as representing all the people of this province, and he should be concerned.

Part III, which deals with the implementation of ministers' reports, uses very strong language. It dictates—and that is why this bill is seen by some as dictatorial as well as draconian—to Durham, Peel and Metropolitan Toronto what they shall do. It requires those municipalities to comply. This is subsection 17(4):

“A regional or metropolitan municipality shall comply with this section even if to do so would require that the municipality,

“(a) use, maintain, operate, establish, alter, improve, enlarge or extend a waste management system or waste disposal site located in another municipality; or

“(b) dispose of waste generated in another municipality in a waste management system or waste disposal site that it owns, operates or controls.”

“(5) If”—this is extremely important—“in order to comply with this section, a regional or a metropolitan municipality is required to do anything for which a consent or other approval under the Municipal Act, the Regional Municipality of Durham Act, the Regional Municipality of Peel Act, the Regional Municipality of York Act or the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act is necessary, that consent or approval shall be deemed to have been given.”

1650

In plain language, that means all of those acts I have just mentioned do not matter, that the municipal councils have had the authority taken away from them. The minister has imposed her will, has taken away the responsibility and the authority, yet still requires the municipalities to pay for the results. I know from discussions with, for example, the chairman of the Metro works committee, Councillor Joan King, that there are grave concerns about what the cost of this proposal is going to be.

This legislation, which removes the rights and requires municipalities to do the minister's bidding, also delegates power from the minister to a director. It also says—and here is one section where we are concerned about individuals' rights:

“(2) A certificate of approval or provisional certificate of approval for a waste management system or waste disposal site issued or amended to enable a municipality to comply with section 17 may contain terms,

“(a) overriding any provision applicable to the system or site that is contained in an agreement made under the Municipal Act, the Planning Act, 1983, the Regional Municipality of Durham Act, the Regional Municipality of Peel Act, the Regional Municipality of York Act, the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act or any act designated under clause.”

What this legislation does is override any condition applicable to the system or site that is imposed by any piece of legislation, by any regional or municipal government.

I do not believe anyone fully understands the implications of this better than the minister responsible for the greater Toronto area, the Minister of the Environment.

What this says as well is that a municipality, including a metropolitan or regional municipality, is not entitled to any compensation under section 19 of this act, which is the one that responds to injurious affection, and that may well have implications for taxpayers.

The part of this act that is probably most offensive is that there is a requirement under this legislation that there be no hearings. There is no requirement for public hearings; there is no requirement for the municipalities to allow the public to have their say—and it is not even for the municipalities to allow. They want to ensure the public have their say.

Section 18 says:

“Despite section 30 of the Environmental Protection Act, the director appointed for purposes of that section may issue or amend a certificate of approval or provisional certificate of approval for a waste management system or waste disposal site without requiring the Environmental Assessment Board to hold a hearing if the certificate is being issued or amended to enable a municipality to comply with section 17.”

I read section 17 earlier.

That requirement, I believe, is one of the most offensive requirements in this act. That the minister would be associated with a piece of legislation that overrides every piece of environmental legislation, every piece of planning legislation and overrides the Ontario Municipal Board would also suggest overrides every principle the minister ever stood for. I do not say that lightly. I know the present Minister of the Environment was very eloquent when she was in opposition and many of my constituents had very high hopes for the minister when she assumed the portfolio of Minister of the Environment. The level of disappointment, which I share, cannot be overstated. People do not believe the minister is doing this.

Frequently in this Legislature we criticize, we label, we engage in rhetoric, but I cannot stress too strongly that this legislation is not about “not in my backyard.” As I said, my constituents in the riding of Oriole know where their backyard is. They know their backyard is not in Mississauga and it is not in Vaughan. They do not understand why the minister would insist on taking away people's rights. They do not understand why she would insist on taking the kind of draconian, autocratic approach that she has brought forward with Bill 143, not after the work she had done in protecting the environment and speaking about protection of the environment when she was in opposition.

I know there are some people who say she has now donned the title of Queen of Garbage or Minister of Waste Minister of Garbage. I do not think those titles are becoming. I do not think we should really be getting into that kind of rhetoric. These issues are far too serious. They are serious because this debate has been on a level of ideology. This debate has taken us to a point where I think it is important that all members of this Legislature realize just exactly what is happening.

Bill 143 is an amalgam. It is packaged in a way to suggest that this is about enhancement and protection of the environment, when in fact it is exactly the opposite. Part IV of this legislation consists of amendments to the Environmental Protection Act. At the beginning of my remarks, I explained the difference between the Environmental Protection Act and the Environmental Assessment Act. These amendments to the Environmental Protection Act appear to be tacked on to this piece of legislation because they really bear no relation whatever to parts I, II and III, and as this legislation is being carried by the minister responsible for the greater Toronto area, I would argue that while many of the provisions of part IV are eminently supportable, some of them cause grave concern, and part IV of this legislation really should be a separate piece of legislation carried by the Minister of the Environment to respond to those who have legitimate concerns about the impact of part IV. Some parts of part IV could be considered housekeeping, but other parts of part IV are really quite significant.

I believe it would be very proper for the minister to separate out part IV so that we could properly debate amendments to the Environmental Protection Act separate from those sections and parts of this bill which deal with the establishment of landfill sites in Peel and York and a transfer station in Durham. We should be able to deal separately with amendments to the Environmental Protection Act rather than having them tacked on to a part of the bill establishing a waste authority.

I would argue that part I of this bill is a separate piece of legislation. Part II and part III could be separate bills, and certainly part IV bears no relationship whatever to parts I, II and III. These should be four separate bills. That would be a better way of proceeding, because having them all tacked together is really very confusing and does not allow for the proper scrutiny of part IV, which amends the Environmental Protection Act, whereas part III overrides the Environmental Protection Act. How do we make sense out of that in one piece of legislation?

I have said this piece of legislation is not what it seems to be. When I heard what the minister had to say in the statement on April 2, this is not what I expected in November. I listened very closely to what the minister had to say. All four sections of this piece of legislation are separate and distinct, but they are not part of a comprehensive strategy that the Minister of the Environment has spoken about in this House. They are piecemeal: "Put it together, package it up, table it and pass it quickly before anybody notices what you are really doing."

Why was part IV added? I believe it really is a smokescreen to argue that those amendments to the Environmental Protection Act are urgent and should move forward. I think you could make a very good argument that they should move forward, but they should move forward as amendments to the Environmental Protection Act. To suggest to the people in a communication strategy that part IV is in any way related to parts I, II and III borders on the dishonest. I know the Minister of the Environment is not a dishonest person, but when you create a smokescreen you make people cynical. When you tell them a piece of legislation does one thing when it also does something else, that makes people cynical.

The concerns I have about this legislation on behalf of my constituents are very profound. I know the minister will suggest that if this legislation does not move quickly, terrible things are going to happen. I simply do not believe that, and there is no evidence to prove it. No evidence has been presented by this minister that would suggest there is the kind of emergency she has told us there is. Emergencies do not happen overnight, particularly in the middle of a recession. I know the staff at the Ministry of the Environment are highly qualified, very able and very capable. They watch and they monitor. In those almost 15 months of wasted time, effort and energy, I know they would have alerted the minister long before now if there really was a crisis.

When the minister stood up in this House a year ago and announced there was no crisis, there would be no gap and she could cancel the environmental protection hearings on the interim sites that were proposed by the previous government, I know she had to have been advised by the ministry staff as to what the situation really was. I know in the last year the situation has improved, not deteriorated.

In the press release the minister put out at the time this legislation was tabled, she said the ministry officials were monitoring the capacity of the existing sites. We know waste is being shipped across the border. We know we are in the middle of a recession and less waste is being produced. We also know the 3R program begun by the former government under the leadership of the member for St Catharines is working. People are reducing, reusing and especially recycling. My constituents are.

Hon Mr Wildman: That's because they don't want to ship the garbage out to the north.

Mrs Caplan: The Minister of Natural Resources interjects that my constituents do not want to ship the garbage out. I would argue they do. They ship the garbage to their curbs and the garbage truck comes and picks it up. My constituents do not know where that garbage is taken.

Hon Mr Wildman: You mean they don't care?

Mrs Caplan: They do not know if it is taken to Brock Road, they do not know if it is taken to Britannia, they do not know if it is taken—

Hon Mr Wildman: We have more confidence in your constituents than you do.

Mrs Caplan: My constituents know that when they put their garbage out, it is taken away to Keele Valley or Britannia or Brock Road or some other site that is available somewhere in the province. What my constituents want to know, what they are really interested in and what they care about is that the best environmental solution is found. That is what they care about. I am surprised the Minister of Natural Resources would not understand that. He asks, "Don't your constituents care?" Yes, they care. They do care.

Hon Mr Wildman: I think they do care; you don't. You want to ship it out.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. There is special time allocated at the end of the debate to ask questions or to make any comments. I hope the member will understand that.

Hon Mr Wildman: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would have been quite willing to wait till the end to comment, but it seems like that will never come.

The Deputy Speaker: I think the member understands that very clearly. The member for Oriole, I would ask you to address the Chair.

Mrs Caplan: I know the Minister of Natural Resources does not like what I have to say about this piece of legislation. I can understand that. The truth hurts. He knows this piece of legislation is an embarrassment to his colleague the minister responsible for the greater Toronto area. He knows this piece of legislation is an embarrassment to the Premier. He knows this piece of legislation is an embarrassment to the NDP. He knows the more public scrutiny there is of this piece of legislation, the more embarrassed he will become.

I understand his interjections and I want to assure him my constituents care that we find the very best environmental solution to our waste management problems in this province. My constituents care that the New Democratic government has said no arbitrarily to the Kirkland Lake option—arbitrarily, without an environmental assessment to see if it is the best solution. They care that the NDP has said no arbitrarily to energy from waste, sometimes called incineration. I do not know if that is the best solution. I know there are some people who feel very strongly and very passionately about the results of incineration. We know that in the disposing of garbage there is no environmentally perfect solution. Each one creates some concern.

I am dedicated, on behalf of my constituents, to speaking out passionately in support of whatever is the best available solution. I want the facts. I want them tabled in this House. I want to know what is the best technology. If energy from waste is an option, if there are new technologies available that make that environmentally safer, I think we should be able to consider it. This piece of legislation does not allow the consideration.

I am not saying, "Do it." I am saying, "Consider it." I have had a number of discussions with a number of people who would enter the debate and say technology is changing so rapidly that only those who are shortsighted, not willing to listen, doctrinaire, ideologically driven or living in the past would close their mind to considering something which is newly developed. We are living in a world which is changing so rapidly that we cannot afford the luxury of precluding any options which might be a better solution.

There are those who would say that energy from waste and the incineration option should be considered because the best available technologies in 1991 are better than the landfill option, that the environmental protection would be better. I want to know.

Mr Abel: What about that?

Mrs Caplan: The member opposite says, "What about that?" I agree with him. What about it? We should have those facts and we should be able to compare. The Environmental Assessment Act, always referred to around here as the EAA, would allow for that kind of assessment to be done. I am not an expert in environmental matters, I am not an expert on the new technologies that are being developed, but I will say on behalf of my constituents that I am willing to listen and I am willing to learn and I am willing to be convinced by research and facts and data presented by the experts and the people who know.

I want to hear what the best way is to protect the environment for future generations, what the best way is to rid ourselves of our garbage. While I am not an expert on the technology and I am not an engineer, I have the same good commonsense approach that many of my constituents have when they respond to the kind of decision that says: "We will not even consider other alternatives. We will not even consider other options. Do not confuse us with facts." My constituents are upset, and I say rightly so. We have a responsibility as leaders, as elected members of this House, to get all of the information, to make sure that decisions of government are held up to scrutiny and that better alternatives are proposed if they are available.

That is one of the major concerns I have with Bill 143 because it precludes the opportunity to look at alternatives. It says no, as opposed to why. It says no, as opposed to how. I believe that is fundamentally not in the interest of the people of this province. It is not in the interest of the people of Metropolitan Toronto. This takes an ideological, doctrinaire approach to an issue that I believe should not be partisan.

The disposal of waste and how we deal with our garbage should not be a partisan issue, but it has become a partisan issue because the New Democratic Party and the New Democratic government have taken a position which, by the way, is very different than the position they took during the election campaign. During the election campaign, the people of this province believed the Premier when he went around to every proposed site and said: "You don't have to take Toronto's garbage. We would require a full environmental assessment on every new site. We would require an environmental assessment on every expansion of an existing site." They believed he meant what he said. It would not cost him anything to keep that promise. It is going to cost him a lot to break that promise. It is costing him his credibility. It is damaging, very damaging, because it is costing him the trust of the people of this province.

He knew of the sensitivities around this issue, and when faced with a solution where the people of Kirkland Lake said, "Do an environmental assessment; see if this is a good idea; check this one out," the answer was: "No, we will not consider it. It is unthinkable. This does not fit with our ideology. We do not want to even consider this proposal or approach."

Everyone I talk to is still waiting for the answer to the question, "Why not?" Why would the government not even look at a proposal that might be a better environmental solution? Why would this piece of legislation, Bill 143, say that by law you cannot consider that? The law says you cannot consider an option that may prove to be better, more environmentally sound for the people not only of greater Toronto but of this province. My constituents just do not understand it.

When we look at Bill 143 and the four components of the act, we see many things that are very disturbing. I mentioned before that part I calls the waste authority the Interim Waste Authority. Yet it establishes a crown corporation with broad powers and we expect that the waste authority is going to be in place for 20 years. That is very upsetting to people. Why is the government calling it an interim authority if it is going to be there for 20 years? People ask me: "What are they trying to hide? What are they worried about? Why don't they call it what it is?" It is a crown corporation, a scheduled agency at arm's length from the government but controlled by the government.

Part II outlines criteria for the long-term site selection process. What we have heard is a lot of cynicism about when those sites are going to be announced. They want to know: "Why the delay in announcing the potential sites? Why are you waiting? What relationship does that list have with this piece of legislation?" People are very suspicious. They are suspicious because they have been told one thing and yet something else is happening. The Premier said one thing and is doing another. The Minister of the Environment said one thing and is doing another. That makes people very suspicious.

Part I of this bill, as it gives its powers to the Interim Waste Authority, states that the authority has the right to enter to test land. It gives the inspectors such powers in subsection 10(2), to "use such force as is reasonably necessary to execute the warrant and call on police officers to assist in the execution of the warrant."

It was explained to me that before they can call in the police they have to ask permission, but they can only call the police once permission has been denied—and this is seen as reasonable. The way this is going to work is that if the Interim Waste Authority identifies a piece of land that someone owns and it wants to test it, it will phone the person up and say, "We would like to come on to your land and test your site," who says, "No, I don't want you on my land," and it says, "Well, then we're going to call the police and get a warrant," and it can walk in and test the land. That is what this legislation says.

It says in subsection 11(4) that any person who obstructs an inspector carrying out an inspection is guilty of an offence. We were told it probably would be a fine, perhaps up to $5,000. One would not go to jail. That will be good news to the member for Victoria-Haliburton. If one chains himself to a tree on the property or locks himself to the fence, there is a fine, but not jail.

I would say that the provisions of part I of this bill provide far-reaching powers to government-appointed inspectors from the waste authority. This legislation provides no rights to land owners who do not want to give access to their property. The inspectors are given sweeping powers, enhanced by inspection warrants and police backup, when required to come on to the property to test it against the owner's will. That is what part I of this legislation creates. That is what the NDP government in Ontario is creating: a waste authority with those kinds of powers.

The bill provides land owners with no right of refusal if an inspector wishes access to their land. If a land owner refuses entry, the inspector can obtain a warrant. If the land owner obstructs entry by an inspector who is armed with a warrant, he will be guilty of an offence. The land owner is powerless to prevent access to his property by a ministry inspector.

And they want this—this is just part I of a four-part bill—passed by Christmas. I do not believe the government knows what it is doing.

Any supporter of fundamental civil rights would find these measures not only draconian; they have far-reaching implications precedent-setting in their nature, given that government-appointed inspectors will be given legislative authority to do whatever is required to obtain access to private property for the purpose of inspection, for the purpose of waste management.

Imagine: The New Democratic Party in Ontario forms the government and the first thing it does is bring in a piece of legislation within one year which has the kinds of draconian and far-reaching implications that remove the rights of land owners and allow the use of force for the purpose of finding a dump.

Mr Miclash: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The member is talking about some very important information here and I think other members would like to be present for it. I do not believe we have a quorum in the House.

The Deputy Speaker: I would ask the table to advise me on that. Would you please advise me?

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Journals: A quorum is present.

The Deputy Speaker: A quorum is present.

Mrs Caplan: Part II, which states the criteria for the long-term site selection process, has some ambiguity I would like to point out, and I hope this will be clarified and fixed. It might just be an oversight, because we have had the commitment from the Minister of the Environment that the long-term site selection would be subject to a full Environmental Assessment Act process, yet in part II of this act the site selection process states it will be "consistent with the principles of." So one of the questions I have is what that means, "consistent with the principles of." And given the draconian nature of part I and part III, can we take comfort and be assured that the long-term site selection of the yet-unnamed sites will in fact be under the Environmental Assessment Act, which will require an assessment of different sites and their relationship to each other so that the best option can be found?

As I said before, part II does limit some of the options. I think it is important that we point out that this legislation precludes the option of incineration. This also precludes the option of shipping waste to any willing host community. The minister continues to limit options for waste disposal rather than giving the kind of technical and thoughtful consideration to all options. I point that out as a legitimate criticism.

In the time I have available, I would agree once more to having a full debate on all of the options. A thoughtful and a reasonable person would suggest it is not proper to allow pure ideology, pure doctrine, to limit the explorations of finding the very best option. The minister today has not presented any technical rationale for the absolute banning of incineration; neither has she given any technical analysis for prohibiting the shipment to Kirkland Lake. We have not had any technical analysis of why the Kirkland Lake proposal would be unacceptable from an environmental point of view. She said no to the environmental assessment, but she has not given us any information other than pure ideology. It seems to me that to make a decision that is based on ideology and limits options is not only irresponsible, it is irrational in 1991.

I point out that there are tremendous inconsistencies in this legislation as well. I have used the words "ideology" and "doctrinaire" to describe the approach of the minister, but I suggest respectfully that we have not seen even that consistently applied, because the minister has stated that there should not be the transportation of waste at the same time, in Ontario today, that Kingston is shipping its waste to Ottawa and many municipalities and many private businesses are shipping waste out of this country and across the border. So we have seen an inconsistent approach even to shipping of waste.

Hon Mr Hampton: Our contribution to free trade.

1730

Mrs Caplan: The Attorney General says this is his contribution to free trade. I do not find that humorous.

Interjection.

Mrs Caplan: My colleague the member for Kenora asks if the Attorney General knows what he is talking about, and I would have to say that the Attorney General does not. He has not been properly briefed. I do not think he knows what this legislation is, because if he did, I do not think he would support it. He certainly would not have supported it if he was in opposition, and now that he is in government, he has been muzzled. I do not think he really has been properly informed as to what this legislation is.

I suggest to the Attorney General and to others in this House that there are some very serious issues that this piece of legislation raises which have not been properly addressed. Under part IV of this act, which is packaged as amendments to the Environmental Protection Act—as I said before, some of them are seen as housekeeping but others are really quite significant—the minister repeals section 29, which gives the minister emergency powers, and then amends section 29, which gives over powers in large part to the director.

In pressing for this bill before Christmas, the minister has said that there will be dire consequences. The knowledge and information I have suggests that under the existing legislation, the Minister of the Environment has all the powers she needs to be able to act in an emergency. The fact that she suggests she must have this legislation by Christmas is simply not telling it as it really is. She does not have to have this in order to act. Section 29 of the Environmental Protection Act is just one of the many powers the minister already has so that if there is a true emergency, she can deal with it.

Section 29 is meant to deal with short-term solutions to waste disposal crises. However, the minister is giving legislative authority to a director to order a municipality to accept from, or ship waste to, another municipality in order to deal with that crisis. At the same time, she is not going to allow the transport of waste to be given any consideration by the Interim Waste Authority in its search for a long-term solution to the management of solid waste in the greater Toronto area. To me, that just does not make sense.

If she has within her emergency powers now the right to look at transportation of waste as a solution, why would she not allow the waste authority to explore that as an option if it is cheaper and more environmentally sound? One of the concerns I have about the approach taken by this minister is that she has precluded a number of options which may be better environmentally, more cost-effective and in the interests of the greater public good, and yet she has precluded those options.

There are a number of sections of this legislation which I think should be discussed. Subsection 13(2) also states that the agency—that is, the Interim Waste Authority—in determining required capacity for each landfill site, will use estimates provided by the minister. I suggest that section 13 really will undermine the independence and the expertise of the agency that is being established to determine what the long-term capacity need for the greater Toronto area is going to be.

I suggest that the waste authority, in doing its analysis of the service area to be served, will study the potential population growth and business development in the region to determine the capacity of the disposal area required for the next 20 years. While the government has attempted to distance itself from the process of site selection and determining capacity needs by the establishment of an independent authority to conduct the site selection, it has, by the same token, involved itself by dictating to the authority the capacity that will be required for each of the landfill sites. I think that is an inconsistency in the bill that may seem technical to some but is significant and important. If the minister is going to establish a waste authority, it has to have responsibility for gathering the data and looking at the capacity requirements and not just responding to the beck and call of the minister. She has to give this authority the responsibility to do the job; she has to give it the resources to do the job.

One of the concerns I think some of my constituents and certainly some of the members of Metropolitan Toronto council have is that this waste authority that will be following the orders and acting at the beck and call of the minister will be giving the bill to the municipalities that will have no say. They see this authority potentially as a buffer between them and the minister. They say, "Look, Mrs Grier, you own the garbage problem."

Mr Grandmaitre: You created it.

Mrs Caplan: The member for Ottawa East interjects that the Minister of the Environment created the problem. In fact, I agree with him that she did.

The councillors are concerned that this waste authority will create another problem because it will just be a buffer and it will be able to hand the bill to the municipalities rather than showing the kind of leadership and direction and developing the kind of expertise an authority will have to have over the next 20 years to be able to properly manage solid waste in the greater Toronto area.

I think the capacity issue is an important one because the capacity, as it will be dictated by the government, will be based on the ministry's best estimates of the effectiveness of its own 3R program over the next 20 years. This will require the Ministry of the Environment to prejudge the effectiveness of the forthcoming waste reduction regulations. I would say there is a lot of uncertainty about that.

I think it is going to be really important that the Minister of the Environment have an objective appraisal of what is going to be needed. Who could be more objective than an independent authority that has been established for that very purpose? If she gives them the power to go in and take rights away from land owners to test land and the power of expropriation, why would she not give them the power to collect the data and then stand accountable for the information so that they can properly judge capacity? Surely the ministry can give information as well, but it has to be up to the authority to plan for proper capacity.

It does not seem to me that is a reasonable approach. I suggest this situation unfortunately could be very similar to the situation the Minister of the Environment found herself in with the soft drink container issue. We had a situation where she stated her objective was a 30% refillable quota and she requested another agency—in that case it was the investigations and enforcement branch—to carry out her order.

Let me tell the members how good the Minister of the Environment's order was. It is now down to 7%. When there was failure of compliance, the minister stood back and said: "It's not my fault. It's the responsibility of the investigations and enforcement branch. I will tell them to keep at it." It is a very unrealistic, very unacceptable and, I would say, very disappointing approach.

In this particular case we are talking about the capacity requirement for long-term disposal sites and the minister could, by miscalculation, set unreasonable diversion targets. When these targets are not met and more waste is calculated as being required in the landfill, the waste authority will have to bear the responsibility. So why not allow the waste authority to judge what the capacity requirement is going to be and plan for it and get on with the job?

One of the questions I have to ask about section 16 of Bill 143 concerns intervenor funding. Is it because the government does not intend to designate the search for long-term landfill sites under the Environmental Assessment Act, or is it because the government does not plan on renewing the Intervenor Funding Project Act when it is sunsetted, that section 15 deals with intervenor funding?

I do not understand. The government has an intervenor funding act and it also has an Environmental Assessment Act. My question really relates to why it has section 16 in this bill, since intervenor funding is dealt with in another and, I would argue, more appropriate way in the intervenor funding act and the Environmental Assessment Act. Those are legitimate questions that should be responded to as this legislation is discussed more fully.

Part III I find, as I said, most offensive. This is the section where the minister gives herself the power to override requirements as outlined in the following pieces of legislation. Let me just list them for the members of the government caucus who are here. I know members of my caucus are very aware of what those legislative requirements are today and what this legislation overrides.

This legislation overrides the Environmental Protection Act, the Environmental Assessment Act, the Ontario Municipal Board Act, the Municipal Act, the Planning Act, the Regional Municipality of Durham Act, the Regional Municipality of Peel Act, the Regional Municipality of York Act and the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

All those pieces of legislation were put in place to allow for proper planning, evaluation, environmental assessment, environmental considerations and full and proper public hearings. All those pieces of legislation are trashed by this piece of legislation. Bill 143 trashes the protections in those pieces of legislation. It is there, it is clear. I know a lot of people do not believe that, but it is true.

The minister responsible for the greater Toronto area, who is also Minister of the Environment, the member for Lakeshore-Etobicoke, requires in section 17 the regional municipality of Durham to establish a waste management system which consists of at least one transfer station, and it goes on. It overrides every piece of legislation I listed.

There is no consideration given to what the project will cost the region. According to Durham, the transfer station would cost the region over $49 million in capital costs and $26 million in operating costs. It is estimated that this cost will add between $250 and $300 to each householder's municipal tax bill.

When I say this legislation overrides all those pieces of legislation, it also imposes tremendous cost burdens on the taxpayers in those municipalities that are affected directly by this legislation. That includes, very specifically, my constituents in the riding of Oriole.

The minister's order requires the regional municipality of Peel to extend the Britannia Road landfill site even though there is an agreement that the site would close. Even though there is a legal binding agreement, this legislation overrides that agreement and breaks faith with the people in that community.

It is very unlikely the long-term sites will be identified and approved before 1997. Therefore, Britannia will be forced to accept additional waste for five years longer than was originally agreed to, and Keele Valley will likely have to take wastes for three years longer than was anticipated.

Section 17 of part III orders regional municipalities to comply with the minister's order, even if in doing so it would require contravention of an agreement that is binding on the municipality or of the Planning Act. This section is included for the minister to be able to override a current agreement between the city of Mississauga and the region of Peel and an agreement between the city of Toronto and the town of Vaughan. Those agreements state under what conditions the region will accept waste and that upon the landfill reaching capacity the agreement will terminate.

Not only do these amendments override agreements pertaining to the greater Toronto area, but agreements such as these exist in other parts of the province as well. When I say this is a precedent-setting piece of legislation, I say to the people in Cobourg and Hamilton township, who have a similar agreement: "Beware. This is a precedent that is established and it can affect you." Once the precedent is established here, the next time it will be much easier, because they will be able to say, "There was a precedent established under Bill 143, so what's the problem?" I say to the people of Kingston and Ottawa: "You have an agreement very similar to the agreement between Peel and the region. Beware. This precedent could affect you in the future."

Sections 17 and 18 ensure that there will be no provision in any piece of legislation pertaining to the regions of Peel, York, Durham or Metropolitan Toronto which may restrict the region's ability to carry out a minister's order. That is the complete and absolute override of all the protections that are afforded to the people in those municipalities today, and it establishes a precedent I believe could affect every municipality and community across this province.

Under the NDP's plan to deal with the greater Toronto area garbage gap, there will be no opportunity for public input. There will be no environmental assessment or even hearings under the Environmental Protection Act. This is far-reaching legislation that provides no recourse for residents surrounding the relevant landfill sites, nor any recourse for regions or municipalities affected by the minister's orders.

The minister has only succeeded in alienating herself from people in those regions and from elected officials in choosing this kind of draconian action, and as I said earlier, now is the time for co-operation. Now is the time for a climate of working together to find solutions. What this piece of legislation does is make that kind of co-operation impossible.

By imposing her emergency powers, with no consultation and no consultative process, the minister will succeed in having Britannia and Keele Valley expanded. However, in the long term, she will have done immeasurable damage to herself, her own personal credibility and her reputation, to the reputation of the government and to the reputation of the Premier.

In the long term, the people of this province will not be well served. Expanding a landfill site with no environmental assessment and with no opportunity for public input will not be forgotten. It will not be forgotten by the residents in the particular area affected. It will not be forgotten by the elected municipal and regional officials. It will not be forgotten by those of us who stand witness to this plan being put in place by a government that once defended individual rights, that once defended community rights and that once defended and protected the interests of people who wanted to be heard.

In opposition the NDP was a defender of due process. I suggest that once the people of this province understand what is being perpetrated by this piece of legislation, they will come forward and protest and argue and vent their frustration because they are feeling deceived. It will go beyond disappointment. The minister and the Premier do this at their peril. The people of Oriole expect better of them. They want them to protect the environment. They want them to find the best solutions. They want them to protect and enhance people's rights, not take them away.

This will not be easily forgotten by my constituents or theirs, I say to the members of the NDP government caucus. Those who believed that an NDP government would make great strides towards environmental protection will be wounded and deeply disappointed and will not forget.

Unfortunately, not much time remains, but I would like to put on the record my disappointment that the Minister of the Environment has not been in this House to hear these debates. Because of that, I do not believe she will be able to adequately respond. I urge her to reconsider this shortsighted approach. I urge her to listen to what she is being told.

The Association of Municipalities of Ontario, the community of Kirkland Lake, elected representatives in Peel, Durham, York, Metropolitan Toronto and others around this province are saying that this legislation is inadequate in the extreme, premature at best, simplistic for sure, draconian in its approach, autocratic, bureaucratic, expensive and a terrible precedent. I ask the minister to split the parts of this bill so that they can be dealt with individually as separate pieces of legislation, because that would be appropriate.

I do not think anyone has an objection to the establishment of a waste authority, but let's call it what it is: a waste authority. Let's be able to discuss fully and properly what powers they should have and how, within those powers, people's rights can properly be protected. Let's discuss what is the actual capacity available in existing landfill sites and what the process should be for dealing with a gap should it occur.

Maybe a better option is incineration, and maybe a better option is to ship the garbage out for a short while rather than imposing lifts without an environmental assessment and without an environmental hearing. Let's consider those alternatives. Let's consider part IV of this bill as what it really is, amendments to the Environmental Protection Act, and let's take that opportunity to explain to the people of this province what the Environmental Protection Act is all about, because by including those amendments in this piece of legislation we miss that opportunity to give the people of this province the information they need.

There are some, like my colleague the member for Essex South, who share my concern that this legislation and the speed with which the government is trying to ram it through this House are an attempt to make sure that the people of this province do not know what is going on, do not know what it has planned and do not know the implications for them. The very title of this bill suggests that this is about the greater Toronto area. It is not. This precedent-setting piece of legislation is of concern and of interest to people and communities right across this province, and they deserve to have their say.

The greater Toronto area has almost four million people, four million out of 9.5 million people. People of my riding are part of those four million people. Forty-four per cent of the population of this province lives in the greater Toronto area. They are affected directly by this piece of legislation. Their taxes are going to go up because of this piece of legislation. Their environmental protection may not be enhanced because of this legislation. Their options are going to be limited and their rights are being taken away by this piece of legislation.

I believe this is a very sad day. This is a very sad day because the people of my riding are just starting to realize that not only was the Agenda for People shredded and trashed, but so were the principles that the Minister of the Environment stood for on the day she tabled this legislation and so were the principles of rights for the individual, rights for the community, due process, participation. They were trashed on the day that this piece of legislation was tabled in this Legislature.

I would say to the Minister of the Environment that I will not remain silent and allow her to do this unchallenged.

The House adjourned at 1800.
